H. A. Hover, president of the Montana Ranches Company, at Helena, has a project to erect a $100,000 theater in that city if local capital can be enlisted. Tentative site has been selected. It will be used for theatrical attractions and high class moving pictures.

Joseph Beaubien has opened a new picture house, the Scenic, at East Helena.

A. J. Kingman has sold the Gem, at Billings, to Lewis Dunbar, who has been operator at that house.

Improvements made to the Gem at Bozeman, costing $3,000, will make it a modern photoplay house.

The Bison theater, at Malta, which was closed for several weeks, has been reopened.

ADVENTUROUS SYDNEY COHEN.

Special to Moving Picture World from Hawaii News Service.

SYDNEY S. COHEN, special representative of the Gaumont Company, recently was at Honolulu, bound for the far East. That was the fourth time he had circled the globe within a year. Cohan was a victim of the Emden's raid in Oriental waters and after leaving Honolulu he again become connected with the German hawk, this time, however, as a photographer of her finish on the rocks of Cocos Island.

After leaving Honolulu last November Cohen proceeded to China, and took pictures round Tsingtau. He then went through the Suez Canal and accompanied New Zealand and Australian troops to the front in France, seeing the first advance of the Allies fleet in the bombardment of the Dardanelles. His company has made many thousand feet of films too gruesome for public exhibition, but of historical and military value.

NO FUN FILMING FIERY PIT.

Taking moving pictures of the lava lake at Pelee's volcano will be no easy task. J. F. Porter, one of a party of Harvard men who are making observations, tried a cable over the burning lake, but it snapped and he narrowly escaped death and much of the apparatus was lost.

IN ILLINOIS.

A. A. Kellerstrass, one of the owners of the Colonial Theater building at Rock Island, has acquired an interest in the show and is taking an active part in its management.

Manager Yaeger has opened the Lyric at Morrison, replacing the theater which was burned New Year's night. The structure is of concrete and seats 400. The interior is finished in old Moorish design.

Roy Mogle and Roy Lattig of Freeport are reported to be contemplating opening a show at Stockton.

WITH ILLINOIS MANAGERS.

Mrs. Joseph Quinn, wife of Manager Joseph Quinn of the Majestic at Rock Island, was hostess at a Saturday morning show of "Wildflower" to school children from all over the city. Taylorville was filmed for the Elk's theater. The Apollo at Peoria linked the Paramount travelogs with local interests by notifying the Association of Commerce that it could get some pointers for South American trade by seeing these films.

The M. W. A. film, "The Man Who Came Back," was added to the regular program of the Yale at Carbondale. It was lectured by the national lecturer of the order. A benefit was given at the Opera House picture show in Collinsville for John Sperandeo, who lost both hands in an accident. The Majestic at Belvidere had a benefit for the Camp Fire Girls. The Colonial airdome at Taylor Springs has just started "Lucille Love." Benefits for local ball teams were given by the Grand Opera house at Aurora and the Batavia at Batavia. At the former Ted Sullivan had the Giants-Sox world tour films. Local pictures have been popular. Among the houses promoting this kind of pictures was the Grand at Atlanta, and the Lyric at Sycamore, which showed "The Romance of Sycamore." The Illinois at Chicago Heights had some local current events made by H. A. Birch, formerly of the Universal and Essanay companies. This house will soon show another local story, a voting contest being conducted to select the actors.

Manager Kuchen of the Idylhour at Canton gave four of the Renfax musical pictures in one night. The Maywood at Maywood has a new policy, eliminating vaudeville except on Saturday and Sundays. The Star at Barry will run only three days a week this summer. "A Fool There Was" was a repeater for the Main theater at Carmi. The Lyric at Gibson City accepts the Chicago censorship.

For Wholesome Pictures

League for Wholesome Pictures Commended by Judge Willis Brown in an Evanston Interview—Local Associations to Patronize Good Programs—Plan for Federal Censorship of Scripts—Censorship Un-American.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PLANS for a bill to be introduced in Congress which will censor scenarios were mentioned in an interview at Evanston, Ill., with Judge Willis Brown of Salt Lake City, Utah, who has been instrumental in having produced several boy-life films. Among other things he said:

"In the matter of censorship and this so-called cutting out, I rather think it misses the mark. If the purpose of the story is to excite the passion for the sake of some one or more definite punches, then it is not a question of censorship of certain acts but of elimination. Elimination properly should come before the picture is produced, not after.

"I am the author of a measure which will be introduced in Congress, which censors, if you so call it, the scenarios. A federal board, with deputy boards in various cities or sections of the country, will receive manuscripts from those desiring to have film productions made of the stories contained therein. The author has protection and also permission to sell his scenario to any producing concern. In this manner a film may be produced in the same manner in which a book is published, and the public protected. If any manufacturer of films should change the story and weave into it the undesirable, then present laws are adequate to punish such a firm."

It was pointed out to Judge Brown that he had been instrumental in having films manufactured, and he was asked whether or not these films were censored.

"How can they be censored? To censor a film, the story of which I furnished, or, as in the case of the films in which I am interested, true life stories, they are censorless, and to censor the films is but censoring me. You might ask if my lectures are censored before I am permitted to deliver them. Of course, when there is an ordinance requiring that every film production must have a license before exhibition, no matter what requirements must be met, and in the case of a censor board, the unquestionably clean and the unclean must go through the same process. Even the film, "The Star of Bethelhem," strictly religious and of most wonderful sweetness, must be censored.

"You can see how very ridiculous this is. The fact of the matter is censorship is un-American and unfair. It gives no protection to the public and I have discovered, is controlled largely by whims.

"The overstress that must be put in every situation in order to get a punch, the absolutely silly love making, the villain, who must always depict the worst of human passions, betrayals and treachery, in order to make the virtuous shine the more, seem all too real to the younger mind and all too unreal to the adult, while life as it is, just normal life, has in it the most mystery, the most tragedy and the unfolding of stories which, having no great punch, of a murder or a domestic sin, does develop character and does bring retribution to those who violate naural laws. Sin brings punishment always and virtue has its reward. The scenario writer and the film producer have concluded that they must needs go into partnership with Providence to rush things along a little, and in thus doing they have violated every phsycological and every life law. More and more we are disgusted with unreality, more so than with some vicious murder portayed."

He was asked how he would organize the "constructive method" of censorship.

"I understand that there is a movement in several cities called 'The League for Wholesome Moving Pictures.' This seems to me a good solution. In Pawtucket, R. I., the largest moving picture theater in the city is conducted by the men's class of the First Congregational Church. The pastor of the church is the active manager of the theater. Is there any question in your mind of the character of the pictures being shown in this house?

"An 'Evanston League for Wholesome Moving Pictures,' pledged to patronize a place showing wholesome films, rather than pledged not to attend a theater showing questionable films, solves the problem."

Miss Maxine Swan of Pittsfield was eight years old recently. The birthday party was arranged by her thoughtful father, Burr Swan, of the Knights of Pythias Opera house. The film, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," was shown to the guests, reached by the broadside invitation in the local paper. Five gross balloons were souvenirs.

RELIGION AND PASTIMES.

The coming of municipally owned theaters was predicted by Rev. E. D. Ellenwood in a sermon on "Purification of Popular Pastimes" at the Universalist church in Elgin. He regretted the survival of the Puritanic ideals that would summarily dismiss with a fiat of religion an institution so firmly fixed in the affections and in the normal needs of the people. "The theater is our most democratic means of education," he said.

FILMS SHOWN IN SPRINGFIELD ARE WHOLESOME.

Most of the Springfield theaters are showing films to which no exception can be taken, says Mrs. John H. Caldwell, chairman of the Motion Picture Censorship committee of the school council. However, she finds some that are not good for children.

ILLINOIS BRIEF NOTES.

Some Facts of Censoring

Seattle Argus's Editor Makes Pertinent Reflections on Censoring of Pictures—Shows How Censoring of Film Is Partial and What Would Come If Idea Were Logically Applied—No Need of It—Graft.

Special to Moving Picture World from Northwest News Service.

IN my opinion the principle of censorship is all wrong," says the editor of the Seattle Argus. "If carried to its logical conclusion the United States will no longer be a free country. As an illustration, I picked up recently a copy of the Star. On the front page were three articles which in my judgment would do more harm than any moving picture which I have ever seen, and I have seen some which would not pass any board of censorship, and which no reputable manager would have the nerve to produce. One can go to book stores and purchase stories which are vicious from every standpoint.

"And if we are to censor motion pictures, against what are we to rule? A picture was turned down by the censors of Ohio because it handled the labor problem in such a manner that it was likely to cause class hatred and thus do harm. Do you want such a law as that? Surely where it exists one can no longer say with candor 'This is a free country.' Are we to censor only in matters pertaining to sex? Are we to expurge pictures which are likely to give the young wrong ideas of life? If so, should we not cut out pictures wherein young men and women suddenly become rich by some unheard of process?

"Without censorship the motion picture men will give the public exactly what it is willing to pay for. And the theater which is willing to put on a picture which the young should not see will suffer. The police will have exactly the same power that they have at present. They can suppress anything indecent or immoral. Further than that censorship should not go. But if we have legalized censorship it will go further than that—much further. The Ohio case mentioned above is evidence of that.

"I have yet to refer to one other danger of censorship—the danger of graft. Any grafter who could manage to get a position on a legalized board of censorship, which was the 'court of last appeal,' would have soft picking."

Recensoring developed as an issue in Seattle. Dr. Sarah Kendall, chairman of the local board of censors, declared she and her associates had more trouble with films that already had been passed by the national board than with "wild-cat" pictures. The exhibitors objected to recensoring. The city council suggested that both the local board and the showman make their recommendations in writing and a new ordinance would be drafted.

HEAP BIG POW-WOW.

The Social Service boards in the northwest cities—Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane, Portland, Bellingham and Everett—will get together on the motion picture question. The movement originated with Commissioner A. V. Mills, of Tacoma. It was decided to call a meeting of the social service workers in all the cities. Exchange men and exhibitors will be present, although they will not be given special invitations.

GRADUALLY FINDING OUT THE PICTURES.

"The third method of spreading the gospel," said Mrs. C. W. Hays, of Portland, discussing home missions before the Woman's North Pacific Presbyterian Board of Missions at Tacoma, "is just coming into vogue. It is by means of moving pictures; people of all languages who cannot understand English or English writing being able to understand the picture stories, which all know in their native version of the Bible."

BROKE SPEED LAW TO DELIVER FILM.

A picture caused the arrest of J. R. Cummock, manager of the Progressive Moving Picture Company of Seattle. He was taking it to the Liberty, at Tacoma, in an auto. A blowout kept him from reaching the Liberty by show-starting time. His efforts to hurry the film resulted in his arrest for speeding.

WASHINGTON STATE ITEMS.

A flashlight motion picture of the grand march led by the Mayor, a new march and a special song were some of the features announced for the annual ball of the motion picture operators of Seattle at the Hippodrome June 1.

Five camera men were on the job at the big Celilo Canal opening celebration. Clarence Crews, of the Dime, at Walla Walla, featured the films because of their local interest.

The American Lake rural school near Tacoma, declared by the United States Department of Education to be one of the most up-to-date in the United States has a machine and gives a show every Friday night.

S. L. Matson has sold his show at Malden to a Mr. Mitchell of Ritzville.

Four, five and six-reel pictures is the policy of the new Rose theater at Centralia. This house is now under the management of the L. & M. Amusement Company, of Seattle, with W. C. Meyers, formerly of Chicago, in charge.

George H. Retzer, who bought the Arcade, at Walla Walla, which has been operated by Clarence Crews, will not attempt to enter the vaudeville field. Pictures will be shown at never more than 10 cents. The house was redecorated and at the reopening all children were admitted free.

E. M. Rahl, of Sumas, has opened another show in the Griffin Hall, at Deming.

"Hypocrites" received plenty of publicity in Tacoma because complaints had been filed with the commissioner of public safety before its arrival. Acting Police Captain M. D. Guy reviewed the film at the Liberty and saw no ground for prudish restraint.

Speculating on the future of the moving pictures is one of the favorite indoor sports of Northwestern editors. The Town Crier at Seattle makes two guesses:

"First: That the movies will continue to become more insipid, plotless and suggestive, with more frequent reactions of fluffy, maudlin, school girl sentiment, until the triangle poser and the hearts-drama to the dimensions of a passing fad.

"Second: That genius, science and common sense will come to the rescue of moving pictures and make of them a recreation truly worthy as an excuse for uncooked evening meals and neglected office work."

OTHER CANADIAN NOTES.

The Exchange men of Winnipeg, Man., have got together to discuss several of the contingencies which they will shortly have to meet. They have arranged to replace the projection machine which the Board of Censors is using, and which is in terrible condition.

The Provincial Government of Manitoba is shortly to impose a license fee of $250 for the privilege of operating an exchange in that province.

There is also under consideration in Winnipeg a theater tax to be regulated by the seating capacity of the house. Definite details of this matter have not been agreed upon as yet.

A report from Winnipeg claims that business conditions in that city have not changed much, which means that trade is not over good.

The Colonial theater, Winnipeg, Man., recently attempted a five-cent policy, but has returned to its old policy of ten-cent admission fee, and two acts of vaudeville as added attractions.

The Victoria, Winnipeg, Man., has been renovated and reopened under the name of the National.

THE WEDDING IN "LOUISVILLE LOU" PICTURE.

The film "Louisville Lou," made through the efforts of the Louisville Commercial Club, in an effort to boost Louisville, will be shown shortly at the Majestic, and later in practically every theater in the city. The films turned out better than was at first predicted, and are expected to draw a big crowd. Jessie Stinson, of this city, played her part of "Lou" very well. A wedding between Miss Stinson and Walter Jones, "Dan," was staged at St. Paul's Church. Myrtle Younger, Allene Hughes and Letitia Wilkes were the bridesmaids. Margaret Casperson and Virginia Hagan were the flower girls. A. S. Piers served as the clergyman. The bridal party was assaulted with old shoes, rice and other junk by a crowd of onlookers as they left the church to take the automobile honeymoon trip, which ended as soon as the machine got out of range of the camera. A good deal of film was used in showing manufacturing plants and scenes in the retail district of the city.

LOUISVILLE BRIEF NOTES.

The Owl Feature Film Company, of Louisville, recently sold a complete outfit consisting of machine, booth, chairs, etc., to the Grimes Amusement Company, of Marengo, Ind., which is about to establish a new picture house. Another equipment was sold to the Majic Amusement Company, of Wise, Va.

The S. & P. Film & Supply Company, of Louisville, has booked a number of airdomes and new theaters opening throughout Southern Indiana and Kentucky during the past few weeks.

Gus Muller, of the Fox Film Corporation's Cincinnati office, was recently in Louisville calling on some of the local exhibitors who use the Fox features.

The Parkland theater has been sold by L. J. Dittmar to Charles Sebree, of Carrollton, Ky. This theater was started about a year ago by a company headed by ex-Gov. M. H. Thatcher, of Panama, who afterward sold out to Mr. Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company.

The Crescent Airdome, in Crescent Hill, a suburb of Louisville, has been taken over by the Sanders Amusement Company, a new concern which was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $4,000. Officers and incorporators of the company are Putnam Sanders, Francis A. Sanders, of Louisville, and Cora B. Sanders, of Lebanon, Ky. The airdome was operated by Mrs. Whiteside last season.

Judge Allen Kinney and L. J. Dittmar have taken over the Woodland airdome, at Preston and Kentucky streets, which was operated by Alf Oldham last season, the latter now being in charge of a large moving picture theater in St. Louis. The new management has arranged to show eight reels of General film daily and will show Chaplin every night in addition to the Federal films. In addition to the moving pictures a number of other attractions have been arranged for at the park, including free dancing in a hall 150x75 feet, a ladies' military band, high divers, etc. Admission will be charged to the park only at popular prices.

The Woodland Airdome, the West End Colonels and the Westonian Airdome are among the local airdomes which have opened for the summer season. The Crescent airdome will start in a few days. New managements are in charge of three out of the four concerns. G. A. Groves, of the Preston theater, will move his patrons over to the open air house inside of the next week or ten days. Cool nights have held back the airdome patronage to some extent.

J. J. Griswold, who had charge of filming the "Louisville Lou" picture, recently made 60 feet of film for L. J. Dittmar, of the Majestic.

Derby Week in Louisville

Local Exhibitors Have Big Business During Famous Kentucky Race Week—Great Derby Proved Exciting Event—Many Prominent Picture Folk Present—New York Film Company Took Many Feet of Horses and Crowds.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A NEW YORK film corporation had a battery of camera men in Louisville on Saturday, May 8, to film the running of the forty-first Kentucky Derby, which was won by that sterling three-year-old filly "Regret." The winning of the race amounted to an epoch in the racing game in Kentucky, as it is the first time during forty-one years that a filly ever annexed the honor and the rich stake, amounting to about $11,000. The horse was owned by H. P. Whitney, of New York, and was ridden by the famous American jockey, Joe Notter, who was riding in Europe at the outbreak of the war. The first four horses, out of a field of sixteen, were Eastern owned thoroughbreds, which rather placed a damper on the spirits of the Kentucky owners. The World Film Corporation had paid for the exclusive rights to take pictures of the Derby and various local and other camera men were disappointed, as it was absolutely impossible to take any moving pictures. Between 3,000 and 4,000 feet of film were taken, which included the Derby, the principal stake races, the largest crowd ever seen on a Kentucky track, scenes in the crowded betting shed, and among the society folk in the big Club House, as well as pictures of the jockey, owner, the winner, and other entrants in the big stake. When completed the film will probably be about one to two reels long, and will be shown throughout the country. A large number of moving picture men were present at the track. This list included a special party composed of Henry M. Ziegler, A. Paul Keith, E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdock and William Mitchell. Others present were Fred Sheldon, of the Mutual Film Corporation; T. R. Hanks, secretary of the National Printing Company of Chicago, manufacturers of posters; F. Rodgers of the Alco Feature Film Company's Knoxville office; George C. Taylor, of the Indianapolis office of the George Kleine concern, and Harry Greenway, formerly of Kleine's Chicago office, who is now connected with the S. & P. Film Company. The weather was perfect and the day was undoubtedly the greatest of its kind in Kentucky history.

So many visitors were in Louisville for the Derby that it was practically impossible to get hotel accommodations except through reservations made a week or ten days in advance. T. R. Hanks of Chicago was unable to get into any of the hotels, but was taken care of by some of the local moving picture men. Ernest Carpenter, of the firm of Carpenter & Johnson, camera men, had expected to make a special Derby picture for the Louisville Convention & Publicity League, but was not permitted to get on the track with his camera, although the Publicity League wired to New York asking the World Film Corporation for permission to take special pictures for publicity use in boosting the city. The big crowd filled the moving picture theaters and other places of amusement to overflowing on Friday and Saturday nights, and the local exhibitors had more business than could be handled.

COLUMBIA THEATER PASSES OUT.

The Columbia theater of Louisville, formerly the Bijou, and one of the earliest moving picture houses in the city, has passed out of existence. About two months ago a fire started in the operating room, but was put out without any great amount of damage. A few nights ago fire again broke out in the basement and it was necessary to cut a portion of the flooring away in order to reach the blaze. The house was so situated that it was impossible to have rear or side exits, and for some time past it has been a matter of conjecture as to just when the city authorities would order the house closed. That time has come and under orders from the city authorities the theater has been closed and will never open again. The house did not come under the building code or regulations covering theaters and should have been closed some time ago. Fred Sheldon, who was one of those interested in the theater, said that the action taken by the city relieved the management from any difficulty concerning the lease, and that he was glad to get the "white elephant" off of his hands.

PHOTOPLAY CLUB IN LOUISVILLE.

Students in the class of photoplay writing at the Louisville Y. M. C. A. school have organized the Y. M. C. A. Photoplay club. The purpose of the organization will be to promote photoplay writing in Louisville. A committee composed of C. Edward Krider, Jr., Louis Hebel, Mrs. Carrie Appel and J. H. Monaghan has been appointed to draft a constitution and set of by-laws. All scenario writers of Louisville and vicinity are eligible to membership in the organization, any who so desire may become members by sending their names to the educational secretary of the organization. J. H. Monaghan is one of the instructors in the Y. M. C. A. photoplay classes and was the leader in the local movement whereby the classes were established.

HONAKER LUMBER CO. BUYS PICTURE OUTFIT.

The Honaker Lumber Company, of Honaker, Va., recently had a representative in Louisville who purchased a moving picture machine and other equipment with which to start a moving picture theater for the employes of the big lumber camp. A number of the coal mining and lumbering concerns in Eastern Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia and Tennessee have adopted the policy of operating special moving picture shows for their employes' benefit. The employers report that this movement has made the workers more contented and it is easier to keep them in isolated districts than it was previous to the starting of the "movies," which place the most isolated districts close in touch with the doings in the centers of civilization.

EFFECTIVE LOBBY DISPLAYS.

J. Johnson Mussellman, publicity agent for the Kinney & Dittmar interests in Louisville, is giving especial attention to lobby displays, and is making an effort to get away from ordinary poster advertising. Each week a special lobby scene is arranged which represents some scene taken from the pictures on exhibit at the time. Cut outs and special painted backgrounds are used. At the Orpheum and Star theaters the lobbies were filled with limbs of trees which had been covered with pink paper flowers made of tissue paper. The scene represented spring and was arranged especially for Derby day. "Billy Sunday" has been arranged for at the Star, and this film is expected to take well. A special picture showing the Lusitania leaving her dock on the final trip, and showing scenes in three of the decks, has been shown at the Star theater. Mr. Mussellman has secured Kentucky rights to the picture and has booked it with the Clifton, Norman, Switow theaters and other local houses already.

Express Charges on Films

Carriers Costs of Service Greater Than Charges—Ask Interstate Commerce Commission to Permit an Increase—Private Company Will Attempt to Solve Problem Over Short Hauls—Film Service by Automobile Between Washington and Baltimore.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Interstate Commerce Commission has announced that it will hold a hearing in this city on May 26 in the matter of express rates, practices, accounts and revenues. The Adams, American, Southern and Wells Fargo Express Companies recently petitioned the Commission for a rehearing of the "express rate case," with a view to securing a modification of the rates now in operation which, during the ten months following February 1, 1914, they allege have caused a deficit of nearly three million dollars. The companies say, in petition for a reopening of that case, that this deficit exists despite the fact that their business has substantially increased, particularly in view of the fact that they have taken over the business formerly conducted by the United States Express Company, but the gross revenues have not been, nor will they be, sufficient to enable them to continue their present standard of service. They further claim that to reduce the standard of service would work injury to the shipping public and therefore ask for a change in the present rate structure which will enable them to secure additional revenue.

This petition brings very forcibly into the limelight the proposed scheme of Frank Durkee, who operates a number of theaters in Baltimore, to operate an intercity delivery system for the transportation of motion picture films. In co-operation with a garage operator of his own city he plans to send out from Baltimore each morning at one o'clock, an automobile load of films collected from the various film exchanges for delivery at the Washington offices. The automobile would return, leaving Washington at about four o'clock, similarly laden. It is stated that a number of contracts have already been entered into, and at rates that are considerably lower than those now in effect as charged by the express companies. Aside from the saving in the cost of transportation, the service contemplates a more prompt delivery and should prove more efficient catering, as it will, exclusively to one line of business.

SUIT OVER RIGHT TO SHOW A FILM IN WASHINGTON.

A writ of attachment before judgment was last week served by the marshall's office upon the four-reel feature, "A Sister to Carmen," Helen Gardner, starring, which had been in the possession of J. D. Reuwer, who is said to have formerly operated the Fairfax theater, in Culpepper, Va. The writ was served on behalf of the Broadway Film Company, Inc., of New York, which claimed that an agreement had been entered into between it and Reuwer on December 16, 1914, whereby the latter had agreed to purchase the feature for $180, and it was next day sent to him in Virginia. It was stipulated that he should have exhibition rights only for the states of Virginia and South Carolina.

The Broadway Film Company allege that they have requested Reuwer to make payment for the films, which he has not done, and also that, in showing this feature in Washington he has violated the agreement, infringed upon their rights and has thus caused them additional damage. When it was ascertained that he was about to remove the property from the District of Columbia so as to defeat just judgment against him, the marshal was appealed to and the writ served. It is further alleged that Reuwer endeavored to negotiate a sale of the feature to parties other than the Broadway Film Company. The films are now in the possession of the authorities who will retain them subject to a settlement of the case, failing of which they will be offered for sale. Lucas P. Loving and Lunsford M. Hamner are the attorneys for the film corporation.

W. H. IRVINE TO MANAGE WURLITZER OFFICE.

William H. Irvine, formerly manager of the local branch of the World Special Film Corporation, and recently engaged in the independent purchase and booking of films, has accepted the position of manager of the Washington branch of the Wurlitzer Theater Orchestras establishment, at 618 Twelfth street, Northwest.

LOWER SUMMER PRICES AT PRINCESS.

The Princess Theater has reduced its admission price to five cents for all shows except those on Sunday and Wednesday evenings, when the usual admission of ten cents will be made. This schedule of prices will remain in effect only during the summer months, for Manager Joseph Morgan announces that he will again take up his program of big features after the closing of the airdome season. His was the first and only house in the Northeast section to demand an admission price of ten cents, and during the several months it was in effect it proved not only a possibility but a success. Nor has he the largest house in his section. An effort will be made to get all of the uptown houses to go to ten cents later in the year.

SCREEN CLUB DINNER COMING.

Harry Crandall, Joseph Morgan and Maurice Davis have been appointed as a committee to arrange for one of the old-time Screen Club affairs which is to take the shape of a banquet at Castelli's, Thursday evening, May 27, at 10.30 p. m. The Screen Club membership comprises exhibitors, theatre and exchange managers, assistant managers of theaters and exchanges, and traveling representatives. Their affairs of a year ago were the talk of filmdom and an effort is to be made to exceed all previous successes. It is planned to have a number of interesting talks on subjects at present in the limelight which have a bearing on the film business, and with this in view a number of subjects are to be assigned to the various members with the request that they prepare papers thereon. There are to be a number of heart-to-heart talks, but these will be livened up somewhat by a few novelty stunts that will prove great surprises. The committee declines to announce its program prior to the eventful night, merely warning all, "Don't miss it."

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

Among the visitors last week were Messrs. Hodgkinson and Pawley of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who made their headquarters at the local branch of that company. Mr. Hodgkinson was accompanied by Mrs. Hodgkinson, while with Mr. Pawley was his wife and their two children.

A corporation is being formed in this city which contemplates the production of "after-pieces," which were so popular on the legitimate stage some years ago. These will all be negro comedies and will be made by colored people with Samuel Dudley as the leading comedian. For this purpose, it is said, a studio in Washington will be secured and work will be begun at an early date.

The World Special Film Corporation announces the transfer of W. L. Pavloski, formerly traveling representative with headquarters in this city, to the Atlanta branch, where he will serve in a similar capacity, and of R. S. Schraeder, from Atlanta to Washington, where he will take up the work formerly performed by Mr. Pavloski.

Listen to What George Ade Says of "The Slim Princess"

Hazelden Farm Brook, Indiana

Mr. GEORGE K. SPOOR, President
Essanay Film Manufacturing Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

My dear Mr. Spoor:-

A few years ago I visited the Turkish and Egyptian regions which stand undecided between Europe and Asia. At that time every young woman in America was trying to compress herself into a slender figure but I learned that in the Mohammedan Orient the fat and roly-poly maiden was still the acknowledged type of beauty.

I wondered if some slender Turkish young thing who was not only impossible but downright hideous, according to the standards of her own country, might not escape to the new world and find herself transformed into a raging success.

In order to prove that female loveliness is whatever we choose to admire, I wrote a story for the SATURDAY EVENING POST and called it THE SLIM PRINCESS. Later I amplified the story and put it into a little book published by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. Then Henry Blossom made the book into a play, with music by Leslie Stuart, and Elsie Janis starred in the play for two seasons.

To prove the abounding vitality of the Princess I must say that she seems livelier than ever in the pictures just made by the Essanay Company. I like Mr. Blossom's photo-play and I like Ruth Stonehouse as Kalora and I doubt if your company has ever turned out cleaner and truer specimens of photography.

I am writing to thank you for letting me see the pictures and to thank you for having such dandy pictures for me to see.

Sincerely,

George Ade

It stated his total indebtedness was $420,000 and his assets were $917,000. Judge Orr granted the petition.

PITTSBURGH BRIEFS.

Messrs. Truby & Harland have leased and taken charge of the Majestic theater in New Castle, Pa. The new management is contemplating extensive repairs and remodeling, and is determined to give excellent service in every respect. Under this policy it should meet with success.

W. H. Austraw has purchased the Mullen theater in Vandergrift, Pa., and will take charge on Friday, May 14. The theater will be refinished inside and out and many improvements added. The first thing he will do will be to select a new name for it and all his patrons will have a chance to win a handsome prize. Mr. Austraw was in Pittsburgh the first of this week looking over the business and selecting the pictures for his opening days.

Because of the record breaking business which "Cabiria," brought to the new Miles theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, during the first week of May, and due to the many requests, the management has decided to run this picture the second week. The first week this picture was shown here, every performance the house was packed to the limit and business with the second week showing is expected to be equally as good.

David Mintz, of the Bijou Dream theater at 6021 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has installed a Wurlitzer orchestra piano, style "17." Mr. Mintz also has a Wurlitzer Piano in his Evaline theater at 5150 Penn avenue.

John H. Evans has leased the Brockwayville theater at Brockwayville, Pa., from W. H. McCullough, and took charge of the house last week. This theater has a capacity of 500 and runs feature films.

Mr. Jack, of Bradford, Pa., has purchased a controlling interest in the Victoria theatre, Erie, Pa., and is remodeling and improving the house considerably. A new organ will be also installed.

Plans have been approved for the installation of a $10,000 pipe organ in the Columbia theater, Erie, Pa., by proprietors, Messrs. Potters and Burgess.

Henry W. Gauding, proprietor of the Lincoln theater, Mount Washington, Pittsburgh, Pa., paid a touching tribute to the memory of John Bunny. A slide with mourning border was flashed with the inscription, "In Memory of John Bunny, Vitagraph, Died Monday, April 26, 1915."

The Verdi theater in Wylie avenue, Pittsburgh, has been taken over by Sam Palermo. After extensive repairs the house will reopen.

D. Leo Dennison, formerly manager of George Klein's Pittsburgh office, has accepted a position as manager of the special feature department of the Paramount company. Mr. Dennison assumed his new duties May 10.

Plans are being prepared for the enlargement of the Orpheum in Butler, Pa. The new improvements include an entire new front, and the enlargement of the auditorium to a seating capacity of 800.

Mr. Boyer, who conducts houses in Chambersburg, Pa., Hanover, Pa., Hagerstown, Md., and Martinsburg, W. Va., has decided to discontinue vaudeville in the Martinsburg and Chambersburg houses and run pictures. Paramount and Metro pictures will be used in both houses, using each release for two days.

Board Walk Shows Open

Atlantic City's New Sunday Opening Law Definitely Legalizes Sabbath Picture Shows—Right Has Long Been Questioned and Police Have Not Known How to Act—Vaudeville and Theater Interests Opposed Bill.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

OFFICIAL sanction was recently given to Director of Public Safety, of Atlantic City, N. J., by passing, upon second reading, of a bill proposing to legalize the exhibition of moving pictures and musical concerts on Sundays. It has long been a much disputed question at the seashore resort as to whether pictures could be legally displayed on the Sabbath. Many times proprietors would open their establishments only to have the police close them and other times they would be allowed to remain open without any molestation whatsoever. Now, that the bill legalizing the exhibition of pictures on Sunday has been made a law, the management of the various moving picture theaters can prepare their weekly bookings with absolute security and are guaranteed immunity from any source of disturbance on the question of Sunday shows. Counsel for vaudeville and other theater-owners who have been waging an active fight against the passage of the bill now declare that the new act is unconstitutional and that they will resort to further litigation in order to have the bill declared invalid. Mr. Bartlett's new Sunday policy prohibits the opening of any theaters with the one exception of those exhibiting motion pictures.

HARRISBURG POLICE REQUEST NO WAR PICTURES.

Managers of moving picture theaters in Harrisburg were recently requested to refrain from the showing of any pictures dealing in any manner, shape or form with the present European war by Joseph P. Thompson, captain of police. Since the sinking of the Lusitania, according to Captain Thompson, feeling on both sides has been running very high and he deemed it unwise to take a chance of fanning the smouldering feeling into action by the showing of war pictures. All of the proprietors of moving picture establishments are in accord with his sentiments and have agreed to comply with the request to the letter.

Mr. Thompson was quoted as saying that while the law really gave him no authority to prohibit the display of any such pictures he felt justified in asking that they be discontinued.

SHUBERTS GET THE SAVOY AT ATLANTIC CITY.

A last minute notice was recently received that the Savoy Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., which had been completely equipped for the exhibition of moving pictures under the management of Herbert J. Elliott, has been rented, through John Cort, to the Shuberts, who have long been desirous of obtaining a beach front theater. The price paid for the rental of the theater is said to be enormous, neighboring around the $15,000 mark, this being a very large price, considering the fact that there will be no vaudeville or play houses open on Sundays, according to the new bill recently passed.

LEAGUE'S EXCURSION TO ATLANTIC CITY.

At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia branch of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, July 18 was set as the date for an excursion to Atlantic City. This new venture has created a great amount of enthusiasm among the members of the league and it is expected that a record-breaking number will be aboard the train when it pulls out from the train-shed in Camden. There are no limits to the possibilities for enjoyment to be had at this favorite seashore resort and the trip affords an opportunity for a wonderful day of fun and healthful exercise for an exceedingly low expense. Assurances of attendance have already been received from over twenty members.

TRENTON'S STATE STREET THEATER BEING IMPROVED.

O. D. Wilkinson and Milton Hirshfield, owner and lessee of the State Street Theater, Trenton, N. J., are considering plans for the improvement of the exterior of the playhouse. The work of remodeling is expected to start within the next several weeks.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

Mr. Crozier, manager of the Lafayette Theater, 2914 Kensington avenue, has resigned in favor of Milton Rogasner, former manager of the Bellevue, 2212 North Front street. The situation left vacant at the Bellevue by the withdrawal of Mr. Rogasner has been accepted by B. Seligman.

Two representatives of the Lincoln Highway Commission, who were recent visitors in Gettysburg, arranged with local business men for the filming of a number of points of interest on the battlefield and in the town and the pictures will be displayed in practically every town and city between New York City and San Francisco.

Arthur Heyman, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, has recently returned from an extensive tour of the state and reports business as being very favorable. It has recently been announced that this company will have an entire booth at the convention of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, to be held in Reading on the dates of June 7, 8 and 9.

Williamsport has added another new moving picture theater to its steadily increasing business enterprises. The new establishment is under the leadership of J. C. Meyers, who has installed one of the well known Calehuff No. 6-A motor-driven machines.

It has recently been announced that the Mirror Amusement Company have leased the Orthodox Theater at Frankford avenue and Orthodox street, this city. Phillip Harbst will manage the theater for the company.

A new moving picture theater, to be known as the Empire Palace airdome, has been opened at Frankford avenue and Cambria street, Philadelphia. Mr. Watts, proprietor and manager of the theater, declared that he will run the best of pictures at popular prices.

The Park Theater, at Atlantic and Ohio avenues, Atlantic City, N. J., which has been vacant for some time past, will soon be opened as a first class moving picture theater under the management of C. J. Hafner.

The Keystone Theater, Eleventh street and Lehigh avenue, well known vaudeville house, Philadelphia, will soon show nothing but moving pictures. Many improvements have been made to the building and much new equipment has been added. A large amount of the new equipment, including several moving picture machines, has been installed by the Philadelphia Moving Picture Supply Company, 1233 Vine street.

Louis J. Swaab, of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, reports that he has recently equipped the new Lippincott airdom, B street and Alleghany avenue.

The Lincoln Theater, Fifth and Christian streets, has recently been leased by the Mirror Amusement Company and will be placed under the management of Messrs. Wirt and Heyman.

Bay State Censor Scheme

Attorney for Massachusetts Exhibitors' League Frames Bill Providing for a Board of Film Examiners—Governor Appoints Nine Unpaid Censors to Serve—Will View Only Films That Fifteen Citizens Object to in Writing—Other Bills.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT last a film censorship bill has been presented to the Massachusetts Senate Committee on Ways and Means that may solve the censorship tangle in the Bay State. This bill was drawn up and presented by Hiram E. Miller of Lynn, attorney for the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. It provides for the appointment by the governor of an unpaid board of nine persons, two of them women, to be known as the Board of Rules and Appeals for Film Examination.

This board shall be appointed to serve as follows: Three for terms of one year each; three for terms of two years each and three for terms of three years each. One member of the board shall be a wage earner and one shall be a representative of the moving picture interests. Provision has been made for a paid secretary.

If this bill becomes a law, any motion picture which has once been publicly exhibited in the State, shall be examined by this board provided that fifteen residents of the city or town in which it is exhibited shall complain in writing. If the majority of the members of this board decides that the film is either obscene, indecent, or tends to corrupt the morals of the community, then the film will be barred from exhibition in any other part of the state or else the objectionable parts shall be eliminated.

It is plainly evident that the proponents of censorship are fast becoming discouraged. No sooner do they present a censorship bill than they immediately begin substituting and amending.

James A. Lowell, whose bill was substituted for the Carstens bill, has now added an amendment to his own bill. The amendment calls for a commission of seven censors to be appointed by the governor with power to eliminate any objectionable film or section of any film before it is shown to the public. His original bill provided for the establishment of a department of film censorship under the district police. Five censors were to be appointed under Civil Service rules. They would censor films according to standards compiled by an advisory board of seven appointed by the governor.

The proponents insist that they ought to have the right to censor films before they are publicly exhibited. The picture interests rightly contend that this would be an injustice, claiming that personalities and individual prejudices would creep in under such a system.

The New England Pathescope interests have also introduced an amendment to the censorship bill, providing that no censorship law shall apply to the so-called "miniature films" devoted to educational, religious or charitable purposes, and intended primarily for homes, churches and schools.

It is safe to say that the members of the Senate Committee on Ways and Means is becoming disgusted with the actions of the proponents of such legislation. They do not seem to know what they want and the senators will undoubtedly agree on the Miller bill as the best and only possible solution of the censorship problem.

FATE OF RACE PREJUDICE BILL.

The censorship bill directed against "The Birth of a Nation" has been passed by the Massachusetts House of Representatives on a roll call vote of 175 to 43. It is now up for a third reading in the Senate, where it is predicted to die.

The bill vests unlimited authority of censorship in the Mayor of Boston, the police commissioner and the chief justice of the Municipal Court.

Immediately after the bill was passed in the house, the Rev. Benjamin W. Swain, pastor of the Columbus A. M. E. Church and a leader of Boston's colored people in the fight against the Griffith spectacle, said, "We are supremely disappointed. This is not the bill we wanted." The House killed the Rowley amendment which would allow any two of the three officials to stop any entertainment and also killed the Catheron amendment, which would eliminate the chief justice. The board must be unanimous before a film is barred in Boston.

Condemning the bill, Representative Fred W. Goss of Royalston, said in a two-hour debate: "This is a weak attempt to satisfy a mistaken hysteria on the part of a very small number of people, and a piece of legislation which would give to three men the power toward taking a long step in suppressing the freedom of the stage, which is second only to the freedom of the press."

Representative Essex S. Abbott of Haverhill said, "'The Birth of a Nation' has been tried by a jury and found not guilty. We soon will be asked, whenever a court renders a decision unsatisfactory, to a small number of people, to over turn the judge, the courts, the juries and the laws."

When the bill reached the Senate, Senator James W. Beane of Cambridge presented the seventh amendment to be made to this bill. His amendment was practically the same as the Rowley amendment.

Senator Sullivan of Boston moved a substitute bill, which would give the Mayor of Boston the power to stop a production. Both the Beane and the Sullivan amendments were killed.

Senator Sullivan said that he had seen "The Birth of a Nation" and he believed that the colored people had a right to protest against it on the ground that it was offensive to them. He said the Senate should go slow in passing legislation, however, and should have an eye to the protection of property. He said that the Mayor of Boston should have the same power as other mayors and for that reason offered his amendment.

Senator Bean said that the bill passed by the house requiring unanimous action by the board of censors, would nullify the whole intent of the Legislature and for that reason his amendment should be adopted.

CHANGES IN WORLD FILM OFFICES.

Several new faces are to be seen at the New England office of the World Film Corporation. Manager Frank Vine has resigned and is succeeded by J. Elliott. Earle B. Tinker, who has been the Maine representative, and Joseph Mack, who has been the special representative, have also tendered their resignations. Mr. Mack, who is one of the most popular film men in the State, has assumed the management of the New Onset Theater at Onset, Mass., on Cape Cod, a select summer resort. Mr. Vine has not made known his future intentions.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

Manager Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service of New England has now extended his selling territory of Porto Rico. During the past week he shipped five three-reel features and fifteen single reels to Father C. S. Hoff, Redemptorist Fathers House, Puerto de Tierra. Father Hoff was formerly connected with the Mission Church, Roxbury, and was considered by all as the best informed clergyman on moving pictures in New England. He was an honorary member of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Three months ago he was transferred to his present station.

An altercation between a white man and a negro, who occupied adjoining seats at last Tuesday night's performance of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont Theater, was the cause of a slight disturbance, which was immediately quelled by police reserves who were hurried to the scene.

Herman Rifkin, manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company, which handles the Alliance program in the New England territory, was in Pittsburgh, Pa., most of last week on a business trip. According to Mr. Rifkin the Alliance releases are going big with New England "movie" fans. The program is working in every town in the State of Connecticut.

Arthur Pennock, a director of the United Film Service, during a hurried trip through Boston, visited Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service of New England.

Manager Lee Rhodenheiser of the Opera House at Concord, N. H., has imbued several Boston men with the brook trout fishing mania. Last Sunday J. A. Eslow, manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange, was his guest on a fishing trip, and although they did not have their catch photographed, nevertheless, they claim that anyone would have to go some to beat it. On Wednesday, Manager Harry F. Campbell of the Fox Film Corporation and Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service were Lee's guests and both report that their host certainly knew where the trout were thickest.

The Rev. Patrick J. Lydon, who is in charge of the weekly moving picture shows in Aquinas Hall, Cambridge, has arranged for the use of the United Film Service.

John Goodwin, general manager of the Acme Amusement Company, has opened his summer theater at Belgrade Lake, Maine, for the season. Mr. Goodwin is optimistic as to the outlook for the season. He is now operating theaters at Kennebunk, Kennebunkport, Vinalhaven, Hallowell and Winthrop, Maine.

Messrs. Simard and Cote opened their new airdome at Biddeford, Maine, last Monday with United Film Service. The proceeds of the first day were donated to the Catholic church of the city. The programe for the show was donated by Fred B. Murphy.

Samuel Schultz, a roadman for the Eastern Feature Film Company, has returned from a trip through Vermont and New Hampshire. He reports business is rapidly picking up and states that conditions are most favorable for the Alliance program in that territory.

Manager Harry E. Gustin, of Keith's Bijou Dream, Boston, has contracted with Manager Samuel Bernfield of the Pathe Exchange for exclusive first run service of the Balboa serial, "Who Pays?" Manager Bernfield states that this serial is making a tremendous hit in the New England territory.

The members of the Charlestown Mothers' Club were the guests of Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the General Film Company, at a special runoff. Manager Farrell has been of great assistance to the entertainment committee of this organization in helping them to select films for a weekly moving picture show which they give for children in the Charlestown High School.

Milton E. Hoffman, Eastern district manager of the World Film Corporation, spent several days last week with Manager Frank Vine of the New England office.

Samuel Bernfield, New England manager for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is elated over the many bookings that he is receiving for his new serial, "Who Pays?" the story of which is running in the Boston Traveller every Saturday.

C. W. Rackliffe has purchased the Suffolk theater, Holyoke, Mass., from Charles Higginbotham. The policy of the house will remain unchanged. G. E. Hammond will continue to act as the manager.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

CENSORSHIP is the subject of editorial utterance by the Newcastle Courier, Newcastle, Ind. He says:

"The average picture play is cleaner and more wholesome than the average musical comedy. But still the feeling prevails in many cities that the boys see films that start them thinking about things they would better leave alone.

"Censorship is a difficult problem. State control of picture films always runs the chance that the censors will be politically appointed. There are a great number of ward-heelers who would consider that their services to the party fitted and entitled them to a chance at this pleasant plum. They would believe themselves perfectly capable of making the necessarily fine distinctions. Also moving picture companies that showed a properly liberal spirit might expect to get some favors.

"The censorship of picture films, whether performed by state law or arranged voluntarily by picture companies, calls for generous public spirit."

The Lion Film Company is being sharply criticised for its presentation at the De-Luxe Theater, Hammond, Ind., of an alleged sea battle off the Falkland Islands. The engagement was between Germans and French, and the German soldiers, according to the pictures, went into the battle with white duck panties and shining patent leather boots and wore burnished helmets. They were were careful to shoot in the air at each other. The critics spoke of it as being "poorly faked" and "coarsely faked."

W. E. Steckman, originally of Cumberland, Md., but for several years a resident of Indiana, and T. G. Pritchard, of Baltimore, have taken a two-year lease on the Indiana Theater, at Marion, Ind., and are having the house redecorated and renovated. Mr. Steckman goes to Marion from Madison, Ind., where he operated the Grand Theater.

Rev. O. D. Odell, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Indianapolis, one of the largest congregations in the city, speaks strongly in favor of the film being used as a Sunday School teacher. His utterance was provoked by the news that Robert Lieber, of H. C. Lieber & Company, has been criticised for advocating the use of Holy Lands films in Sunday School work.

Said Rev. Odell: "The early impression remains through life and should subsequent instruction be gleaned from moving pictures it would be lasting and would prove impressible and of immeasurable benefit."

Joe Bertotti, proprietors of the Ninth Street theater, Clinton, Ind., is building an airdome nearby. He will give vaudeville in addition to pictures.

The Switow Amusement Company, owners of a string of theaters in Indiana, is building an airdome in Corydon on the site of the old United Brethren church.

C. H. Winkenhoefer and wife have opened the Gem theater, Huntingburg. The house will seat 200. A ten-piece orchestra furnished music the opening night, Mr. Winkenhoefer acting as conductor.

Herbert Moore and Harry O'Rear have started building an airdome at Jamestown, Ind. They will show every Wednesday and Saturday. Mr. Moore operated a show at Bainbridge, Ind., last summer.

George Freemyer has added new opera chairs at the Crystal theater, Portland, Ind.

Manager Schelling of the Schelling Music Hall, Valparaiso, Ind., has added a new mirror screen.

A new ventilating scheme is being installed by Clark & Hipskind, owners of the Orpheum theater, Hartford City, Ind.

Helmsing & Brookshire have taken out a building permit for the erection of an airdome in Richmond, Ind., on South Tenth street. The permit calls for an expenditure of $750.

Majestic Opens

St. Louis's New Picture House on Franklin Avenue Opened Its Doors on May 7—Investment Amounts to $60,000—Seats 1,500 Persons—McKinley Amusement Company Is the Owner—Officers of the Company.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Majestic, a new theater at 1020-24 Franklin avenue, opened its doors to the public on May 7. The Majestic was formerly an old business house, which was bought by the McKinley Amusement Co., and which was converted into a theater at a cost of $25,000. The entire cost of the lot and old building with the new theater represents an outlay of $60,000. John Karzin, owner of the Casino and Royal theaters, on Market street, is president of the McKinley Amusement Co. Leo Apostolos is secretary, and A. D. Pappas, who is treasurer, is the active manager of the Majestic. The new house is fireproof throughout, contains all the latest improvements, including rest rooms and drinking fountains on both the first floor and the balcony, a large office for the manager of the theater, a large operating booth with two Powers 6A machines, a Minusa screen, and a Wurlitzer organ. An all-picture program will be maintained, with special features of the Fox, Paramount and Alliance productions, with admission charges of five and ten cents. The lower floor seats 1,050 persons and the balcony 450, and the Majestic is perhaps the largest theater on Franklin avenue, which was the first street in St. Louis to have a moving picture show. On opening day the Majestic gave away more than 4,000 roses and carnations to its patrons.

Manager R. L. White, of the World Film Corporation in St. Louis, visits all theaters in the city using World Film service each week. Mr. White accompanies one of his salesmen in an automobile, making several calls in one night. The increase in business resulting from these personal calls has more than justified the time and expense incurred, and has placed World features in many of the higher class theaters.

Nat I. Brown, sales manager of the Minusa Cines Products Co., while on a business trip through several states on his way east, secured several contracts for Minusa screens in three of the largest theaters in Detroit, and many others in the cities he visited. Mr. Brown expects to be away from St. Louis about a month.

MELBA AIRDOME OPENS WITH FINE EXHIBITION.

The Melba Airdome opened under auspicious circumstances on Friday, May 7, when the Grand and Gravois Business Men's Association celebrated the completion of Gravois road, a street that was formerly a county road, then later became one of the principal thoroughfares of the city. The parade started at Grand and Gravois avenues and marched to the Melba airdome, on Gravois and Spring avenues, where the celebration was held. Mayor Kiel and Julius Haller, acting president of the new Board of Aldermen, made speeches, and moving pictures of local interest were shown to the accompaniment of a band concert. The next night, Saturday, the Melba opened for regular business with a well-advertised program, and the location of the airdome fixed in the minds of 2,500 persons who had attended the entertainment the night before.

INFORMING FILMS LOANED FREE.

The Business Men's League of St. Louis are issuing free films for the use of churches, schools, civic and business organizations, who will display them at special entertainments and meetings. Among the subjects are: "Building A Nation Next Door," "Farming With Dynamite," "Handmaid of Health," "Evolution in Writing," "The Carpet Industry," "Making of Firearms," "Pure Foods," "Growing Grain," "Asphalt Industry," and many others of an educational nature. The Business Men's League are acting as local distributors for the Bureau of Commercial Economics of Philadelphia.

TWENTY-ONE NEW THEATERS LAST YEAR IN ST. LOUIS.

In the annual report of Building Commissioner McKelvey of St. Louis for the year between April, 1914, and April, 1915, there were 21 theaters built in the city, as compared with 13 churches, 30 schools, 1 hotel, 4 hospitals, 3 gas plants, 3 depots and 10 mercantile buildings.

THE KINGS SOLD AT AUCTION.

The King's theater, Kings Highway and Delmar Boulevard, one of the handsomest moving picture and vaudeville playhouses in the city, was sold at auction on Saturday, May 15, to satisfy the holders of two deeds of trust, one for $30,000, and another for $3,500. The King's fronts 120 feet on Kings Highway, and the lot is 150 feet deep. The sale included the lot and building and complete equipment, which is estimated to be of more than $75,000 value. The house was built by the O. T. Crawford Company in 1912, and opened with vaudeville and moving pictures. Mr. Crawford was manager of the house at that time, and the stock was said to pay as much as 40 per cent. dividends for a while.

BILL TO LICENSE ST. LOUIS EXCHANGES.

A bill requiring all moving picture exchanges and film renting concerns in St. Louis to pay an annual license of $500 was introduced in the Board of Aldermen on May 7 by Alderman Scholl. At this writing the bill has not passed.

ST. LOUIS BRIEFS.

Assistant Manager Slocum, of the General Film Co., has just returned from a trip through Missouri, and reports excellent business for the exchange all over the state.

The Bonanza Airdome, 2916 Olive street, opened on May 14 with an all moving picture bill, including the serial, "The Diamond from the Sky."

A large airdome is soon to be opened at Mississippi and Park avenues, under the management of A. J. Slymen.

Alf. V. Oldham, manager of the Hippodrome, 6th and Walnut streets, attended the derby in Louisville, Ky., on May 8, and made some fine films of the races. Mr. Oldham owns several films of unusual interest, among them, 'A Trip to Mammoth Cave," in Kentucky, and a film of the parade of "The American Federation of Catholic Societies," when they held their celebration in Louisville. Mr. Oldham occasionally runs one of his films in addition to the first showings of the Metro features at the Hippodrome.

The Aubert airdome, Aubert and Easton avenues, opened on Sunday, May 9, with a Shubert feature for the initial bill. The airdome is connected with the Aubert theater, and the program consists of only moving pictures.

The Echo theater has moved its program to the airdome of the same name at 2497 Arlington avenue. The Echo uses an all-picture program and is a five cent house.

G. K. Dubis, proprietor of the Pathe theater, 1026 Franklin avenue, has moved his program across the street to a large airdome that has been built recently. The new airdome seats 1,400 persons and will show the program of the Pathe theater during the hot months.

Film Trades Club

New Orleans Exchange Managers Perfect Organization—Officers Elected—Dues $10 a Month—Los Angeles Film Exchange Board Asks for Exchange of Ideas Will Take Up Censorship if Necessary—Meets Once a Month.

Special to Moving Picture World from Trades News Service.

THE film exchange managers of New Orleans formally organized, May 10, taking the name of the Film Trades Club of New Orleans. Those present were Messrs. S. T. Stephens, of the Fox Film Corporation; Paul Ford, of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana; Karl Bugbee, of the World Film Corporation; B. S. Bryan, of the Pathe Exchange; A. G. Shear, of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company; E. Auger, of the Mutual Film Corporation, and E. C. Kirkpatrick, of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company. Meyer Simmonds, of the Apex Film Company, was represented by proxy. Those with two others comprise the list of managers of New Orleans exchanges; the two others are understood to be in full sympathy with the organization, and it is believed they will formally ally themselves within a short time. They were unable to attend Monday's meeting.

Paul Ford, a prime mover in the organization, acted as temporary chairman; George Cheney, of the Trades Press Newspaper Bureau, the World's New Orleans representative, as secretary for the organization. The following officers were elected. E. Auger, president; A. G. Shear, vice-president; Paul Ford, treasurer; George Cheney, secretary, and Karl Bugbee and E. C. Kirkpatrick directors. These, barring the secretary, who is an ex-officio member, comprise the executive committee which will conduct the ordinary business of the organization. Dues were fixed at $10 a month for each member, payable the first day of every month, beginning May 1, from which day the organization dates itself.

An adjournment was then taken until May 13, on which day the body met and completed details of organization. At this meeting there was read a communication from the Film Exchange Board of Trade of Los Angeles containing proffers of assistance and interchange of ideas. This was received enthusiastically and a vote of thanks was passed. The meeting then took a leaf from the Los Angeles book by considering the advisability of addressing the exhibitors of the territory on the new move. The order that a letter to the exhibitors setting forth the purposes of the organization be sent was the first act of the organization.

This letter will stress the fact that the organization purposes to work only for the betterment of the condition of the exchanges and exhibitors mutually, and that it is in no way a combination intended to put any disabilities upon the legitimate exhibitor, but rather to aid the non-speculative exhibitor by forcing the fly-by-night to pay for his film the same as anybody else. "Let's get together" is the slogan.

A discussion of the impending censorship fight followed and while nothing definite with regard to it was ordered, it was stated that the organization was fully prepared, with the probable backing of the home offices and other interests, to take care of the picture men's end. The disposition seems to be to refrain from any action until such time as the fight develops, which development is considered almost certain, and then, fully prepared, to get extremely busy. A bill intended to be introduced at the next session of the Louisiana Legislature making the subrenting of film by exhibitors a misdemeanor was discussed. The passage of this bill is deemed highly probable and similar bills will likely be introduced in the Legislatures of other states in the New Orleans territory.

And so, having gotten the business end well under way, Al Shear, of the Consolidated, proposed a dinner Saturday evening at Noyes', the old-time lake-shore restaurant famed for its bouilliabaise and court boullion. This, being put in the form of a motion, was passed by acclamation. Everyone was instructed to meet at Paul Ford's office Saturday afternoon at half past five, there to be picked up in Mr. Shear's car and rushed out to Spanish Fort, the scene of the coming engagement.

The organization will meet every Monday.

THE WORLD'S REPRESENTATIVE CHOSEN AS SECRETARY.

Mr. Cheney's secretaryship of the new organization will, through his connection with the World's news bureau, put the World in somewhat closer touch with the picture men of the New Orleans territory. The office of the Trades Press so will have direct official information of much of the doings of the picture men. The co-operation of members of the industry throughout the territory is confidently expected and especially solicited. Any matter of news interest directed to the Trades Press, 414 New Orleans National Bank, in person or by letter or phone, will receive prompt attention.

ERA CLUB CONSIDERS PICTURES.

The Era Club, New Orleans' pioneer and powerful woman's suffrage organization, at its meeting May 8, named a committee to "investigate moving pictures" with a view to censorship.

This organization has for some time interested itself in public affairs of the city, nearly always coming in for sharp criticism from some quarters, but on the other hand, drawing certain support. Some of its public moves have been successful and beneficial.

Just what the club will do in the censorship matter has not yet been ascertained, but from its past exhibitions of good sense in public matters it is not believed that the body will urge any especially virulent action.

It is believed that the first action of the club will be a request to the exhibitors and others interested to co-operate for the elimination of pictures of questionable taste, as the club is distinguished more for good sense than for prudery.

ATHENAEUM A PICTURE HOUSE.

The Athenaeum, New Orleans' largest auditorium, having a seating capacity of 2,000, has been leased by William Weisfeld, of New York, a moving picture exhibitor. Mr. Weisfeld has announced that he will open the big house May 30 with "The Heart of Maryland," Metro production featuring Mrs. Leslie Carter. Mr. Weisfeld announces that he has made his bookings entirely from the Metro productions, which it is understood he is representing, and that they will be put on at popular prices.

RINGS AT DOOR—SELLS SEATS.

Probably the only salesman-to-your-door policy in the South is in vogue at Pontchatoula, La., where Bernard Antony, owner and manager of the Ideal, solicits an advance sale of seats by personal calls on his patrons. It is perhaps the more remarkable when it is considered that the theater is situated in a town of something less than 1,500 population. It is open but three nights a week, but for his features he gets twenty-five cents. In calling on his customers Mr. Antony carries with him a herald of the picture seats for which he is selling. On this he has a diagram of the floor of the house and a synopsis of the play with notations as to the stars playing. The patron on buying is given a ticket or tickets numbered in accordance with the diagram and thereafter the procedure is much the same as in a legitimate house. Mr. Antony is booking World Film features exclusively at present.

TO REMODEL PLAZA.

Favrot and Livaudais, New Orleans architects, are preparing the plans for the remodeling of Fichtenberg's "Plaza." It is expected that some definite announcement as to the layout of the remodeled structure will be given out shortly.

AL SHEAR AND HIS CAR.

E. P. Knight, manager of the Oak Theater, one of New Orleans' pretty suburban houses, discovered the other night that his messenger had failed to go down to the Consolidated office and get his film for the night's performance, and it was almost "curtain time," twenty minutes, one-third of an hour, in which to save the day, or rather the night, if one must be literal.

Mr. Knight got Al on the phone and rehearsed his troubles. "One moment," said Mr. Shear, that being what he usually says in such cases. "I'll get 'em there." wherewith he swung aboard the especial pride of his heart, that being his car, hove to at the rewind station and buzzed up to the door of the "Oak" in three and a half shakes, flat. (Atmosphere of general joy heightened by prolonged neighings of the machine).

GULF STATE BRIEFS.

George Schaeffer, sales manager for the World Film Corporation, visited Montgomery, Ala., recently and talked things over with a number of exhibitors there.

H. A. Carlton, manager of the Istrione Theater, Jackson, Miss., is doing some nifty novel advertising in the way of a daily paper, which he calls The Istrione Daily Times. A recent issue featured a "Special to the Times," telling about wild scenes in the Chicago wheat pit, this in connection with his presentation of "The Pit," World Film featuring Wilton Lackaye. The Board of Trade of Jackson were the guests of the house at a special "curb"—or three o'clock—matinee to see this picture.

Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," has been named president of the Dixie Film Company, organized in Biloxi some weeks ago. The company's studio is to be built at Sunkist Place, a pretty spot on Back Bay, near Biloxi.

D. W. McKinney was elected vice-president and general manager, Carl E. Leach, secretary; G. W. Haynes, treasurer; Louis Goldman, attorney. Mr. Sinclair will lend his energies largely to the scenario department, he having shown great talent in such work.

J. H. TRAUTH IN HIGHLAND FILM.

Manager of New York Branch of United States Lithograph in New Film Company.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most significant announcements in connection with the progress toward actual production made by the newly-organized Highland Film Co. is that J. H. Trauth, general manager of the New York branch of the United States tors of the new film concern. By reason of his familiarity with the lithographing business Mr. Trauth is of course in somewhat close touch with the theatrical situation generally, and his affiliation with a moving-picture enterprise is another indication of the substantial basis on which it Lithographing Co., one of whose plants is located in Cincinnati, is one of the promois founded, and the regard in which it is held by theatrical experts. Formal compliance with the requirements of the Ohio State Banking Department, which administers the "blue-sky" law affecting all corporations having stock, revealed Mr. Trauth's connection with the company, as well as other incorporators.

CLARENCE RUNEY TO REPRESENT PATHE NEWS.

The Cincinnati Moving Picture Co., well known as the producer of "Cincinnati in Motion" and the "Ohio State Weekly," has made another hit. This takes the form of an arrangement by which Clarence Runey, the originator of "Cincinnati in Motion," becomes the local representative of the Pathe News, which, in turn, will utilize the cream of the Cincinnati pictures secured by Mr. Runey. The combination of Pathe and Cincinnati pictures will be used most thoroughly in the eight states immediately surrounding.

PICTURE SHOW PEST GETS THIRTY DAYS.

Judging by the action taken last week by the municipal court of Cincinnati in the case of one of the pests who annoy women in moving picture theaters, it is going to be a rocky road for these people wherever women muster up courage to protest to the managers of the houses where such incidents occur. At a Fifth street house such a complaint was made, and the culprit, who gave his age as 64 years, was handed a fine of $25 and costs and sentenced to a term of thirty days in the workhouse. It seems that the man had been marked before by police officers as annoying women on the street and in moving picture theaters, and the court landed heavily on him in consequence. Local managers, like those elsewhere, are a unit in being vigorously in favor of repressing by any and every possible means the male creatures who take such advantage of the necessary gloom of photoplay houses, and all that any woman or girl thus annoyed has to do is to inform an usher. The police will do the rest.

CHANGES IN G. F. CINCINNATI OFFICE.

Important changes in the Cincinnati office of the General Film Co. resulted from the recent resignation of Robert Laws, for some months manager of the exchange, having succeeded Frank L. Smith on the removal of the latter to Cleveland. It is understood that Mr. Laws' resignation is based on his selection as the head of the new Paramount exchange which is to be established in a short time in Cincinnati, with quarters on Walnut street. Mr. Smith, who came down following Mr. Laws' resignation, to place Assistant Manager P. Bellington in charge as manager, is now overlord in charge of this territory, with headquarters at Cleveland.

GAVE SHOW TO RAISE FUNDS FOR GATE.

The senior class of the Urbana (O.) High School recently secured the presentation of Wilton Lackaye's big film and stage success, "The Pit," at the Clifford theater, for the purpose of utilizing the profits toward the construction of a campus gateway raised as a memorial to the departing class. The performances given on behalf of the class, by arrangement with the management of the Clifford, were naturally attended by crowded houses, and it is understood that the enterprising youngsters received a substantial amount toward their fund.

CINCINNATI BRIEFS.

L. G. Welch, of Portsmouth, O., recently took over the lease of the Brady theater on Lawson street, and has opened the house with considerable success.

To Film Savage Blacks

An Expedition with Moving Picture Cameras Has Been Arranged to Go to the Congo Country—Will Film Ceremonial Dances of Natives and Tropical Animal Life—Phonograph Records of Songs—Dr. R. L. Garner Heads It.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southwest News Service.

DR. EDGAR L. HEWETT, director of the Museum of New Mexico, at Santa Fe, New Mexico, and school of American Archaeology, has arranged with Dr. Richard Lynch Garner, the scientist, who first made known to the world that monkeys talk, for an expedition to the Congo in Central Africa, where Dr. Garner will not only film the ceremonial dances of the aborigines and the tropical animal life, but will take phonograph records of the songs and myths as told by the savages. These will probably be translated later for exhibition purposes and lectures.

The data to be collected, according to Dr. Garner, will be along lines never before attempted in the history of science. It is destined to show the speech of both lower animal and the human will be a counterpart of Dr. Hrdlcka's famous anthropological exhibit showing the physical development of man from the earliest primeval type to the present. It is to show the co-ordination of sounds to the organs which make them.

By going to Africa every species of genera of mammals and the incipient organs of the lower forms may be studied and a complete series of the vocal organs shown. This will include photographic representations of the sounds themselves, which will be made by the aid of the phoneidoscope. The eye will then be able to see these sounds as well as the ear can hear them.

CENSORS GET POLICE POWERS.

The Ft. Worth city council has conferred police powers upon the board of censors at Ft. Worth, Tex., and it now can stop the showing of any film to which it objects.

PERMIT NO MORE AD WAGONS.

An ordinance prohibiting the driving of vehicles carrying advertising signs about the streets has been passed by the city council of Waco, Tex.

DEMAND SPECIAL SHOWS FOR CHILDREN.

A petition signed by eighty influential women in towns surrounding Waco, Tex., led the Federation of Mission Societies to appoint a committee to confer with the city commission of Waco relative to the creation of a local censor board. The board will serve without pay and will have power to stop undesirable exhibitions. The petitioning women residing in McGregor, Lorona, Hewitt, Robinson, West, Elm, Mott and other towns said they wanted picture shows safe for their children. Mrs. Llewellyn Aubrey praised the work of the national board and explained that local censorship should be directed at the 4 per cent. of the films not passed upon by the national board. She did not advocate making all shows suitable for children.

They should all be decent, she said, but not necessarily children's shows. Parents should realize their responsibility, and investigate whether or not a film is the kind their children ought to see, instead of giving the child a nickel and saying go to "a" picture show.

WITH SOUTHWEST MANAGERS.

W. L. Gullett, managing (he always uses that participle which devotes action instead of the title manager) the Paris at Santa Fe, N. Mex., has been running a series of heart-to-heart "Talks With Patrons" that ought to make his house still more popular. They are alive with human interest. But not all managers will agree with him on the Mutual Masterpieces and World Film attractions.

"When I first started putting on these big things I thought I would charge ten and twenty cents for them, or maybe twenty-five, for they are worth it; you would have to pay that for them anywhere else. But on second thought I figured I would rather play to enough more people at a dime to make up the amount, for I would have just that many more friends and boosters for the house. I was right. It has worked out that way exactly. It is almost impossible to get a seat after eight o'clock at either Friday's or Sunday's show."

The Bes-Mar at Austin, Tex., has installed a $10,000 pipe organ. Majestics with Miss Olive Adais, a former Muskogee girl, are featured by the Yale at Muskogee, Okla. Monday, the day after "Mother's Day," the New Star at Beaumont, Tex., showed "Mother's Roses," featuring Mary Maurice under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

NEW PICTURE HOUSES.

Lynn Gilbert and Clyde N. Blanchette are at the head of a stock company which will erect a $40,000 moving picture and vaudeville theater, on Pearl street, in Beaumont, Tex. It will seat 1,200, will have balcony, six boxes, ladies' rest room and will be equipped with pipe organ. The New Star theater will be consolidated with this house. Clyde Blanchette will be manager.

Plans are being drawn by Chicago architects for a $50,000 vaudeville and picture house at 23-25 North Robinson Ave., in Oklahoma City, Okla. The Kaufman Investment company of Oklahoma City, is handling the matter. The names of the lessees not being announced.

FILM, "THE NIGGER," CAUSES NEAR RIOT.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PROCTOR'S East Jersey Street theater, in Elizabeth, was the scene last week of a disturbance caused by the showing of the film, "The Nigger." Rev. James E. Churchman, colored, and Fritz W. Motley, editor of an Orange negro newspaper, objected to the scenes, wherein the governor of a Southern state learns that he has negro blood and renounces his patrician sweetheart, who is white.

The theater was crowded when the two clergymen arose and asked the vast audience to leave the house. The management telephoned the police, and these, together with the assistance of the house attaches, quelled the disturbance. The two men were arrested.

The film was shown Tuesday to a private audience composed of city officials, after negro citizens had protested to Mayor Victor Mravlag. The board of censors passed the picture as inoffensive. The two arrested men had called on the management earlier in the evening to cut out the picture, but they were met with refusal.

AUTO PARADE IN FILMS.

Members of the New Jersey Automobile and Motor Club, and the Automobile Club of Essex County will take part in the Lincoln highway procession Saturday afternoon, May 22, when motion pictures will be taken for exhibition at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The pictures will be a splendid advertisement for the city, as they will be exhibited in many motion picture houses throughout the country.

There will be 500 feet of film devoted to Newark, and altogether there will be 7,000. The most important views and characteristics along the Lincoln Highway from New York to San Francisco will be shown.

NEW FILM EXCHANGES.

The Supreme Film Feature Company, of which Homer D. Smith is manager, has opened offices at 45 Strand Building, Newark. The concern will deal principally in high class features.

The Royal Feature Film Company has opened an office at 288 Market street, Newark. The Managers are Samuel Singer and L. Goldstein. They will handle L-KO and educational films.

PICTURE THEATER BURNS.

The Broadway theater, of Camden, was burned Tuesday afternoon about ten minutes after an audience of 600 persons had left the building. The loss is estimated at $50,000. The operator, William Crimm, was burned and overcome by smoke while attempting to save his machine. The building had 1,400 seats and had been erected in 1900.

A panic was averted in the Garden Theater, located about fifty feet away. There the manager instructed the operator to throw "Good Night" on the screen, and the audience of two hundred persons went out unaware that the fire was so close.

SUNDAY SHOWS IN NEWARK.

By advertising benefits for charity the theaters of Newark are enabled to exhibit shows. Many of the local houses were opened last Sunday. Among the places opened with benefit performances were: Odeon theater, Loew's, Proctor's, Keeney's and Plaza.

JERSEY BREVITIES.

William Hegel, whose offices are in the Strand Theater building, has secured the state rights for the productions of the Treble-Clef Motion Picture Co.

Annette Kellermann, in "Neptune's Daughter," attracted large crowds to the Clinton Square Theater during Anniversary Week.

Due to the presence of mind of Sidney Zellif, operator at the Central Theater, 482 Central avenue, Newark, a serious fire was prevented. During the showing of "The Black Box" the film caught fire and Zellif grasped it quickly, throwing it into the street, thus keeping it from spreading. The only damage sustained was the loss of the film.

The Ideal Park, under the management of Benjamin and Stevens, opened last Saturday evening and will remain open throughout the summer.

Charles Weldon and James Smith have opened an agency at 45 Strand Theater building. Mr. Weldon was formerly manager of Proctor's Lyric Theater.

The Temple Amusement Co., of Hoboken, was incorporated Friday with a capital stock of $125,000. The firm will conduct amusement enterprises. The incorporators are: Samuel W. Heiss, Frank G. Hall and George A. Enright, all of Hoboken.

The Roseville Scenario and Roof Garden, under the personal direction of Mr. and Mrs. Ansbach, opened its roof garden Wednesday. The seating capacity of the place is 1,400.

A two-reel motion picture drama, "The Valley of Humiliation," written by Miss Josephine Miller, of Newark, was exhibited last Saturday evening at the Carlton Theater. The plot produces some thrilling scenes, well adapted for the screen.

Floyd Williams, who formerly took comedy parts in the big Pathe productions, has started in the automobile accessory business in this city.

An interesting film, an exclusive feature shown at the Paramount last week, portrays the Japanese fleet in a terrible storm. The film was taken from a warship, and notwithstanding the motion of the boat, the operator secured a fine film of five hundred feet.

JACKSONVILLE STUDIO NOTES.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville (Fla.) Correspondent for Moving Picture World.

KENEAN BUEL, managing director of the Kalem studio, has gone to New York City. It is understood that Mr. Buel will remain in the East the rest of the summer. He has finished the Alice Joyce series here this season and some of the first pictures of the "Broadway Favorites" series, which the Kalem Company is producing.

Director Robert G. Vignola went to St. Augustine to take some scenes for the four-reel feature picture, "Don Caesar De Bazan," which he is making, with W. Lawson Butt, the English actor playing the lead and with Alice Hollister playing the lead opposite him. After finishing the picture it is understood that Mr. Vignola will go to the studio at Cliffside, N. J. It is likely he will work there during the summer.

J. L. Hawkinson, who has been Mr. Buel's photographer, has returned to New York City, and George Lanning, who has been at the Kalem studio during the season, has returned.

Director Guy Coombs is completing "The Sacrifice," a dramatic picture in two reels. A few nights ago he used a number of extra people for a big cabaret scene. Some one in the company volunteered to work "extra" and then others joined in and the roster included Director Kenean Buel, Director Robert G. Vignola, Director Harry Millarde, Alice Hollister, Vera Mellish, who came down from New York for one of the "Broadway Features" pictures directed by Mr. Buel. The picture will include the novelty of having such a notable company of "extra" people and it will be viewed with interest by the members of the local stock company at the studio.

Jere Austin, who has been the heavy man for Kenean Buel's company with the Kalem studio here will leave for Chicago soon. Mr. Austin is going to make the trip in his 30-60 sixty-horsepower Stearns roadster. The machine has the reputation of being the fastest car in Jacksonville and holds the record. L. C. Taylor, a well known motion picture photographer, may accompany him on the trip. It is planned to follow the route of the proposed Dixie Highway from Miami to Chicago. Mr. Austin will appear at picture theaters along the line and will take ten days for the trip, jaunting along and taking his time. Mr. Taylor will likely take his camera with him and take scenes along the route of the highway for a commercial picture.

W. Lawson Butt, the English actor, is here for the four-reel picture, "Don Caesar De Bazan," under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. Mr. Butt has played the part he essays in this picture 300 times in England. He recently starred in "The Garden of Allah." He was brought over to join Grace George, under the William Brady management. and has appeared with Robert Mantel in Shakespearian productions. Recently he was in "The Lie" with Margaret Illington.

GEORGE SCHMIDT TO MANAGE THE IDEAL.

George Schmidt has left for Columbia, S. C., where he has taken up the management of the Montgomery Ideal theater. Mr. Schmidt came to Jacksonville about a year ago and took up the management of the Prince Theater. Business was not flourishing at the time. During the year he has built up the business and when he left the theater was in excellent condition. The Paramount program has been installed and proved a winner. Mr. Schmidt's many friends in the business here wish him the best of success, and they regretted that he left Jacksonville. The new position is an advance for Mr. Schmidt. The theater uses the General Film program, Paramount features and the "Exploits of Elaine."

PROPOSE NEW PORTLAND THEATER.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND may have a new motion picture theater, as Wolf Brothers, who have been in the drug business there for a number of years, are negotiating for a lease of the large building at 482 and 484 Congress street, which for years was occupied by Oren Hooper's Sons. The negotiations have been going on for a number of days. The property is owned by the J. B. Brown estate, and it is reported that they will require a bond of $20,000 before the papers for the lease are passed. It is understood that the parties desiring to lease the building plan to have stores in the front part of the building, with an entrance to the theater auditorium, which wil be located in the rear.

TINKER LEAVES WORLD FILM CORPORATION.

To say that Maine exhibitors are surprised at the announcement of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, to the effect that E. B. Tinker would work under their banner, commencing at once, is putting it mildly. Every exhibitor thought that Tinker was one of the fixtures of World Film. To hear him talk World Film, one would think that the only thing he thought of. But "the best of friends must part," so says Mr. Tinker in an interview with the correspondent.

Asked as to whether any others severed their connections with the company, Mr. Tinker stated that F. H. Vine, Joseph Mack, Louis Machat and S. J. Brody have all closed with the World Film.

Mr. Tinker says that Herman L. Craig made him the best offer, and henceforth the Picture Playhouse Film Company will be on the map in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Mr. Craig and Mr. Tinker were at one time business associates, so they should get on well together.

This new company has 18 good productions already on hand and is to release one weekly. Mr. Tinker is firm in his belief that he can put Picture Playhouse films in the majority of theaters in his territory.

CHARLES H. MESSTER PLEASED.

Charles H. Messter, Maine representative of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., reports that he is meeting with much success in this state. "Who Pays," the new Pathe feature in twelve reels, has been booked by the Empire and Nickel theaters in Portland, Leavitt's theater in Sanford, two houses in Lewiston and in Rumford, Pittsfield, Augusta, Bangor and Old Town.

"The Exploits of Elaine," Mr. Messter reports, has been booked by no less than 67 houses in the state of Maine and orders for it are coming in every day.

Mr. Messter is putting the Moving Picture World numbers to a unique and valuable use. He reads each number carefully and clips anything pertaining to Pathe service either in the advertisement, editorial or news columns, especially the impartial reviews of Pathe pictures by the World writers. These clippings he pastes in a neat scrap book, and when talking to exhibitors can point out to them authoritative opinions regarding the quality of Pathe photo-plays.

"The New Exploits of Elaine," opens at the Palace theater this week.

MAINE BRIEFS.

Unable to secure vaudeville that he feels Waterville desires, Manager Cornelius B. Keleher, of the City Opera House, Waterville, has decided to continue the present season with a moving picture program.

The citizens of Pittsfield are pleased to learn that A. St. Ledger, proprietor of the Park Street theater, will begin at once the work of erecting a brick building on his lot in Main street, which he purchased some time ago. The building will consist of one store and a moving picture theater. The contract of building has been let to Lamont Appleby, of Pittsfield.

Proprietor C. W. Sawyer, of the firm of Sawyer & Roberts, Graphic theater, Milbridge, who was a visitor to Bangor during the week, states that he will probably open up every night in the week instead of three nights in the week, as in the past. While in Bangor he booked some Universal features.

Dolloff and Dutton, proprietors of the Pastime, at Boothbay Harbor, have decided to open every night in the week instead of three nights.

S. A. Anderson, of Harrington, has booked "The Black Box" for one night a week, in the Town Hall, and Proprietor Hanson of the Comique, at Camden, has taken on "The Black Box" two days a week.

Proprietor Wilbur Shea, of the Acme, has opened with "Damon and Pythias."

SUIT IN PORTLAND, OREGON, OVER CENSOR'S DECISION.

City's Censorship Ordinance Questioned —Shall Film Viewers Have Legislative Power?

By Abraham Nelson.

THE constitutionality of the new Portland, Oregon, censorship ordinance is being questioned in a suit brought by Manager James of the Majestic theater relative to the showing of the film, "The Valley of the Missing." The Portland ordinance, while drastic in its terms as to the character of the pictures permitted to be shown, is very lax in the matter of the appointment of the board. It provides that while the board shall consist of appointees of the city commission, these appointees can in turn delegate their power to people of their own choice, viewers, as the ordinance terms them.

The ordinance specifies just what character of pictures are barred in Portland and specifically designates that all others must be passed by the censorship board. Manager James contends that the film in question does not come under any of these heads and therefore must be passed.

The vesting of the censorship board with legislative power, the delegation of authority by the board to viewers and the fact that the board is appointive and does not come under the city civil service, were among the questions raised by Lester Humphreys, attorney for Mr. James, in his argument before the Circuit Court on May 8th. Judge Davis asked that the matter be submitted in briefs and his decision will probably be rendered in about ten days.

NEXT CANADIAN FEATURE, AN ANTI-CIGARETTE FILM.

By David K. Billings, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ACTIVITIES at the Beury Feature Film studios are being resumed now that the Willard-Johnson fight pictures have been completed and placed on the market. A private exhibition of the pictures attended by local sporting dignitaries was held at the studio last week, showing every minute of the fight during the entire 26 rounds. For public showing much of the fighting has been cut out as being too wearisome. Members of the Ontario censor board present at the showing acknowledged that there was nothing of a brutal nature or unpleasant in any of the seven reels and expressed regret that it was not in their power to pass favorably upon the pictures. The next production at the studio will be in the form of a big six-reel feature being filmed under the auspices of the Anti-Cigarette League. Much will depend on the success of this feature, which will be widely advertised, and upon its success will depend to a great extent the future of the moving picture industry in Canada. It is understood that if the Beury Film Company is successful, there is another syndicate of local men who are willing to manufacture one-reel subjects and so start an all Canadian film service.

OPTIMISTIC SELLING.

A decision was handed down in the Appellate Court last week setting aside the sale of the Belmont theatre on the grounds that the former owner, Harry Reeder, had misrepresented its earning powers. The Belmont theater is one of the largest houses in the west end of the city, seating about 800, and has been doing a very good business, but not as large as the glowing words of the owner made apparent. The judge held that in selling theaters owners should not under any circumstances assert the earning power of a theater to be more than twice the actual.

TORONTO BRIEFS.

Arthur M. Wilbur and Samuel Fine have been added to the local selling staff of the World Film corporation. Mr. Wilbur was manager of the Picture Playhouse, Inc., since the inception of the local office, while Mr. Fine was formerly with Allied Features.

Under the auspices of the Toronto Branch of the Alpine Club of Canada, motion pictures secured in the Rocky mountains and the Selkirk mountains were shown at the University last Wednesday evening. The pictures show the wonders of the mountains as well as a presentation of the work of the mountain climbers.

Several members of the Committee of Forty visited the Colonial theater last Tuesday and saw the World Film picture, "The Fight." After a consultation they decided to make an appeal to the board of censors against its being shown in Ontario. After hearing their appeal the censors explained that the strong moral lesson pointed out by the film more than made up for anything that under ordinary circumstances might be deemed objectionable. They nevertheless decided to see the film again along with the committee. On reviewing it they held to their former opinion.

Considerable interest is being taken in the introduction of the Pathe program here. Partly on account of its French name and partly because Manager Maurice Kauffman has adopted a very aggressive campaign of advertising. Pictures of the big military funeral in honor of the late Captain Darling, whose body was brought back from France where he was killed in action, appeared in the Pathe News less than a week after the event and created considerable enthusiasm. The offices of the exchange at 56 King West, have already been enlarged by the addition of another room.

WALTER FLANNIGAN MARRIES ANNA CONLEY.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

WALTER FLANNIGAN, of the Independent Film Exchange, and Miss Anna Conley, formerly of the General Film Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., were married last week in St. Mary's Church, West End, and left immediately after the ceremony on a bridal trip to Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Flannigan will take up their residence at 813 Steuben street, West End, Pittsburgh. Every one in filmdom extends their congratulations and wishes for the best of luck.

CHANGES IN KLEINE OFFICES.

D. Leo Dennison, who has been associated with the Pittsburgh office of the George Kleine Attractions, has resigned his position of branch manager, to take effect May 10. Mr. Dennison will take a new berth in the office of George Kleine in Chicago. M. F. Gibbons, formerly manager of Kleine's Denver office, will succeed Mr. Dennison.

Mr. Dennison has scores of friends in this territory who are sorry to see him leave the Smoky City, but nevertheless he is followed by their best wishes.

A. W. GOFF'S FIELD GROWS.

A. W. Goff, district manager of the Pittsburgh and Cleveland office of the Pathe Exchange, has recently had his field of operation considerably enlarged. Hereafter he will have general supervision over the following offices: Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis and Dallas. Mr. Goff formerly had his headquarters in Pittsburgh, but hereafter will make Chicago his main office. The Pittsburgh trade are very sorry to lose Mr. Goff, but nevertheless extend their best wishes for success.

EASTERN BOOKING TAKES NEW OFFICES.

The Eastern Booking Office, with Mr. Marcus as manager, formerly located on the second floor at 125 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, has moved into the building at 111 Fourth avenue formerly occupied by W. C. Pearce, who conducted the Commercial Film Exchange at that location.

MICHAELS AND FREEMAN MOVE.

Michaels & Freeman, a new firm recently formed, which has been located and carrying on business in the Cameraphone building, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., moved last week to 115 Delray street, in rooms adjoining Weiland's Film Exchange. This firm act as theater brokers, buying and selling houses, also theater equipment and films. The men that compose this concern are C. F. Michaels, a well-known film man and exhibitor, being interested in Richards Features Company and the American theater, South Side, and Charles Freeman, also an old-time exhibitor, having conducted houses in Beaver avenue, Pittsburgh, Monessen and Sharpsburgh.

PITTSBURGH BRIEFS.

Another moving picture theater is to be established in State street, Erie, Pa. John C. Callaghan, secretary to Building Inspector Dundon, last week issued a permit to John N. Sapper to construct a $6,000 building on the east side of State street, between Eleventh and Twelfth.

H. B. Kester, of the Cameraphone, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., took another step when he charged 20 cents on "The Clemenceau Case," recently, and he showed this picture at full capacity every show. Harvey B. Day, manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Fox Film Corporation, always a booster for higher prices, was also well pleased with the showing made by the picture. Mr. Day, who was formerly manager of George Kleine's office in Pittsburgh, ran "Quo Vadis" in the Cameraphone nearly two years ago at 25 cents admission and the results were fine.

Mr. Kester was the pioneer 10-cent exhibitor in the Pittsburgh section and now he is giving the business another boost by again doubling the prices.

The Lyric, one of Carleton's houses in Butler, Pa., has announced that they will discontinue pictures and run vaudeville during the summer months.

The Orpheum, at McDonald, Pa., with Mr. Remensnyder as manager, opened up last week in a remodeled house with a new equipment. The interior lighting effect is very beautiful and the large nitrogen lamps on the outside catch the eyes of the passer when blocks away. Mr. Remensnyder says that business has been very good with him and since remodeling and repairing he expects to have still a larger patronage.

F. J. Dion, owner of the Princess, in Franklin, Pa., has sold half interest in this house to the Park Theater Company. The Princess will only be operated on Saturdays and holidays, giving the Park and the Orpheum a clear field the rest of the time, of course, until some one else sees an opportunity for locating a successful moving picture theater.

Robert E. Byrnes, formerly of Hatch's Film Exchange, has bought from Frank Guckert his repair shop and supply business at 107 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh. Mr. Byrnes will put in a complete line of moving picture supplies and do a general repair business. Mr. Guckert will remain in charge of the repair department. The new concern will be called the Reliance Motion Picture Supply & Repair Company.

S. B. Kramer, assistant Eastern division manager of the World Film Corporation, who will remain for some time in Pittsburgh in connection with the perfecting of some new ideas which his enterprising company has evolved, is an energetic young man who knows the film business. The same energy is also noticeable in the four new assistants he has with him in the local office. These young men are Henry Segel, who looks after the Pittsburgh territory; George W. Lederer, the theatrical producer of New York, who is looking after the West Virginia territory; Homer Howard, who is confining his efforts to the northern part of the state, and John Childs, who attends to the southern part of the territory. The methods in salesmanship introduced by Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, who will be a visitor in Pittsburgh during this week, are carefully adhered to by Mr. Kramer.

The Orpheum, at Sharon, Pa., under the management of Harry Durbin, of Youngstown, Ohio, opened last week. This theater will be used exclusively for motion pictures and Manager Durbin has announced his intentions of remodeling, redecorating and making general repairs in the near future.

Large features are about to be released by the new Alliance Program, which has opened offices at 404 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa., and is booking its initial feature, "Beulah." Max W. Herring is the manager of the new concern.

The Olympic, A. Natopolos' fine new house in Altoona, Pa., is fast nearing completion and is expected to be ready for opening in about a month. This house will have a capacity of 1,200 and will cost $100,000.

Eugene S. Reilly & Company, by C. G. Pfordt, leased for Joe T. Speer to Henry J. Blum the first floor, 40x100 feet, of the building at 1711-13-15 Fifth avenue, near Dinwiddie street, Pittsburgh, Pa. This building will be remodeled and fitted up to be one of Pittsburgh's up-to-date moving picture theaters. Movie theaters are very scarce in upper Fifth avenue, and this one is expected to make good from the very start.

Michael Janicki, owner of the Grand, at McKees Rocks, Pittsburgh, Pa., has installed a Wurlitzer Orchestra Piano. Mr. Janicki is very well pleased and says his patrons like the new instrument.

OPERA STARS IN ATLANTA.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

GERALDINE FARRAR, in flimsy white, came down from her apartments in the Georgian Terrace Thursday morning to be greeted by a crowd of friends, all eager to praise her Carmen of the night before. She was in fine spirits after an ovation, accorded to few, even great grand opera singers, and acknowledged with girlish delight the congratulations.

Some of the friends expressed their regret that they must wait another year to see her again.

"Oh, you can see me in the moving pictures," she said. "Yes, really. I'm going to the Pacific coast in June, and am to play Tosca, Butterfly and Carmen, and perhaps some other roles. It will be out in the open."

Scotti, the baritone, also confided to a close friend before leaving the city that he was going into the moving pictures soon. As he has played most of the leading roles with Farrar, it is but natural to believe he will be in the same pictures. It is stated they will be filmed by the Jesse Lasky company in their western studio.

BERT LEVY OPENS ATLANTA OFFICES.

The Bert Levey circuit of San Francisco has opened offices in the Forsyth building for the handling of special features in this territory.

VICTORIA THEATER OPENS.

Atlanta is to have another moving picture theater. The latter part of this week the Victoria theater will be opened at No. 4 Peachtree. S. Berger is president and manager of the new theater, and has, it is rumored, spent $15,000 in remodeling the former offices of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. The theater will seat 400. The Mutual program, including the Master pictures, is the service secured. Two Simplex projecting machines will be installed. They are 1915 models and the best that can be used. Exhaust fans, ceiling fans and other means will be used to make it the coolest, or one at least, in the city. The foyer and ticket booth are finished in Georgia marble and art glass. The interior is neatly and tastefully decorated upon simple lines and the indirect lighting system used. An orchestra of five pieces will furnish the music. No vaudeville will be at this theater.

ATLANTA BRIEF NOTES.

George M. Gentry, who has been identified with the Harry K. Lucas Co. for some time, has been appointed assistant manager of the United Program Film Service, with offices in the Rhodes building. Mr. Gentry's many friends over the South are pleased to hear of his advancement.

"The Belgians' Relief," a two-reel moving picture, enacted by prominent Atlantians, and to be shown by Georgia's branch of the Belgian Relief Fund for the benefit of suffering women and children of Belgium, will be shown for the first time at the Lyric theater this week.

"Diamond in the Sky," the new serial picture of the American Film company, is announced this week at the popular Vaudette theater. John Evans, the manager of the Vaudette, is the dean of Atlanta's moving picture men and a very prominent Shriner. Mr. Evans entered the moving picture business in its infancy, and to-day not only has the largest but the best patronized theater in the city.

The Grand theater enjoyed its usual crowded house during the past week, and announces for this week the following: "The Woman," "The Eagle's Nest," "Little Sunset," and "Woman and Wine."

The Strand theater announces for the week "The Heart of a Painted Woman," featuring Olga Petrova in the leading role, Mae Marsh in "The Victim" and one of Atlanta's favorites, W. S. Hart, in "The Man From Nowhere."

LUBIN.

ROAD O' STRIFE (Episode No. 9, "The Iron Hand of Law"—May 31).—Upon reaching the village of Elmhurst, Daisy, the show-girl and self-appointed guardian of Alene, inquires of the first man she sees where she can obtain information concerning Robert Dane. It is to Dane himself that the inquiry has been addressed, he having been forced to abandon as hopeless his efforts to trace Alene and being on the point of returning to the city. With the skill of long experience, Daisy readily reads Dane's character, and, satisfied, informs him that Alene is safe and offers to conduct him to her. Reaching the city, Daisy and Dane proceed to Daisy's room and then to the theater in search of Alene. At the latter place they learn from the doorkeeper, who has overheard the address given to the driver of the taxi in which Alene was taken away, that the girl has gone to Gilbert Jerome's house.

In an agony of apprehension they hurry to the house, arriving at about the same instant that Gilbert drains the silver cup. They are, of course unaware of what is taking place, and enlist the aid of an officer, on whom Daisy's frantically earnest appeals make an impression. The officer goes to the side of the house, where he can look into the dining room, while Dane and Daisy force their way past the servant who opens the front door. The officer looks in the window just as the horrified butler announces that Gilbert Jerome is dead. Dane and Daisy reach the dining room just as the officer springs in at the window and assumes charge of the situation. Alene feels no grief at Gilbert's death, and pretends no regret, but ignoring the incident, is entirely happy to again meet Dane. A telephoned report to the police station bring detectives and a doctor and the latter at once declares Gilbert dead, and further, that he obviously died from some unusual poison. The brief investigation conducted on the spot seems to point conclusively to the guilt of Alene, and her unconventional manner and words count heavily against her. At the police station she is held on a charge of murder, Dane, Daisy, the butler and Gilbert's footman being detained as witnesses for the inquest. Dane, realizing how strong is the circumstantial evidence against Alene, is heartbroken, but the girl herself is only bewildered that she should be shut in a prison cell.

THE DARKNESS BEFORE DAWN (Special—Three Parts—June 2).—Carson, trustee for Elsie Moore, an orphan, invites her to his rooms with evil intent. Realizing his purpose she faints. Carson drags her into the adjoining bedroom, locks the door and hurries out to admit Elliott, a young physician, who is one of Carson's clients. Elliot does not know Elsie, nor of her presence in the house. He picks up a bracelet and glove which had been dropped by Elsie in her struggle. Carson's wink and subtle hint lead Elliot to believe he is harboring a willing mistress in the bedroom. Elliot, a man of high moral standards, is disgusted. He and Carson leave the house immediately on important business. Elsie, meanwhile, recovers consciousness and escapes.

Months later Elsie, penniless, meets Elliot for the first time and is employed by him as stenographer. Elliot has had a previous love affair with Rose Lewis, a beautiful widow, but, true to his ideals, he abandons his contemplated proposal when he discovers that she smokes, and leans toward a restless social life. Rose is not a woman of maudlin dissipation, but one with a profound liking for the high living of society. When she realizes she has lost Elliot, whom she dearly loves, she is influenced by the memory of her dead baby, the spirit of motherhood asserts itself, and she determines to discontinue the habits distasteful to Elliot and win back his affection. But Elliot has now seen in Elsie his ideal of the innocent, chaste, home-loving woman, and he marries her on the same day that Rose writes Elliot telling him she has conformed to his ideals in hope that their love might be reawakened. Rose, heartbroken at Elliot's marriage to another, cannot drown the desire to wait for Elliot as a husband, however long that may be. Elsie soon discovers Elliot's former love for Rose and becomes vaguely fearful.

Elliot reluctantly takes Elsie to a ball at Rose's home. Elsie here accidentally meets Carson, and the sight of her terror in encountering him makes Elliot suspicious. Carson, still posing as a friend of Elliot, calls at the physician's home. He realizes Elsie's helplessness and is still eager to carry out his sinister motives. Elliot, to learn the truth, pretends to leave the house. He creeps back to the living room door, looks through and sees Elsie alone with Carson. Elsie shrinks in terror when Carson produces the bracelet and glove, tells her Elliot knows they belong to the woman who was in his apartments, and threatens to tell her husband unless she yields to his demands. Elliott, frenzied, bursts into the room, ejects Carson, beating him unmercifully, and, believing Elsie guilty, leaves the house. He continues to live alone for the next few months, refusing to open Elsie's mail, and gracefully yielding to the love advances of Rose. On the eve of a trip, he calls upon Rose to inform her he has decided to divorce Elsie. At the same moment a trained nurse phones Rose's home to find Elliot. Rose answers the phone and even when the nurse tells her that Elsie is about to become a mother, Rose is determined not to tell Elliot. In hanging up the phone, Rose overturns the tiny box containing the clothes of her dead baby. Her heart goes out to the other woman, about to give birth to a child. She tells Elliot what is about to happen at his home, and forces him to go to Elsie's side. Elliot returns home just as his first-born is brought into the world. A reconciliation follows between Elsie and Elliot, and Rose is happy in the thought that she has acted justly and brought happiness to a deserving woman.

THE ACTORS' BOARDING HOUSE (June 1).—The mischief created by Pat and his partner, both acrobats, serves to put the house in an uproar, and render "Ma," the proprietress, a wreck of her former self. Pat tilts the beer pail held by a charming dancer as she gayly chats with a contortionist, and he and his partner have a party. They steal into her room and generously place a glass of beer on her dresser, only to be caught there by the dancer and summarily ejected. The trombone player comes in for their practical joking, and the lank tragedian likewise suffers at their hands. Pat is horrified at dinner to see a fowl of the size of a sparrow resting on a platter which might hold a turkey. He aims his revolver at it and fires. The bird is shot into nothing. "Ma" lays down the law after that, but it does no good. She can only sink her weary head on a bed improvised from the ironing board and a piano stool, and fall into a restless sleep, dreaming of the end of the week and the departure of Pat.

HIS PIPE DREAM (June 1).—In this cartoon comedy Rastus is seen to fill his pipe and settle back for a good smoke. His dream soon follows. Rastus sweeps out his limousine and is attracted by a sign offering $500 to the man who can stay in the ring for three rounds with Black Smoke. Rastus bravely accepts the challenge and meets Black Smoke. The fighting is fast and furious, and the antics of the pen-and-ink men highly amusing. Rastus wins, of course, and attempts to aid a maiden in distress. Her horse is running away, his course taking him up perpendicular cliffs and over mountain peaks, with jumps among the stars. Rastus overtakes the girl, proposes and is gladly accepted. Then he wakes.

THE INVENTOR'S PERIL (Special—Two Parts—June 3).—John Alden, a wealthy amateur inventor, to escape his obligations, takes refuge in his old home on an island connected with the mainland by an abandoned bridge. Here he starts experiments on his invention, a wireless telephone, using the cupola as a laboratory. Mrs. Baldwin (who is determined to Marry John to her daughter, Lola) sends him an invitation to a house party at her nearby mansion, where the world's greatest inventor, Signor Marvelli, is her guest. Tempted by the opportunity to consult this genius about his invention, John accepts. At the house party the inventors become absorbed in the perfection of the wireless and, to the distress of their designing hostess, make an experimental station of the loft of her garage, where they succeed in perfecting the instrument to the point where only a test call will demonstrate its success. Therefore, John, unknown to anyone but Marvelli, goes back to his cupola laboratory to establish a connection "by wireless."

Unknown to Marvelli, he has been followed to the garage by a crazy inventor named Micheals, who has a delusion that the great man has wronged him. Finding Marvelli alone, the fiend overpowers him and is about to dispatch him with a murderous stiletto, when Lola climbs to the loft. Micheals, thinking Marvelli dead, turns to the girl, who has been a witness to his act and fainted. He throws her into one of the motor cars in the garages and drives madly away. Believing himself pursued, Michaels hurls the powerful car across a rickety bridge leading to John's old house. Midway over the rotten timbers collapse, dropping the car to the waters below. Micheals cuts a hole in the top of the car and succeeds in gaining the island and dragging his unconscious victim into the old house, where Lola revives to find the maniac glowering over her. John, at work in the cupola above, hears a terrified scream. Rushing down, he finds Lola strugling with the fiend whom he fights off, and carries the girl up to the cupola. Here he realizes there is no escape from the maniac, who is slowly carving his way through the door. Resolved to die game, John forces Lola to be lowered from the window by a wire tied about their waists. He then tries vainly to "get" Marvelli on his "wireless" phone.

Back at the garage, Marvelli has been discovered and revived. He instinctively turns to the phone. Suddenly he solves the problem and gets a spark. At the cupola John has given up hope when the phone in his hand comes to life; he has just time to call for help when Micheals breaks into the cupola. They struggle desperately. John, handicapped by Lola's weight, Micheals turns and John hurls the telephone at him. Micheals pitches headlong down the stairs into the arms of Marvelli. The rescuers, headed by Mrs. Baldwin, drag John back as he is being pulled out of the window. Lola is saved, and as Marvelli holds the great invention to him, John takes Lola in his arms instead, while Mrs. Baldwin smiles in triumph.

THE DECOY (June 4).—Robert Smith, an Eastern "sharper," arrives in Sunset, a small city in the West, and opens business under the guise of a real estate operator. His daughter, Flo, an attractive girl, has been brought up to help her father without question in his "sharp" practices. Accompanying Smith is his right-hand "skin" artist, "Spider" Brown. Through an item in the Sunset newspaper, Smith learns that Bert Sheldon of New York, who has inherited a fortune of $30,000, is in Sunset with the intention of investing in some land. The "sharper" orders Flo to meet Bert, exert all her fascinations on him and induce him to visit the office of Robert Smith, real estate operator. By means of a clever ruse, Flo attracts Bert's attention and they become acquainted. She takes him to Smith's office and the "sharper" shows the young Easterner a fine tract of land and offers to sell it to him at a low figure. As a matter of fact, the land in question is the property of the Sunset Water Company. Smith figures on "selling" the land to Bert and making a "get-away" with the money. Bert is pleased with the land and promises to consider the proposition.

Two days later, Flo and Bert stroll out to the land. Bert asks Flo what she thinks about the land. The girl, who has come to admire Bert, especially when she compares his treatment of her with that of her father, warns Bert of the conspiracy. The latter is profuse in his thanks and shows Flo the picture of his Eastern sweetheart. He also decides that he will not get in a mixup with Smith, in order to protect Flo. Learning that Bert has decided not to buy the land, Smith is desperate. He tries to "dope" Bert with the intention of getting what money he has. Flo, apparently through an accident, knocks over the glass of wine. Bert prepares to leave town. Smith determines to rob him openly, using "Spider" as an accomplice. Smith returns to his office to get a knife. Flo, who has found that she loves Bert and knows that it is a hopeless love, resolves to save him. She seizes her opportunity and in an unusual way holds her father a prisoner until she knows that Bert is safe on the outbound train. Smith is enraged at first, then slowly realizes the situation from Flo's point of view. There is the promise that the turning point has come in the "sharper's" life.

THE NEW BUTLER (June 5).—Bill answers a newspaper advertisement, and secures a position as a butler. He catches the man of the house in the act of flirting with the housemaid, after which Bill does practically as he likes, until he tries to butt in and run the kitchen, where he met his Waterloo, as Nora hails from the Emerald Isle, and refuses to recognize the new butler as her boss. Bill is lucky in escaping a nice freshly made pie as the cook hurls it at him and the master of the house receives it full in the face. He tries to fire Bill on the spot, but Bill promptly informs him that if he is fired he will tell his wife that he is flirting with the housemaid.

Nora, wanting a chicken killed for dinner, informs the new butler that she needs one quick. Bill loses no time in rushing out in search of a chick. He spies a beautiful young girl standing on the corner waiting for a car, makes a dive for her, picks her up bodily, and rushes back to the house carrying her into the kitchen, puts her in a chair, and tells the cook there is her "chicken." For this error, Bill receives a sound beating at the hands of the cook, but the arrival of the mistress of the house interrupts the trouble. The new butler is presented for the first time to the mistress of the house. While Bill is making a nice bow he trips on the rug and, in trying to straighten it, pulls it from under the feet of the mistress. He apologizes that the floor is slippery and she indignantly goes upstairs.

Some friends have arrived to take dinner with the family, and little Johnny upsets the butler with a tray and the dishes are spilled all over the guests. For this offense, Johnny is ordered away from the table to his room. Johnny discovers the chandelier in his room needs repairing and phones downstairs for the butler to come up and fix it. Bill is excused from the dining room and proceeds to the boy's room. Johnny supplies him with a step ladder, while the butler is on, he pulls it away, leaving Bill suspended in the air hanging on to the chandelier. The fasteners of the chandelier give way and Bill crashes through the floor, landing on the dining room table with barrels of plaster following him. When the clouds of dust clear away Bill and the folks at the table are a sight to behold. Now Bill is looking for another job.

As the days go by, the painter and the girl meet frequently and Tom's attentions to the girl begin to be unwelcome. Tom is consumed with jealousy, but he likes the painter and he is a good loser. Then comes the denouement. The moonshiners learn that the painter is a revenue agent. Tom is about to kill him, but the girl buys his life at the price of her happiness. He meets Miss Cat in an alley and flirts with her. Just as the two are spooning on a log, along comes Mr. Cat and chases Wag. Dud tries to save him and runs after him. Just as the police arrive, the bachelor puts on a house coat and an old cap. He looks very much like a burglar. The girl, seeing this, holds him at the point of the gun, hands him over to the police and goes back to the office with her story.

George asks his wife to go, but she refuses without giving him the real reason. On the cruise Ponsonby learns that Chesham is a married man. When he twits him Chesham tells him his wife is a clinging vine and a hindrance. Ponsonby tells him that the only girl he ever loved refused him. She was Isabelle Dallas. Chesham then knows that he has her for a wife. He goes home with a new appreciation of her. But she dies in his arms.

A girl is born to the couple, but they are poor and are unable to give the child the care it needs. Their physician tells Brent that the only hope for the child lies in calling a noted specialist. He falls in love with Ruth and she grows to care for the man who is curing her child. The doctor tells Brent that he loves his wife and if he will consent to a divorce he will give the woman and child all the comforts and luxuries they need. The coward, his heart crushed, gives up his wife.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES NO. 9, "Mrs. Jarr's Auction Bridge" (May 31).—Out at Hay Corners, Mrs. Jarr's Uncle Henry has an altercation with the village "constabule" over a broken-down bridge on his land and is ordered to get a new one. Not being up on city ways, Uncle thinks he sees a chance to buy in a new bridge at auction, when Aunt Hetty mentions the Auction Bridge Mrs. Jarr is to hold. Now the Jarrs anticipate a very "exclusive" affair, as the famous Prof. Pinkfingers is to give a piano recital and Clara Mudridge, as well as the Struyvers, have consented to attend. Uncle, however, is not going to let a little thing like that deter him from getting a new bridge cheap, so, all dressed up in his "Sunday-go-to-meetings," he arrives in town and drops in right in the midst of the Jarrs' little "swagger" affair. Poor Mrs. Jarr almost swoons at sight of him, but her husband hustles Uncle off to the punch-bowl to keep him out of the parlor. When the card games start and Uncle hears the bidding, Jarr can't hold him from going and shouting right out loud. He creates quite a sensation and Mrs. Jarr, to smooth things over, whispers to Prof. Pinkfingers to play a selection. No sooner does the music start up than Uncle Henry, who feels rather tipsy from the punch, lets out a whoop and starts in to jig. Before Jarr gets him out by pretending to ask him to mail some letters, the place is in an uproar. Uncle Henry in his exhilarated condition mails the letters in the fire alarm box on the corner. Several pieces of apparatus and the Chief respond. Seeing Uncle, the Chief asks "Where is it?" and thinking he means the card-party, Uncle points out the Jarr apartment. The firemen get busy and just as a young lady starts to sing, she—in common with the others—receives full force of a stream of water from a hose nozzle. The party breaks up right there, and when the Chief learns who is to blame, Uncle Henry is given the "Water Cure" for his temporary insobriety.

PLAYING THE GAME (Special—Two Parts—June 1).—At a fashionable winter resort, Marcus Holmes and Hiram Gore, of Nebraska, two old millionaires, meet and renew friendship. Gore is introduced to Lilly, Holmes' daughter, and greatly pleased with her beauty and grace, Hiram whispers to Holmes a suggestion of a match between Lilly and his son, Reuben, who is now out in Nebraska on the farm. Holmes thinks that a fine idea, and Reuben is accordingly sent for. When Lilly hears of the project, she immediately decides that if Hiram is a "Rube," what must his farmer son be! So she scoffs at the idea of a match. Lilly does not know that Reuben is a Harvard graduate, and with several round-the-world trips to his credit, is anything but a "by Heck." As for the "Little farm," that is a twenty-thousand acre plot with fifteen thousand head of cattle feeding thereon. Reuben gains a hint from his father's message that the girl in the case thinks of him as a bumpkin, so he decides to have a little fun. He borrows a real "Rube" outfit, and, after alighting from his private car in the city, calls on Lilly in his ridiculous costume. It happens that both fathers are away at the time. Meanwhile, Lilly decides to shock the young countryman a little, and in that way put a quietus on the match. She piles on the rouge, puts on a rather abbreviated costume, and when Reuben arrives, he finds her nonchalantly puffing a cigarette. After many ludicrous happenings, Lilly offers him the family album and a cocktail, while she fights off a growing sickness from the cigarette. Both become a little suspicious that the other is faking, and Reuben leaves as soon as he dares to. That evening, dressed in immaculate evening clothes, they happen to meet at a fashionable reception, and the secret is out. Reuben, looking every inch the polished gentleman, leads Lilly, now a sweet and gentle lady, to the conservatory, proposes and is accepted. Then they go to their dads, and the "game" ends with a double benediction.

BUNNY IN BUNNYLAND (June 2).—Nearly everyone nowadays knows what motion picture cartoons are. This one is a novel and pleasing way of displaying the comical adventures of the jovial Mr. Bunny in his journey through Bunnyland. The drawings for this 1,000-foot funmaker were made by Carl Lederer, and depict the adventures of Mr. Bunny starting from his arrival at the steamship pier from one of the ocean liners. On his way to his home in an automobile, he runs over a couple of pedestrians, is chased by the police, and going by the statue of Napoleon in the park, that noble soldier actually raises his hand to his hat in salute. A little side-play is furnished when we see a remarkably natural car pounce on and capture a remarkably natural birdie. On his arrival in his home town, Bunny, while strolling through the streets, spies some luscious-looking pies placed on the window-sill by the cook of a neighboring house, and cautiously stealing up, abstracts one of them and runs off with it. The servant girl sees him and, climbing out of the window, chases him. She is persistent and Bunny even climbs to the roof of a barn to escape her. She then heaves the saucepan she is carrying at him and knocks him off the roof onto a pile of hay. He recovers, however, and she chases him again until, in desperation, he grabs a cow's tail and is soon tearing holes in the atmosphere behind the galloping animal. Over bridges, streams, hill and dale, they speed, until she suddenly turns, swallows him and bursts. The picture then dissolves out into a view of the artist, standing by piles of drawings as high as himself, while he shows you several of the drawings you have just witnessed, showing the slight changes from one drawing to another, and the method employed in making the cartoon.

SONNY JIM AT THE MARDI GRAS (June 3).—The fun starts when Sonny Jim hears his father reading of the thousands of children expected to enjoy the Coney Island's Mardi Gras parade on Saturday afternoon. He finds out from Mother Dear what a Mardi Gras is, and secretly determines to go, anyhow, when she tells him she has a Mother's Meeting that afternoon. Sonny "breaks the toy bank," and with Lily, his little colored friend, starts for the big amusement park. There we watch them getting a splendid birds's eye view of the island, the new free municipal baths, the long stretch of crowded ocean beach—certainly the most popular beach in the United States, and the Mardi Gras parade, the biggest feature of the carnival. First come the past presidents of the Mardi Gras Association, well known business men, then the following beautiful floats: "Army and Navy," "Peace," "Coney Island Life Guards," "Fairyland," "The States of Our Union," "The Landing of Columbus," "The Pilgrim Fathers," "The Boston Tea Party," "Washington Crossing the Delaware" and many others. After the parade, the wanderers enter Luna Park, and Sonny, after the exhaustion of his bank roll, finds all he has to do to get into any of the amusement is to say, "I'm Sonny Jim of the Vitagraph Company," and he is invariably escorted inside free of charge. At Steeplechase Park, another huge amusement place, his name also proves an open sesame, but Daddy and Mother Dear, nearly frantic, locate their lost son just as he and Lily are about to take a wild ride on the iron horses at Steeplechase. They march the pair home in a hurry, and Lily gets a spanking from her Mammy. Sonny Jim's father, however, has not the heart to chastise him when he promises to take him and Mother Dear along the next time he goes to the Mardi Gras.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Special—June 5).—Fearing investigation by the District Attorney, Haggerty, a canal contractor, draws money and papers from his bank and secrets them behind a sliding panel over the mantel in his home. While telephoning to the bank to recover some missing paper, he is overcome by a heart attack and is found dead by the bank cashier, Turner, who heard his cry for help over the phone. Meantime, Arthur, son of Haggerty, and his bride Fanchette, formerly a cabaret singer, who have that very day received the parental blessing, enter the room. All join in search for money which Turner feels sure must be concealed about the place. Their efforts are unavailing and as a result, Haggerty's company goes bankrupt, leaving the young couple penniless. Arthur becomes dissipated and as he is unable to make a living, Fanchette resumes her singing at the cabaret. Turner buys the Haggerty home at auction, and finally, after exhaustive search, discovers the hidden money. He at once proceeds to spend it in riotous living, and at the cabaret, becomes enamoured of Fanchette, not recognizing her as the daughter-in-law of Haggerty. Learning he has no visible source of income, she concludes he has found the missing money. She accepts his invitation to accompany him home, in order to discover the truth of her surmise. There Turner finds her watching him counting over his hoard near a loose panel in the fireplace, and maddened at her accusation of theft, tries to kill her. He trips, falls, and striking his head, is instantly killed. The police are called, and on learning the circumstances, Fanchette is allowed to go, but the affair gets into the papers and, Arthur, seeing it, refuses to listen to her explanation and casts her out. At the inquest, Arthur hears the whole story, learns that the major portion of the money may be recovered, and penitently follows Fanchette home, where he gains her forgiveness and renewed happiness follows.

The Master Model

Mr. W. W. Wright, owner of the Camp Theatre, Brown Station, New York, writes:

"I wish to say that during the past three years we have operated the STANDARD in the Camp Theatre and have found it to be the greatest machine on the market. During this time we have not found it necessary to spend one penny on repairs nor ever had a machine breakdown. I doubt if you will find a better projected picture than we have anywhere."

The American Standard MASTER MODEL is the lowest priced projector—quality considered. The money on repairs and breakdowns saved through the installation of a MASTER MODEL goes a long way towards considerably reducing the first cost, which first cost compares very favorably with the purchase price of other machines.

Gutzler, a professional burglar, and his partner, are plotting to crack the safe which contains money for the pay-roll. They encounter Jim, covet his tools and assault him. The crooks crack the safe. They are discovered by the watchman. Jim, recovering his senses, follows his assailants to the shop. As Gutzler, the crook, struggles with the watchman, Jim appears upon the scene. The watchman is felled by a blow from Gutzler, and the crooks disappear. Kearney, the detective, arrives with the police and Jim is arrested as a murderer.

Circumstantial evidence points to Jim as being the guilty man. The tools found in the office are his; thumb prints on the wrench are identified as his; he is given the "third degree" in all of its horrifying details, but he refuses to "confess" for he has nothing to divulge. Jim is found guilty of robbery and murder, and is sentenced to prison. In the state's prison, Jim's cell-mate is Bill Hawkins. His heart is touched when Jim prays. Bill, seeing an opportunity to escape, gives Jim $50. He puts Jim in a box which is carted away from the prison.

Detective Kearney, Jim's nemesis, is infuriated when he learns of Jim's escape. He arranges that Bill Hawkins be paroled, confident that Bill will lead the sleuth straight to the hiding place of Jim. In the months that pass, a new life is opened to Jim Montgomery. He becomes superintendent of a cotton mill in a distant town, and carries the name of Nelson. He loves Mollie Bryan, daughter of the mill president, and the love is mutual. The police send out reward offers for the "apprehension of Jim Montgomery, murderer and escaped convict." Bill Hawkins inserts an advertisement in a newspaper in order to find the whereabouts of his friend, Jim. Montgomery sees this advertisement and answers it.

Jim is torn betwixt conflicting emotions. He tells Mollie of his past, who says that she will fight the case with him. Bill Hawkins appears and Jim asks Bill to find the man guilty of the murder of the watchman, and also to tell Jim's mother to come to him. Detective Kearney has been keeping an eye on the home of Jim's mother. He is hovering near when Bill Hawkins arrives. Kearney follows Mrs. Montgomery.

In the meantime, Gutzler, the murderer, has had trouble with his affinity, Kate, of the Underworld. Kate vows to squeal as to the watchman's murder. Bill Hawkins is present. He realizes that Gutzler is the guilty man, overpowers the crook, and compels Gutzler to accompany him to Jim Montgomery's home. Jim Montgomery clasps his aged mother in his arms. Mollie is near and tears spring to her eyes. Kearney confronts Jim and his mother. "This is not your man," lies the mother. Kearney produces the tell-tale fatal thump-prints. Jim hides his hands behind his back, and then, with sudden resolve, he runs to the machine shop and plunges his right hand in the cog wheels of the machinery. Bill Hawkins appears with the trembling Gutzler who confesses to being the real murderer.

IN THE AMAZON JUNGLE (Jungle-Zoo Subject—May 29).—Silva, a young Spaniard, Linares and Arevalo, a Spanish half-breed, are interested in a rubber camp in South America. Silva is in love with Dolores, daughter of Arevalo. He tells her that his party is going further into the jungle than ever before to hunt for rubber. Linares, in drink, tells Arevalo that he wants his daughter when they return from the journey.

In the midst of the jungle Silva is seized with fever and Linares deserts him. A Jaguar attacks Linares. Silva, recovering from his illness, finds and ministers to Linares. Linares, conscience-stricken, says: "And in return for my treachery you saved my life."

THE JAGUAR TRAP (Jungle-Zoo Subject—May 22).—Joe Grant is the renegade husband of Lengua, a beautiful South African native girl. John Lewis is a South American trader, living with his daughter Grace. Ned Singleton helps Lewis in his work. Grant steals from Lewis' trading post and orders the abused Lengua to aid him in secreting the loot, and she refuses. She tells Lewis of Grant's misdeeds. Grant overhears her confession and vows revenge.

Lewis goes into the jungle to take medicine to some stricken natives. He is followed by Grant, who shoots him. Lewis, badly wounded, discovers a Jaguar near him, and in desperation ties his necktie around the wild beast's neck. The jaguar escapes and is found by Grace Lewis. Grant falls into a jaguar trap which already holds an imprisoned animal and is torn to pieces. Lewis is rescued and recovers his health.

THE BLOOD YOKE (Special—Two Parts—May 31).—Charles Drennen, Jet's guardian, gives a party in honor of Jet's twentieth birthday. Robert Fletcher is Jet's sweetheart. He asks Jet for her heart and hand. He has Jet's heart but she tells Robert: "My guardian made me promise never to become engaged without first consulting him." Robert is obdurate and with Jet they see her guardian. Drennen orders Jet to return Fletcher's ring. Fletcher says he is going to announce their engagement to the assembled guests. Drennen sternly forbids this action.

The principals are discovered by the other guests and to relieve an embarrassing situation Drennen, Jet's guardian, says: "We have just received some very bad news and Miss Drennen aks you to excuse her for tonight." Robert Fletcher refuses to leave with the others. He demands an explanation of the guardian's action. Drennen replies, "When I have told her, if she wishes, she may tell you." Drennen, the guardian, pondering in the library, reverts back to southern cotton fields and of the time he met Virginia, a mulatto girl, and of his promise to take care of her child. He awakens from the dream, knows he must do his duty and he calls to Jet and tells her the sordid story.

When Drennen indicates that he is Jet's father she denounces him. He tells her that such a marriage as she desires is impossible for sooner or later black blood will be sure to tell. Jet sees Robert. He again vows his passionate love for her. She then tells him that she is a mulatto. He turns from her involuntarily. She exclaims: "What a weight of sorrow, humiliation and shame there is in the blood yoke, the half-breed must wear!" Robert after a time, finds that his love for Jet is stronger than any race prejudice and he so writes her. She tells him that the marriage is impossible. In after years Jet has inherited Drennen's fortune and is succeeding in her mission work among colored people. Robert Fletcher, his wife, formerly Dolly Judson, are shown in their happy home. And as the picture fades, Jet is shown in resignation but content caring for those to whom she is bound by the blood yoke.

THE BUCKSKIN SHIRT (May 31).—Whistling Sandy, a prospector, once saved a woman from Indians, and she named her son after him. His little "pardner," as he calls the boy he has never seen, writes requesting him to furnish a buckskin shirt "like Buffalo Bill wore," so that he may play Injuns. Sandy makes the shirt with his own hands and boards the stage coach, refusing to entrust the precious parcel to the driver. Road agents hold up the stage, and in a desperate fight Sandy is wounded. The lead horses, cut loose by Sandy, serve to bring up the sheriff and his posse, who capture the surviving outlaws. Grateful passengers press money on their savior, but he tells them that he fought to save the shirt, and refuses all gifts except "a watch for the kid." The watch and the buckskin shirt arrive in time for Christmas, and the kid writes his big pard: "I wouldn't let mother wash the bloodstains or mend the bullet holes in the shirt. It has another stain when I cut my thumb trying to open the insides of the watch. Somehow that watch don't run well no more." Whistling Sandy, reading this incoherent note as he sits alone in his cabin, with his fighting arm in a sling, is not puzzled by it. He understands the heart of the boy, and smiles wistfully across space to his little pard.

THE MAID O' THE MOUNTAINS (Special—Two Parts—June 1).—Armed men, under command of the United States marshal, invade the mountain fastnesses in search of an illicit still. Blake, the moonshiner, and his partner, Jim, are in imminent peril of discovery when Blake, in a fit of ungovernable passion, shoots the marshal's son from ambush. The young man is only slightly wounded and soon recovers; but Jim makes Blake believe that his victim is dead, because he desires Mary Blake, the moonshiner's daughter. Mary is an unusual girl, far superior to her class, and she despises Jim.

In the woods she meets by chance a young man like none whom she has ever seen, and returns his love. He is Arthur Van Buren, a novelist on vacation. Haunted by fears of her father's threat to make her marry Jim, Mary one day yields to her sweetheart's entreaties and accompanies him to the little church, where they are married. Van Buren is summoned home by the sudden illness of his father, and Mary, left alone, is forced to attend a dance at which Jim plans to announce his engagement to her. There is a stormy scene at home, in which Blake thunders that Mary shall marry nobody but Jim. Her defiance of this mandate results in her being locked in for the night. She climbs through the window and escapes, leaving a note in which she says: "Even though I may have been deceived and deserted by the one I love, I will end it all rather than marry Jim."

Reaching the river, she pushes a boat into midstream, and leaves her sunbonnet dangling from a thwart to give the impression that she has fallen from the boat and drowned. The plan succeeds, and her parents mourn for her. At the river's edge Blake discovers Jim's trick on seeing the marshal's son ride by with the posse, and turns ferociously upon his former partner, who, cowed by Blake's pistol, skulks away. Van Buren's father dies, and the novelist returns to the mountains for Mary. Her father, believing him a scoundrel, attacks him; but Van Buren's evidence of grief over the news of Mary's death convinces the moonshiner of his innocence, and the mourners comfort each other. Back in town, Van Buren cannot find relief from his bereavement.

Time passes, then one day the novelist's car knocks down a woman with a baby in her arms. Van Buren, rushing to pick her up, looks into the face of his lost Mary. She is not badly hurt, but he takes her to a hospital, where she recovers and recognizes her husband. She tells him her adventures since the day they parted, ending with her discharge from the hospital where her baby was born. But of the hardships she has undergone she says little—that is her secret, a thing the mountain girl is proud to bear in memory as her silent tribute to the destiny which brought her into a new life. Tenderly he removes her to his home, where she is welcomed by his mother.

THE HEART OF AN ACTRESS (June 3).—The actress on vacation becomes interested in the young farmer to whom she is introduced by the daughter of her landlady. She does not know that, prior to her coming, the girl and the young man had been engaged. The youth falls in love with her, and the other girl, noting their devotion to each other, is heartbroken. She saves the actress from drowning, and sobs out her grief on her mother's breast. The actress overhears and leaves for the city at once. Her lover follows and, although she is entertaining a crowd of friends, pleads with her for an explanation. She laughs at him for having taken her seriously, then, after his indignant farewell, surprises her friends by bursting into tears. The farmer returns home and eventually marries his former sweetheart, for he is completely disillusioned about the woman who deluded him.

HER DORMANT LOVE (June 4).—The discontented wife of the young rancher does not realize that the unsatisfactory state of things is her fault. She has not ceased to love her husband because she has not yet begun to love him. His tenderness and courtesy antagonize her. One day, in his absence, a stranger approaches the house and asks for food. He is a fugitive—innocent, he protests, of the crime with which he is charged. She believes his protestations and aids him, at the risk of discovery when her husband returns unexpectedly. The rancher, returning to town, meets two deputies who are searching for the fugitive, and he accompanies them. Reaching his home, he tells his surprised wife that he intends to get the reward of one thousand dollars offered for Dandy Dick, who murdered a postmaster. To his astonishment, she clings to him and pleads with him not to risk his life. He does not know what is in her mind—how, within the hour, she has given Dandy Dick a gun and a cartridge belt, and now he will use them against the man she has begun to love. Swiftly she mounts a horse and sets out in pursuit of the outlaw. In the forest she cajoles him, yields to his kisses, so that she may snatch the deadly weapon from his belt. A struggle ensues, a shot is fired, and the riders, galloping up, finds her in danger. The desperado is overpowered, and the wife, with a sigh of thankfulness, falls into her husband's arms.

FOR HER FRIEND (June 5).—Mrs. Ashton is delighted when her husband brings home his friend Stanton, for she knows that Helen Grey is in love with the man, and she plans to make a match of it. But, womanlike, she does not tell her husband what is in her mind; and her tete-a-tetes with Stanton are open to misconstruction. Helen, for instance, sees her motoring with Stanton directly after he has broken an engagement with her on plea of business. She goes to Mrs. Ashton and is overjoyed to learn that the matron is not her rival, but her true friend. "Wait and see," the married woman counsels. Mrs. Ashton discharges her maid for gross carelessness, and the little vixen runs to Ashton with a tale which brings him out of his chair with a smothered oath. "Get out!" he cries indignantly; but after the girl is gone he begins to think. He finds a letter from Stanton to his wife which seems to indicate a clandestine meeting at a masked ball. He attends the ball and sees Stanton with his wife, whom he recognizes by her unique costume; but before he can reach the pair they are lost in the maze of dancers. Returning home, he waits until he hears them enter, then confronts them with his revolver. To his amazement, his wife enters suddenly from her room, clad in a peignoir. Stanton is as greatly astonished as he when the woman at his side unmasks and reveals the features of Helen Grey.

THE TRAIL OF THE UPPER YUKON (Two Parts—May 27).—Harrison Forbes, lawyer, is sent by his doctor to the north for his health. He cares little for life, his sweetheart being dead. Meanwhile, at Dismal Bar, a lonely and isolated trappers' villa, where the sole enjoyment is Grouse's Joint, a combination saloon, faro gallery and dance hall, a strange drama has been unfolding. Marcia, the fiery adventuress, has for the nineteenth time refused the marriage proposal of Hercules Bennet, card sharper and gunman.

"Garrick" is the strongest and most fiendishly cruel gold grubber that ever crossed the Yukon. Marcia is his favorite. Hercules stands looking malevolently at Marcia and her stalwart lover. As the girl sees Hercules her lips curl with just a bit of scorn and she turns Garrick to meet the glance of the other man and says: "That man has threatened me if I don't marry him." Garrick makes one start for Hercules, but the latter draws a pistol and holds him back. Harrison Forbes arrives at Dismal Bar. Marcia, coming down for some cigarettes for Garrick, meets him face to face. Forbes extends his hands with the glad cry, "Nell." Marcia is about to do likewise, when she suddenly remembers, and passes him. Forbes meets Hercules Bennet, who learns that Forbes has come north for his health. Forbes inquires and is informed that the girl is Marcia, keeper of the faro gallery, and Bennet's own sweetheart. Forbes learns that Bennet hates Garrick. Garrick leaves for the gold fields. Forbes strolls casually into the faro gallery, much to Marcia's dismay, and tells her that she might as well recognize him, that he knows her and begs her to think back over the times they once had during his school days at college. Marcia breaks down, thinking of her wasted life. Forbes, taking her in his arms, comforts her. Marcia places her arms about his neck and kisses him. Hercules Bennet plans a double revenge upon Marcia and Garrick. Bennet starting his plan into action, tells Forbes that he heard that the latter had made quite a conquest of Marcia's heart and learns from Forbes that they had known each other many years before.

A week passes. Forbes hangs about the faro gallery. Garrick returns and, of course, learns of Marcia's new lover. He plans to kill Forbes, but a better plan enters his mind. He pays marked attention to another of the women. Marcia turns her attentions to Hercules Bennet. Forbes becomes intoxicated. Marcia and he dance. Garrick looks on in mad anger, strides upon the floor and jerks Marcia away from Forbes. The latter closes in upon Garrick. Garrick tosses Forbes aside like a rag. Marcia slaps Garrick in the face and goes to Forbes' assistance. She and Bennet assist him up to the faro gallery. Garrick steals up the stairs where, peering into the dim lit room, sees Forbes and Marica in each other's arms. Garrick returns to the gold fields and lapses into a fever, where he is nursed by his faithful Indian guide, Semole. Hercules Bennet's revenge is only half complete.

Marcia's heart is nearly broken, for she cares for Big Garrick. She sends for Forbes and urges him to go back with her to civilization. Forbes has been made suspicious by Bennet's poisoned tongue. Garrick recovers and, with a set and determined purpose, tells Semole that the woman he loves will either leave Dismal Bar with him forever or she will die with him in one gloriously wild night. The two set out for Dismal Bar. Forbes visits Grouse's Joint with the purpose of meeting Marcia and telling her just what he thinks. Garrick enters with Semole. All the men about the bar are amazed. Hercules Bennet fidgets nervously in his chair. When the crowd answers his question, "Where is she?" by pointing above, Garrick strides from the bar to the dance floor. Forbes follows Marcia to the upper floor, where he watches the gaming. A violent quarrel arises between the two and Garrick slowly climbs the stairs and stops to listen. Forbes, partially intoxicated, accuses Marcia of being the plaything of the men of Dismal Bar.

Garrick goes to the bar, drains a whisky and then suddenly draws a gun and covers Bennet. Garrick calmly orders Semole to remove Bennet's shooting irons. Garrick unstraps his pistol belt and lays it on the bar. Garrick intends choking his poisonous tongue from his head. At bay, Bennet is forced to fight, and what follows is a fight to the finish. Forbes finishes his fiery accusations and Marcia turns her back just as Garrick, below, has picked Hercules Bennet from the floor and hurled him over the bar, smashing bottles and glasses. Marcia hurries down the stairs to see her lover, blood streaming from a cut over the eye, standing and awaiting the oncoming rush of Bennet, who holds in his hands a bottle. Semole, seeing his pal in danger, darts in and would knife Bennet, but Garrick screams, "Hold! this blackguard has defiled the purest and squarest woman in the world. He shall answer to me." Marcia screams and Garrick turns to receive the blow from the bottle across his shoulder. The blow staggers him, but he regains his balance and clinches with Bennet. Garrick turns to see what he thinks, apparently, is Marcia holding Forbes in her arms. He hurls the other over his shoulder to the floor, where he lies quite still. Then, calling Semole to his side, orders a drink and pours the whisky down the throat of his fallen opponent. Then the two go out.

Marcia has an idea. Donning her heaviest garments she goes out also. At early morning, Semole, driving the dog sledge, awakens Garrick to tell him that they are being followed by another sledge. Garrick, waiting with guns drawn, finds it to be Marcia, semi-conscious and delirious. Garrick forgets aught else but his great love for her and, taking her tenderly in his arms, starts off over the frozen snow. Forbes returns to his native city, but first he sends a note to the shack in the gold fields where Garrick and Marcia are staying, telling the girl that he is extremely sorry for what he said to her.

THE FORCE OF EXAMPLE (June 1).—Bob Burton, who has finished a law course at college, spends most of his time playing tennis and enjoying other outdoor sports. His sweetheart, Daisy Adams, also has a taste for outdoor games, and Bob spends most of his time with her. Bob's father, a corporation lawyer, decides to take Bob into partnership, and, if he proves equal to the task, to turn the entire law business over to his son. Bob wins case after case, and the clients increase to such an extent that Bob has to work night and day to keep up with his practice.

At last this gets on his nerves, and one day while his father is congratulating him upon the masterly way he handled a certain case, he rushes out of the office. He goes to his home and endeavors to quiet his nerves. In reading the evening paper he sees an account of how a dope fiend killed a girl. He throws the paper aside and goes into the air. He sees Daisy playing tennis and later finds she has two strings to her bow. Bob remonstrates with Daisy, but she resents his interference and continues to receive the attentions of other men. Bob becomes insanely jealous. He remembers the article about the dope fiend killing the girl.

Bob changes his clothes, so no one will recognize him, buys a drug and steals into Daisy's room at night and chloroforms her. Remorse overtakes him. Turn where he will, he sees the face of his dead sweetheart. He leaves town hurriedly. In the meantime, his description has been sent broadcast. When he leaves the train, in a small Western town, a detective follows and tells him he is under arrest. There is a struggle and Bob wakes to find his father waking him from a nightmare. At first Bob is dazed, then he remembers his dream and rushes to the house of his sweetheart and finds her alive and well. He tells her of the horrible dream he has had and they decide upon an early marriage as the picture fades out.

THE HEART OF CERISE (Three Parts—June 3).—Cerise Vignol is leading woman in the little Hyacinth theater, which lies on the left of the Seine. In love with Cerise is Pierre, leading man of the troupe. Whenever M. Marcel, the manager of the theater, has trouble with Cerise, he sends for Pierre, who quickly subdues the little leading woman, who is very termpermental. A friend of Pierre's is Fernand Delorme, a young advocate, who is also critic on La Figaro. Pierre presents Delorme to Cerise, who, at the time, is raging at Marcel, for the latter, at a moment's notice, has withdrawn a comedy and substituted the well-known "Camille."

Later, Pierre declares his love for Cerise and proposes marriage. She accepts Pierre, and immediately preparations are made for their marriage, which is slated for Christmas day. Christmas eve, while Cerise is admiring herself in her wedding gown, she is called to the window by Delorme, who tells her that he has wagered with a friend that he, the advocate, will before midnight, find a woman who has never tasted champagne, and asks her to accompany him to a cafe, around the corner, and assist him to win the bet. Seeing no harm in the request, Cerise accompanies Delorme. She finds the wager a myth, but Delorme refuses to permit her to go home. They quarrel and Cerise hurls a glass of wine into the face of Delorme. Delorme follows her to the street, where Cerise claws his face, at the same time threatening to repeat the performance should she ever meet him again. In her terror, Cerise loses her way. She finds succor in a convent.

Three days later Cerise is well enough to return to her lodgings. Instead of welcome, she is grieved to find her small room devoid of its furnishings. Hurrying to Pierre's room, she finds her picture besmeared with ink, and written across its face: "She is much blacker within." On the way downstairs Cerise meets Pierre, M. and Mme, Marcel, and members of the company, all of whom refuse to recognize her. Cerise leaves Paris and goes to Neuilly.

Eight years elapse. Cerise, now known as Cerise Lestooq, has become the "little mother" of the village. Suddenly an overzealous commissary of police charges her with having changed her name without leave and teaching a school without a license. Failing to diagnose chickenpox from smallpox, Cerise is arrested and brought to trial. It so happens that the judge is none other than Fernand Delorme. He is about to discharge Cerise, when, recognizing him, she leaps from the witness chair and, making good her threat, proceeds to claw his face. Delorme sentences her to thirty days in the local jail. In jail Cerise refuses to wear the prison garments. She goes to bed absolutely refusing to get up. As the days pass, Cerise, overcome with her disgrace, loses heart, and her physical condition becomes most alarming. In the interval, Cerise's case has aroused all of France. Pierre learns of her whereabouts, succeeds in obtaining for her a pardon and then sets out for Neuilly where he finds Cerise near death's door. Pierre delivers the pardon, declares his mistake, begs forgiveness, and the picture fades with the reunited lovers clasped in each other's arms.

LAEMMLE.

FROM ITALY'S SHORES (Two Parts—May 19).—Tony Gardella and his pretty wife, Angelica, sailed from Italy in the steerage of a Mediterranean liner for New York. They had a small sum saved up to give them a start in the new world. The ordeal of Ellis Island over and the trip to Battery Park on board the municipal ferry boat completed, Tony and Angelica found themselves in a little park in the shadows of the down-town scrapers. They slowly made their way across the historic park to a bench. Two shabbily dressed young men watched them from a distance. One of the pair approached Tony and smilingly offered to guide him to a respectable boarding house. Tony, without a friend in America, was only too glad to turn for counsel to the first stranger who approached. The two gangsters guided Tony to a street which passes under the great Brooklyn Bridge. In a tunnel leading under the bridge and up again to where the street continued on its way north the first gangster beckoned Tony to come ahead with him to make arrangements for lodging in a house which he assured him was just a short distance away. Tony unsuspectingly followed. When the gangster had assured himself that no one was about, he quickly pulled a short length of lead pipe from a hip pocket and brought it down on Tony's head. Without a sound, Tony sank to the pavement.

Meanwhile, the second gangster took Angelica to Park Row, and there, in the crowd before a bulletin board, disappeared. For a time Angelica wandered about, not knowing which way to turn. A well-dressed gentleman, walking through City Hall Park plaza, noticed her apparent confusion and stopped her. The gentleman took Angelica to the Italian Immigration Home, where she was given a warm meal and lodging. He promised to call next day, after making inquiries for her husband. Meanwhile Tony lay unconscious near the street curb. Strangers passed him by, thinking he was helplessly intoxicated. Finally a patrolman poked him with the end of his club and bade him move on. Tony staggered to his feet. He had lost all remembrance of his past life, of his wife and of the assault upon him. With fate guiding his footsteps, he made his way to the waterfront. By chance he wandered into the waterfront alley, at the end of which was a wooden shack. Inside were a number of rough looking characters, two of whom proved to be the gangsters who had assaulted him. For a moment the gangsters were tempted to shoot Tony down, but they soon saw that he was harmless, that all memory had left him and that he was, in their own words, "foolish in the head."

For several weeks, Tony acted as caretaker and cook in the shack. Meanwhile, his wife, Angelica, was found to have a wonderful voice. The choir in the immigrant home welcomed her, and the kind gentleman who had befriended her, engaged a vocal teacher to cultivate her voice. Not long after the gangsters whom Tony served, kidnapped Mr. Henderson's child and turned the latter over to Tony to safeguard. Wandering one day with his little charge in the residential section of the city, Tony entered the gates of a private home to the lawns where a garden party was in progress. And then, as Tony wandered through the garden, hand in hand with the little child, Angelica's benefactor suddenly clasped the little girl to his heart. He was about to ask Tony where he had found his kidnapped child when Tony spied his wife, in a splendid gown, singing to the assembled guests. Tony could not wait until she had finished the song, but broke in on the astonished gathering and clasped his wife in his arms.

THE SILENT COMMAND (Four Parts—June 2).—The story opens on the girl's eighteenth birthday. Her father, noting the change in her manner, ponders over the cause. His mind goes back to the time when the girl was a child and mentally unbalanced. Unable to pay for an operation, the father agrees to place her in the care of Dr. Sevani, who gives the girl relief from her malady, but under a stated condition that at the end of a certain time, he may use her as a hypnotic subject. The girl has a sweetheart who is a young lawyer and who is also a student of hypnotism. The girl's father calls upon the doctor and refuses to carry out his agreement.

That night, while seated by his desk, the father falls asleep. The doctor, in his own home, casts his will over the mind of the girl in her home. She goes down stairs and, to all appearances is about to kill her father with a paper knife, as he sleeps. The next morning his dead body is discovered by the butler and others who enter the room. The young lawyer hears of the murder and hurries to the house. The detectives, in making a search, find the blood-stained paper knife hidden in a hat box in a closet of the daughter's room. They cross-question her, and during the third degree, she faints. Believing her guilty, she, with the butler and house-maid, is placed under arrest.

The young lawyer, however, believes in her innocence and does some detective work on his own account. In the library he finds a button which he later sees is exactly like those on the waistcoat of the doctor's butler. This leads to other clues which bring about the conviction of the doctor. The young lawyer places the butler under his own hypnotic influence and learns from him exactly how the murder was committed; that the doctor used his influence over the butler, sending him to the house where he murdered the old man. The daughter, also under the doctor's influence, let the butler in and, after the deed, locked the door behind him and returned to her own room with the knife. As the story closes the girl takes a book on hypnotism from the lawyer and throws it into the open fireplace.

A LIFE IN THE BALANCE (Two Parts—June 4).—Farmer Brown's little daughter has a high fever. Brown calls in old Dr. Smiley who diagnoses the illness as a severe case of appendicitis, and orders an immediate operation. The farmer, noting the doctor's failing eyesight and enfeebled condition, refuses to allow him to perform it, and calls in a young doctor from the next village. The latter performs the operation successfully, and decides to move to the little hamlet, as he can make no money in his own town.

The old doctor's daughter, a young widow, will have nothing to do with him, until her little child accidentally receives a severe burn, and is brought back from the verge of the grave by the wonderful skill of the young doctor. Then, recognizing his true worth, she falls in love with him, and eventually becomes his wife.

YOU CAN'T ALWAYS TELL (Two Parts—May 28).—A young reporter, Harrington Spencer, who is an experienced feature story writer, finds times are quiet, and starts out at 3 o'clock in the morning to seek an inspiration. As he is walking to an all-night lunch room, his attention is arrested by a beautiful young girl who leaps from a taxicab unheedful of the cries of her middle-aged gentleman companion to return. He follows her, but is stopped by Spencer, to whom the young girl implores for help. Spencer accompanies Violet home, and by the time they reach the house a mutual attraction has come to them. The following day, Spencer reads a story in the paper relating how a charming young girl stole a diamond ring and a lot of money from a wealthy broker, while they were riding in a taxicab. Although the broker refused to divulge the name of the fair thief, Spencer arrives at the conclusion that Violet is involved in the affair, and is delegated by his editor to cover the incident.

Following the details he has collected, he subsequently comes to the fashionable residence of the broker whom he learns has died. Spencer returns to his room, where he finds a letter from Violet asking him to meet her at a secluded spot that night, as she has something important to tell him. He keeps the appointment, and the girl gives him a beautiful diamond lavalierre and a big diamond ring for safekeeping. The charm of Violet makes him forget his suspicions, and upon bidding her good night he tells her that inasmuch as her residence has the same front as the other houses next to it, he is likely to get into the wrong one and asks for the number. But Violet makes it clear to him that in the hallway of her home a piece of mistletoe hangs on the chandelier

Automatic Ticket Selling Machine & Cash Register Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen:

We write to advise you that the automatic ticket selling machine installed by your company in our Orpheum Theatre, on State Street, has been given a severe test for several months past, with the result that we are satisfied that it is a complete success. We find it to be very rapid, much more so than selling tickets by hand, and that it entails the minimum of attention in connection with its operation.

We contemplate placing several more in other theatres under our control.

Yours very truly,

and that the door is always open. In passing out Spencer takes a look at the number, but forgets it.

The next evening he goes to call upon Violet, but gets into the house of Joyce Carey as a result of the mistletoe decoration which that lady had put up to surprise her husband and of the open door. He goes upstairs and turns to the right and knocks on what he thinks is Violent's door. Responding to a call to come in he finds himself in a dark room, and a woman throws her arms around him and kisses him. Thinking that it is Violet he returns the affection, but great is the astonishment of both when the lights are turned on and they discover that they are strangers to each other. He is about to go when Mrs. Carey hears her husband coming up the stairs. She shoves him into another room, but he forgets his hat, which lies on the table. Spencer finds himself in the boudoir of a sleeping woman, from which he later escapes to the roof, and to the other house, which he enters through the skylight. Carey at first believes his wife is untrue to him, but she finally convinces him of her innocence.

Meanwhile a burglar has made his way into Violet's house, and seeing that she has no valuables of any account to steal is about to escape, when he hears Spencer coming down the stairs. Spencer passes him unseen, but the burglar is later caught by the police, who had been summoned. Spencer sees Violet and only then realizes the mistake he has made. She tells him that the jewels were her mother's, who died. Spencer is shown a story the next day at the office stating that the broker died by committing suicide and that he left a will revealing a daughter named Violet by a former marriage. Violet and Spencer were later married.

THE BETTER WAY (June 5).—Joshua Winters ekes out a precarious living in an antique shop by fixing watches and clocks. He, his mother and their adopted daughter live in the shop. It is tacitly understood that he and the girl are to be married some day and there is no room in the girl's mind for any one but Joshua. One day a rich young society girl pays a visit to the shop to have her watch fixed. She makes a powerful impression on the simple-minded Joshua and, in a spirit of fun, she invites him to come to her coming-out ball the same night.

There is great preparation getting him ready for the ball; his father's wedding suit is dug up for him and it is the loving hands of the adopted one which fixes it up for him. He arrives at the house and is shown into an anteroom where he catches a glimpse of the heiress and her lover in the next room, making love. He realizes his folly and silently slips out, going back to his humble home. He comes in and finds the adopted girl asleep in a chair fondling one of his coats. He is overcome with love for the one that is so faithful to him.

CELESTE (May 20).—Celeste and her tiny sister and brother are taken care of by James Wallace, a wealthy New Yorker, who receives a letter from the Belgian Relief Committee informing him that the three are Belgian refugees.

Mr. Wallace and his pretty young daughter meet Celeste and the children at the boat landing and bring them home. Here Celeste meets the handsome young son of the millionaire and they fall in love.

At a dance, given by the Wallaces, the daughter dresses Celeste in some of her finery and brings her down to the ball-room where all the boys become attracted to her but the son is favored. The story ends with their happy marriage.

THE SWINGING DOORS (Two Parts—June 6).—Jean Dumont, accompanied by his wife and young daughter, arrives in America to make their fortune. Jean has been in impoverished circumstances in his own country and, at the suggestion of his old friend, Felix Dreyfus, decides to emigrate. Jean gets work with his old friend, who runs a wine shop in partnership with one, Joseph Marie, who hates the newcomer and tries in every way possible to make him lose his position. Jean is getting on very nicely when misfortune overtakes him. He loses his wife and he and his daughter are left alone to make their way. Jean, in order that his daughter may be properly brought up, puts her in a convent and the brightest spot of her new life is the Sunday when he comes to visit her. She makes the acquaintance of all and earns their affection, especially that of Helen Levering, a young heiress, with whom she becomes a close chum.

Time passes and the easy-going Dreyfus falls into the hands of his creditors. The place is taken over and sold at auction. In the change of hands Jean loses out and is forced to look for another place. He walks the streets in vain, and his frugal savings are eaten up. At the convent Margot is beset with fears for her father. He has not been to see her for some time and she can only think of dire happenings to him. Her chum, noticing the change in her, takes her home with her for a fortnight and the girls meet many new friends and have a very happy time. Margot meets Billy Grew and there immediately springs up between them a love affair at first sight. Jean, down to his last penny, goes to an employment agency and gets work in a restaurant as dishwasher. He fools his daughter and tells her he is doing nicely, never letting her know to what a menial place he has fallen. With the expenses of Margot's schooling Jean's salary is eaten up and he can not get decent clothes to visit the convent, so remains away. Margot worries about him and calls at the store, but finds it vacant. Her father has even left his old lodgings and she is in despair. Billy meets her and, seeing her troubled, begs her to marry him. She promises and, both fatigued, drop into the nearest restaurant for refreshments.

This happens to be the place where Jean is working, unknown to them. Jean has been in a position to hear all the gossip of the other waiters concerning the patrons and feels a kind of disgrace at the way some of them act. One day he is told by one of the waiters that there is a "peach" dining with a rich young swell and, looking out, sees his own daughter. He is through the "swinging doors" that separate him from the other half of the world in a flash and angrily denounces the young man for giving Margot wine. Billy tries to explain that she was exhausted in searching for him, but he will not listen to him and savagely orders him out. Billy leaves and Margot turns to greet her father. Overcome with anger, he has suffered a stroke and is dying. She falls on her knees beside him, but he is beyond all aid. Outside, Billy sees an ambulance stop at the place and goes back, fearing a tragedy. He finds Margot beside what was her father and takes her into his arms as the picture fades out.

PARK JOHNNIES (June 6).—Mr. Rawsberry imagined he was getting away with a little flirtation when another park pest appeared and attempted to horn in on the affair. The lady was not paying any attention to either of them and she walked off quickly. They also walked off quickly after her, but Mr. Rawsberry made a mistake and walked into the police station where a hard-looking judge was sitting. He managed to walk out again but met another lady and followed her home. She lived in an apartment house and her husband had an ill temper.

A sharpshooter lived next door and a lady was taking a bath across the hall. Mr. Rawsberry would have liked to walk out of this, but this was impossible and instead he walked into the sharpshooter's room. The sharpshooter didn't like company and Mr. Rawsberry was forced to walk out again and into the bath room where the lady was. More unpleasantness arose when the park pest got into the same house and antagonized the sharpshooter. Everybody walked out again but back into the police station, where the hard-looking judge got good and sore at so many interruptions. A cop went through the wall, Mr. Rawsberry hit the judge on the stomach with a mallet, and the sharpshooter outstripped all his previous records as a marksman. Mr. Rawsberry was cured of flirtation.

A LIFE PHOTO TALK TO EXHIBITORS

WE have established a reputation as feature photoplay manufacturers second to none.

EACH of the productions referred to in the succeeding pages of this advertisement is in five parts—adaptations from stage plays, with legitimate stage stars in the lead, and a supporting cast acknowledged in the photoplay world to be in each instance the strongest of its kind.

ENHANCING the attractiveness of the productions, and in addition to the all absorbing stories, the wonderful acting, fidelity to detail and unusual scenic effects, there are the tinting and toning of the prints made by the Commercial Motion Pictures Co., Inc. (allied with the Life Photo Film Corporation), concededly the superior of all other motion picture laboratories in the country.

THE plays have been chosen because of their intense dramatic force and the strong vein of pathos and heart interest that runs throughout them all.

THE cast has been picked because of their acknowledged ability and well earned reputation on the legitimate and photoplay stage.

THE lithographs are all from art sketches, and the advertising matter such as to draw the public to the exhibitor.

IN producing we recognize the axiom:

"WE cannot make money for ourselves unless we produce features that will make money for the exhibitor."

THE RUNAWAY AUTO (On same reel with "Fighting the Hookworm in Egypt"—Released May 8).—Comic cartoon of auto running up and down hills, houses, climbing trees, steeples and finally reaching the moon. The auto then pursues a course about the solar system, taking in the rings of Saturn, with side trips to various stars, where it has some startling adventures.

HEARTS AND CLUBS (May 31).—Mrs. Screen, having joined the "Know-it-all Society," and being a suffragette, determines to run home affairs her own way. One evening Mr. Screen is persuaded to join a couple of friends at a dinner party, after which they go to the club. While in the cafe, he decides to 'phone his wife an excuse, and, while doing so, a lady takes the other 'phone and tells her husband that she is not coming home, as she is dining with a friend. Mrs. Screen overhears the lady 'phoning through the 'phone her husband is using and becomes suspicious that her hen-pecked husband is out with another woman. When he comes home with a couple of friends as a bodyguard very much inebriated, his wife meets them at the door with a poker reception and slams the door in her husband's face. He returns to the club to remain the night.

The next day the "K. I. A. Society" come to Mrs. Screen's house for a meeting and, noticing the good looking maid, suggest to Mrs. Screen that she is entirely too pretty to be a maid, and recommend her dismissal. That same afternoon the maid is discharged and while she is going down the street she meets Mr. Screen and a friend on their way home. She tells them that she is "fired" and that Mrs. Screen is in an awful rage. The friend suggests that he disguise himself and apply for the position as maid so that he can make it easy for Mr. Screen. Everything is arranged and he applies for the position, and is accepted.

That evening the new maid arrives. After her duties are explained to her, she retires to her room to unlock the trunk to allow Mr. Screen to get out, much the worse for the journey. Screen retires. Mrs. Screen is about to do the same, when she hears a man coughing. Suspecting burglars, she goes to the maid's room to assist her but, before entering, peeps through the keyhole, only to see her husband in bed with the new "maid." She 'phones for the police. They enter the room and find that it is a huge joke on Mrs. Screen. A reconciliation follows.

THE LOVER'S LUCKY PREDICAMENT (June 5).—"Capture Alfalfa Bill or lose your job," is the order the county trustees hand out to Sheriff Higgins. Sheriff Higgins is in a very grouchy mood, when he discovers the penniless grocery clerk sparking his daughter, Dolly. The clerk gets bounced quick. Dolly's kid sister, Lillian, is dispatched with a note to the forlorn clerk. "Be under my window at four o'clock and we'll elope," the note reads. Lillian accidentally finds the two letters and roughishly tells the whole scheme to dad, the sheriff.

Alfalfa Bill, in search of loot, prowls about the sheriff's house. It is nearing four o'clock. Dolly is all packed up ready to elope. She spies the muffled figure of Bill and tosses out her grip. Bill loots the grip, much pleased at the finery. Dolly tosses out the blanket rope and is preparing to climb out the window, when her angry dad, watching from hiding, halts her. Bill, meanwhile, has climbed into Dolly's room and is looting it clean, when the grocery clerk shows up. Fearing foul play at the sight of Dolly's scattered finery, he climbs up to her window and discovers Bill.

A fight ensues, in which Bill is finally penned under a heavy dresser. When the angry sheriff gains entry, the clerk shows him to his capture and the sheriff gladly permits Dolly and her suitor to marry. The happy young couple find that they have earned a reward of $500, besides. The kid sister gets a good spanking for her mischievousness.

HOMER CROY ALONG THE NILE (On the same reel with the picture entitled "When Cupid Crossed the Bay," and a synopsis of which you will find on page 1150 of the issue dated May 15. This reel was released on May 18).—Homer Croy and his guides visit an Egyptian mosque. Before entering the guide is compelled to bathe three times. The visitors find that they must "tip" every priest. Later they are seen leaving the mosque. Then they journey to houses showing inscriptions on the doors. They are told that every Mohammedan who visits Mecca on his return takes time to draw a picture of what he has seen over his door.

Next is a scene showing a trip on the Nile and a visit to Cairo. A Punch and Judy show, ferris wheel and other amusements, thousands of years old, are then shown.

TOO MANY CROOKS (June 1).—The boy and his sweetheart are madly in love. Her father tries in every way to break off the match. At last he hires a detective to watch him and prevent the matter from going any further. The girl overhears her father's conversation over the telephone, however, and she and her lover outwit the old man and his detective and get married. Two famous crooks, a man and a woman, rob a large jewelry store downtown and are getting off with the plunder when they are discovered and chased by the detective. The newlyweds go into a hotel which is the same one that the crooks have slipped into to elude their pursuers.

The newlyweds see the detective and, thinking he is the one hired by their fathers, rush on the roof, to escape him. He mistakes them for the crooks and chases them over the roof, when finally he comes upon the two real crooks who have taken to the roof, too. A merry chase again ensues, the detective chasing first one couple and then the other. Finally both couples elude him and make off, each bent on reaching a steamer which is about to sail. The two crooks arrive first and, going to a stateroom, the woman hides the diamonds in her shoe. The newlyweds arrive soon after and seek passage. Everything is fixed up when again they see the detective. The chase starts again, this time over the boat. The detective almost nabs them, when the crooks come up on deck and he switches his chase over to them. At last he captures the crooks and searches them, but can find nothing.

Thinking he has got the wrong couple, he captures the newlyweds and searches them. All in vain. He is about to give up in despair when his wonderful sense of smell comes to his assistance. He finds the envelope the diamonds were in and immediately recognizes the smell of diamonds. He is hot on the smell which leads him to the woman crook. He again searches her, this time by the sense of smell. The clue leads to her shoe, where he finally locates the stolen jewelry. The girl's father appears at this instant and after explanations he forgives the loving couple and, thankful that the right crooks have been caught, takes them to his heart.

WHEN THEY WERE CO-EDS (June 4).—Eddie and Vic have a liking for each other. They are bothered by the crowd and slip off to the rustic bridge at the river for a quiet little chat, but, alas, the other boys and girls are anxious to hear the chat and are hid in every conceivable place around. There are too many for the ground and a landslide occurs, precipitating most of them in the river. All are rescued and return to college to receive a panning from the professor.

Eddie is made the joke of the boys and, in desperation, offers to bet five dollars that he will go to the girl's side of the school and see them that night. The others jump at the chance to take up the bet. Eddie calls to his aid a small boy, who goes to the girls' dormitory and tells them of Eddie's bet and asks if he may borrow a suit of clothes from one of them. He gets the clothes and gives them to Eddie. Meanwhile, the janitor has been spying on the boys and hears the bet. He immediately goes to the girls' dormitory and hides underneath one of the beds to await developments.

The girls have told Eddie to come ahead and prepare a big spread for him. He disguises himself and gives the signal. The girls get out the trusty rope and pull him up. He comes in and takes off his disguise. The janitor sees this and, running in, denounces him. There is quite a scrap, the weapons being everything from pillows to pie. The teachers and professors awake but the girls all get safely back and when the inspection is made they are all "asleep." Eddie, too, gets back in time and the boys also are all "asleep" when the professor comes in. The janitor has stoutly insisted that Eddie was in the girls' room, but the professor makes the rounds himself and sees them all apparently asleep, so tells the janitor he evidently has been drinking too much.

STERLING.

THE BATTLE OF RUNNING BULL (Two Parts—May 20).—Tin Ear Charlie learned from old Colonel Bunk that none but a hero might marry his daughter, Dot. And forthwith Charlie enlisted under the pea-green banner. He had no idea that war would be declared when he enlisted and Tin Ear Charlie was ordered to the front. In Lieut. Wampus, Tin Ear Charlie had a rival. Fed from infancy on cream puffs and charlotte russes, Lieut. Wampus had grown to an awe-inspiring size around the waist line. When he learned that Tin Ear Charlie was to be a private in his company, Lieut. Wampus immediately set the new recruit to digging sink holes for the kitchen squad and when he was doing guard duty in the rain Tin Ear Charlie had lots of sport marching around in the mud with Lieut. Wampus at his heels. The steady diet of canned Chicago meat and stockyards stew threatened to put him in the hospital.

The Pea-Green Army to which Tin Ear Charlie and Lieut. Wampus were assigned was as fine a body of cripples as a grape-juice government could rake together from the Bowery. Dot felt mighty proud of Tin Ear Charlie the first time she saw him in a uniform. On several occasions, out of pure pity, she saved Charlie from bayonetting himself with the business end of his rifle and taught him the rudiments of warfare in her father's back yard, showing him how to seek cover behind chicken coops and other natural points of vantage. The pea-green regular army, when it went to war in the backyards of Long Island numbered about a hundred thousand. Each member of it, however, felt himself quite capable of driving the invading enemy into the sea, despite the fact that the latter had eight million men at its disposal. The pea-green fleet, with a half dozen serviceable submarines, most of which, made in 1893, were in dry-dock at the outbreak of war, was quickly disposed of by the enemy from over sea and then came the eight million soldiers in transports guarded by the unsinkable submarines of the enemy. The over-seas army landed in Long Island and at once commenced their attack on New York. Back of the enemy's lines at Montauk Point, the enemy put up their .42 centimeter Croup guns at a trajectory angle of 45 degrees and as Charlie ran back toward New York a big shell filled with poisonous asafetida fell to the ground near him. The enemy were close behind so Charlie picked up the shell to save his own hide and threw it among them. The entire army was wiped out, but Charley was hit by a stray chunk of asafetida and taken to the base hospital. Lieut. Wampus tried to make it appear that Charlie was a coward but Dot and Col. Bunk wouldn't hear of it and soon after the daughter of the regiment and her hero were married.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND RELATIONS (Two Parts—May 31).—A newly married couple are boarding. The unsanitary cooking, together with tough meat and their general environment, make the young couple so disgusted that they decide to go housekeeping. In the paper they find an ad, reading: "Why board when you can rent one of these bungalows for $15 per month?" They look over the house, rent it and are so very pleased that they each in turn invite their relatives to come and see their new home. They are just about settled in their new home when all the relatives come to visit them on the very same day. The children raise the mischief, running all through the house, and making it a point to run into grandpa' gouty foot.

The wife and husband don't know what to do next, when all yell together that they want something to eat. The wife goes to the kitchen and makes up endless sandwiches, which the husband distributes in each room of the entire house to members of their families. After their having eaten, the husband goes to the wife and tells her she has fed all her family. She becomes indignant, saying she did not invite them and that he did. They quarrel as the picture fades. Night approaches. The families still remain, going to sleep all over the house. In the living room they are on the piano, mantelpiece, lounge and chairs. In the dining room hubby finds them on every piece of furniture available. Aunty keeps most of the members of the dining room awake by insisting upon talking in her sleep. In the kitchen every place, even the sink and stoves are occupied. The children occupy the couple's bedroom, but her brother, wanting a drink, goes to the bathroom, to find gouty grandpa and uncle in there. He plays a trick on grandpa by turning on the shower, and grandpa is finally awakened, but cannot get out of the tub. Hubby and wife are seen on the cellar steps very tired. Hubby proposes to go back to boarding. Wife assents and they make a hasty exit, leaving a sign on the post, telling their visitors to stay as long as the rent is paid, for they are on their way back to their old boarding house.

THE JUDGMENT OF MEN (June 4).—A man rides by a beautifully and carefully tended garden. He reaches over the wall and picks a flower. Soon it withers in the sun. Its color fades and its fragrance is gone. He tosses it away. In the little room made sacred by her love The Girl rocked the baby and listened for the footstep of The Man—that never came. It was almost impossible to believe that she had been deserted, but now there could no longer be any doubt. She took her baby and walked to her father's home. He opened it and told her to be gone. So she went to the bridge and jumped off with her baby. Men came in boats and dragged her from the river, still clinging to the little, cold, dead baby. Men took her and threw her into prison. A man arraigned her with the righteous and scathing invective. Twelve men sat in judgment upon her. And a man pronounced the sentence—"For the term of your natural life."

It was ten years since the doors of the prison closed behind her and Young Mary had become almost Old Mary. For ten years she had sat alone in her cell as the dark came on, and visions of the past came upon the walls in panoramic review. Always there was the face of her baby as it smiled in its cradle and the poor, starved mother-heart wondered if she would ever see or hear or touch a child again. For years she had been a trusty. The longing for freedom long since died, if, indeed, she ever had it after she entered the prison. But as she passed through the outer hall one day the door stood open, and there was a cloak and bonnet on the rack. She stood irresolute for a moment, and then she walked out. She hurried along the road and mechanically felt in the pocket of the cloak. A small purse with a few coins. They meant nothing to her. She had not seen any money for years. Out from a cottage came a little five-year-old girl; Mary knelt in the road and she took the baby into her arms. And then they took hands and walked away together.

They come upon one of those little shops that one often sees in the border country. In the cob-webbed window, among the miscellany, were some shop-worn toys and the child stopped to look at them. Mary counted the coins in her purse and they hurried inside. When they came out Mary carried the bundle and the baby ran along at her side. By this time Mary's escape had been discovered and men with guns set out from the prison to find her. Mary and the little girl found a glade in the woods among the thick carpets and tapestries of the vines and mosses and there was a flat rock that made a splendid table. There Mary set the table and arranged the toys; and they played with them. The grim keepers and the frantic mother searched the woods. At last they found her. Mary was the convict again. She had had her little happy day and she was willing to go back to the gray walls. They took her back, not unkindly. The great iron doors closed behind her for the last time. And The Man, who happened to be riding by, sleek and well fed and prosperous, in his automobile, stopped his car and complimented the keepers on the recapture of a dangerous criminal.

A New Program Carefully Planned and Perfected

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

Now Ready for Printing — 100,000 Feet of Negative, Sufficient for Six Weekly Programs, Made for This Service by Competent Directors, Players and Photographers.

NOT a crank was turned until this program was carefully and completely planned. With all details worked out to a nicety the production work was taken up. Ample time was allowed for the making of all photoplays. None were considered but those who had by previous performances proved their ability. The result is a well balanced, good-in-every-detail service.

This organization is complete in every way, is fully financed, there is no stock for sale, nor is it in any sense a stock promotion proposition.

The Manufacturers, Who Are They?

—June 1).—Ola Humphrey, the actress, appears at the Khedival Opera House in Cairo. At a supper, given in her honor, she meets Prince Ibrahim Hassan, an Egyptian, and Mr. Stanley Clyde, an American. Both men are interested in the woman, but Prince Hassan is so infatuated that he will not even permit the interruption of a letter from his cousin, the Khedive, and destroys the message unread. Small scraps of it, however, bearing such words as "Moslem uprising" and "Ottoman Empire will fight" attract the attention of young Stanley Clyde. He contrives to piece the letter together, realizing its importance and hastens to Sir Godfrey, consul-general for the Protectorate, and the man most concerned. But before the consul can depart to give warning, his Arab servant, Mehemid Ali, in reality a spy, administers a drug, and Sir Godfrey is rendered unconscious. Meanwhile, the guests at the supper party are entertained by dancing girls and Bedouin musicians. One of the dancers confronts Prince Hassan, and he recognizes her as Zohra, his former sweetheart.

The Prince's mother, in the secluded realms of her harem, hears disquieting rumors of her son's infatuation for an actress. She at once decides that he must marry his cousin, the Princess Uarda. The Prince demurs, but, under threat of losing his share of his mother's estate, finally consents to the wedding. On the night of his marriage, Prince Hassan sees the actress in an Egyptian play and wearing the costume of his own country. This determines him upon the course he is to pursue. He causes two letters and two bouquets of purple iris to be dispatched. The first reaches the Princess Uarda and the message begs that she will permit the ceremony to take place at the hour of midnight. The other letter is for the actress. She is asked to spell her answer in the purple iris. The American girl assents and wears the flowers as token of her love. The letter and the iris are seen by Zohra. She pleads with Prince Hassan to marry her and save her from dishonor. He becomes impatient and angrily strikes the girl, who falls unconscious. Before the Prince leaves the theater, Ila Humphrey has promised to become his wife.

Midnight comes. Princess Uarda waits in the harem surrounded by her women. At the theater, Miss Humphrey bids good-bye to the old life and, accomplished by two eunuchs, drives to the palace. Stanley Clyde, coming to warn her of the impending danger, sees her departure, but fails to recognize her in the harem costume. As he enters the theater, he hears screams and, hastening to the rescue, finds Bessie, the actress's maid, struggling with a Nubian slave. She is rescued by Clyde. Zohra, regaining consciousness, learns that Miss Humphrey has gone to the palace to marry Hassan. Seizing a veil and some iris, and exclaiming that she is dressed like the actress, she tears away, vowing to kill Miss Humphrey and be married in her place. Stanley Clyde endeavors to stop her, but before he can overtake the mad girl, he is seized and overpowered by secret service spies, who, warned by Mehemid Ali, have taken this measure to silence the man who knows too much.

At the palace, Princess Uarda receives a message from the Prince begging her to meet him alone in the Blue Room. Confident and trusting, she obeys. Miss Humphrey arrives at the palace. She is conducted to a room with velvet curtains. Growing nervous and frightened at the strange surroundings, she endeavors to escape, only to find her way blocked by huge Nubian slaves. The curtains suddenly part, and she sees before her a room filled with people gathered to witness the marriage. The costumes of Miss Humphrey and Princess are alike and as they are both heavily veiled, the transformation is not discovered. The actress, seeing the welcome extended her, is overjoyed and the ceremony at once takes place. Meanwhile, Princess Uarda discovers the door of the Blue Room bolted. Going to the window, she leans over the balcony and Zohra, crouched among the flowers, sees her and mistakes her for the actress. With knife drawn, she steathily approaches. Princess Uarda, frantic with fear, and determined to escape, endeavors to climb from the balcony. Her long veil catches and she falls headlong to the garden. Here Zohra finds her, dead among the flowers. Above the scenes of this tragedy, alone with his bride in the softly lighted harem Prince Hassan lifts the veil from the fair face of the American girl.

THE REFUGEE (May 21).—On a ship coming to America from Holland recently, was Mrs. Hollinsworth, a wealthy widow of New York. One evening, in her stateroom, she accidentally dropped a candle. Before she could extinguish it, a hand reached from under the berth and snuffed out the flame. Terrified, Mrs. Hollinsworth dared not attempt any ordinary means of escape. But, writing a note, begging some one to come to her rescue, she dropped it through the open porthole. It was found by a French nobleman. He called upon the first person he met for assistance, who happened to be a titled German. But, agreeing to make common cause against an unknown enemy, they hastened together to the widow's stateroom. The "burglar" under the bed was hauled into the light. He was an eight-year-old boy refugee from Belgium. Though both the German and the Frenchman insisted upon taking the boy under their protection, the American woman soon had them convinced that this was a case in which the United States had every right to intervene. So the cool-headed litle stowaway found a home with Mrs. Hollinsworth.

DAUGHTER OF KINGS (May 23).—J. Courtleigh Brice, son of a self-made father, lives abroad where he does little except spend the money his father has left and lament the fact that he is not of noble birth. Some business connected with his estate brings him back to America. On the wharf he is buttonholed by reporters, who put him down as one who finds American women "loud," and quote his declaration that he will marry no one except "a titled gentlewoman." The interview especially entertains a certain Julie King, in Brice's home town. She happens to have visiting her, a Princess from abroad, and the two put their heads together to give the young man a shock. On J. Courtleigh's arrival, they exchange names and titles. In due time, the misguided Brice proposes to the American girl, who, he supposes, is the princess. When his house of cards comes crashing down upon his head, and the young millionaire finds out how he has been duped, he returns to Europe.

FAIRY FERN SEED (Two Parts—May 25).—Susanna Cross, envious of her wealthy girl chum, Rosalie Wood, whose home she shares, encourages Rosalie to elope with James Porter. Mrs. Wood, unable to forgive her daughter, now lavishes everything upon the unscrupulous Susanna. Rosalie's husband is poor, and each year life becomes a more bitter struggle. At last, Rosalie dies, leaving Porter heart-broken. When his twin daughters, Marion and Madeline, are twelve, the father also dies. They are told that they are to be sent to an institution. The two little girls have their heads full of fairy lore. Remembering the story of the princess who put fern seed in her shoes so that she could send her spirit self with a message of love to her dear prince, they decide that they will do the same, so that their spirit selves may find the grandmother whom they never have seen, and win her love and protection. Everybody—whether they believe in fairies or not—should see the happy conclusion of this picture.

THE ANGEL IN THE MASK (May 30).—A masked girl sits in a store window in New York, writing cards to demonstrate a fountain pen. Everybody is curious about her because she is so pretty, and she becomes nicknamed "the Angel in the Mask." A certain boy from the country, Bob Singleton, chances to pass the window. He is forlorn because he cannot get work. The masked girl holds up a card, on which is written a word of friendly encouragement. At the boarding-house where the boy is staying a robbery and murder are committed. Incriminating evidence is found in Singleton's room, and he is taken to prison. Meanwhile, Mary Berthalon is the only person in the house who believes in Singleton's innocence. A few days later the landlady and Dick Strokes pause at the fountain-pen window. She points to a certain pen which she wants, with a finger on which gleams a curiously-wrought ring. Then they enter the store. The masked girl comes out of the window and waits on them. She writes a card to each of them—to the woman, "Thou shalt not steal," and to the man, "Thou shalt not kill." Then, snatching off the mask, she reveals herself as Mary Berthalon. Already the police are at the door. Mary has recognized on the landlady's hand a ring which

RELIANCE.

THE CLIFF GIRL (May 24).—Walter Grant, a young geologist, goes to the cliffs on a geological expedition. He pitches the tent in a sheltered spot and settles down to his work. Soon he meets Margot, the cliff girl, who lives with her father, Basil, in a rude cabin in the shadow of the cliff. An easy comradeship springs up between them, which, on Margot's part, ripens into love for the young geologist. Grant is engaged to Alice Hazen, a society girl, back in the city. It has been more a marriage of convenience than a love match.

One day when Grant passes Margot's cabin she runs out and throws her arms around his neck in an impetuous manner. Basil, watching from the cabin, misconstrues this action and follows the young couple as they walk through the woods. He inadvertently steps over the edge of the cliff and is killed. Margot is left alone in the world and instinctively turns to her new friend, Walter Grant. She goes to his camp and asks him to let her stay, as the old cabin is so lonely, now that her father is gone.

Alice Hazen, with her father and brother, Tom, comes from the city on the Hazen yacht to see Grant in his camp. They arrive at the spot just as the wild little cliff girl is embracing Grant in an outburst of love and gratitude.. Alice misconstrues her actions and is very cool to Grant. He tells them, however, that Margot is absolutely nothing to him and that he is going back to the city with them. When Margot hears this she bursts out crying and rushes off to her little cabin. Tom, Alice's brother, a young roue, has admired the youth and beauty of Margot, and quietly follows her off to her cabin. As Grant shows Alice and her father around his camp he thinks of the little cliff girl and a tender feeling steals over him. He resolves to slip off and see her and, pretending to go for some water, he leaves for Margot's hut.

Tom follows Margot into the hut and, under pretense of sympathizing with her, attempts to caress her. She instinctively fears him and wards him off. He struggles with her. Grant arrives in time to save her and then discovers that he really loves the cliff girl. Alice and her people go back to the city, and Grant remains at the cliffs.

THE RACE LOVE (Two Parts—June 5).—White Dove, an Indian girl, is loved by Grey Crag, the chief's son, and also by John Walton, a white man, sojourning in the wilderness. Walton and the young brave are fast friends, especially the Indian, who is bound to the white man by ties of gratitude. For, on one occasion, Walton has helped him win out in a struggle against a bunch of settlement loafers. At the same time, the Indian fears Walton's influence upon his sweetheart. Things reach a crisis and the two men meet to talk it over. They agree that each shall put his plea before White Dove and then abide by her choice. The three keep tryst before a campfire on the mountain. First Walton pictures to the girl the life in civilization which he can give her. She is fascinated and filled with a strange longing. Then Grey Crag describes the glories of her ancient race, and of how they and their children are destined to restore the honor of their nation. He tells her that, in the white man's world, she will be an alien, and an outcast from her own people, and recalls to her the beauty and grandeur of their home in the forest. The Indian's eloquence wins Walton realizes that in the Indian girl love of race is stronger than personal affection. And it seems to him that, after all this is as it should be. So he goes away.

MAJESTIC.

THE RIGHTFUL THEFT (May 25).—Widow Brown is about to be dispossessed by Obadiah Grabb, who holds a mortgage on her cottage. Sunday comes, and the widow fears she must stay home from church, as she has not a cent to put in the collection. Her small son, Paul, playing in the front yard, digs up an old penny. They go to meeting and the widow drops the ancient coin in the plate. Deacon Strout notices the act. Being an amateur coin collector, he recognizes this ancient piece as one of great value. The church is staggering under a debt, and the widow is on the brink of homelessness. So the deacon feels justified in palming the money. He is caught, however, and asked to resign from the board of trustees. Strout sends the ancient penny to the museum in the city and receives in return fifteen hundred dollars, which he gives to the widow. She keeps one hundred dollars, and pays off the mortgage. The five hundred she gives the Deacon as his share. Strout liquidates the church debt, and is gratefully received back into the fold.

THE LIVING DEATH (Two Parts—June 6).—Dr. Farrell loves with a consuming selfishness his only child, Naida. When the young men begin to pay her too marked attentions, Farrell takes his daughter to a beautiful, but lonely place on the California coast, where he can be reasonably sure of keeping her to himself. But the romantic fates are not to be so easily forestalled. Tom O'Day arrives at Santa Lina to open his bungalow. He and Naida meet and fall deeply in love. The doctor discovers that Santa Lina is built over the buried remains of an old leper colony. A few days later he and Naida come upon O'Day, who has just unearthed, near his cottage, a man's skull. O'Day takes a whimsical delight in his find, carries it home and puts it among his treasures. When the doctor discovers that, on account of his opposition, the two young people are plotting a runaway match, he takes a terrible step. O'Day is suffering from a rash on his wrists. It is evident to Farrell that he has been poisoned by nettles or ivy. But the doctor tells him that he is a leper; that, probably, the skull has conveyed to him the disease. O'Day, in an agony of despair, but unwilling to take the coward's way, rushes to his motor-boat to sail at once for the isolation island. Naida runs after him. He tries to escape. The girl flings herself into the water, and Tom is obliged to take her into the boat to save her from drowning. The two start on their way together. But, before they reach the leper colony, Dr. Farrell overtakes them. He confesses his untruthful diagnosis. Realizing now what her love for Tom means to Naida, the father withdraws his objections and the young folks are married.

A GOLDEN RAINBOW (June 2).—Eric Hughes and Harry Rice, two employees of John Milton, owner of an assaying and refining plant in a western mining town, are rivals for the hand of their employer's daughter. In character and habits the two men are a direct comparison, Eric being an amateur naturalist in his spare time, while Harry prefers the more exciting life of the saloons and gambling houses. For this reason Mollie Milton shows a preference for Eric, arousing Harry's intense hatred. On a day preceding a holiday, a large shipment of gold dust is received for refining and locked away in the safe by Eric, whom his employer entrusts with the key. Believing that he can brand his rival as thief, Harry steals the key from Eric's pocket and that night succeeds in making off with the contents of the safe, hiding his loot among the stones at the foot of a waterfall.

The next day being a holiday, Eric goes forth with net and accoutrements, hoping to achieve his ambition and capture a rare and much-prized specimen of butterfly. In the shade of a nearby tree, Molly is entertaining her small brother, Bobby, with a wonderful fairy story of a Prince who followed a magic golden butterfly to the end of the rainbow, where he finds the traditional bag of gold. As the story is finished Eric comes upon them and displays his long-sought prize. However, Molly's tender heart champions the captive butterfly and she persuades Eric to free it. Bobby, his mind full of the fairy story, unnoticed by the lovers, pursues the golden moth until it leads him to the waterfall, where the child, seeing the rainbow caused by the spray, considers himself at his journey's end. Here he stumbles upon Harry's cache of hidden gold.

In the meantime the assayer has paid a visit to his office and discovered his loss. Finding Eric's key on the floor, he calls the sheriff and the pair start to find the naturalist. When the sheriff and Milton come upon the lovers, Eric is led away to jail, protesting his innocence, while the father tries to calm his daughter. In the excitement Bobby has not been missed but he is discovered down the road loudly calling to his father. Mr. Milton pays little heed to the excited story of his son, but he is so insistent that he and Mollie finally agree to follow him to the discovered treasure. Led by the child they arrive in sight of the waterfall, where, to their surprise, they discover Harry in the act of removing the hidden gold. The situation is now perfectly clear to the assayer, and, drawing a gun, he covers the crouching thief, while he sends Mollie with a note to the sheriff. Shortly afterward Eric is freed and Harry takes his place in jail. The gold is recovered and Mollie and her lover reach their heart's desire.

THE GUIDING LIGHT (June 4).—The secluded life of Robert, a sturdy young light-house keeper and his wife Anna, is interrupted by a visit from a stranger, Harry Nelson, a sportsman and novelist, in search of adventure. The sportsman is given a hearty welcome and, while Robert goes to catch a mess of fish for dinner, Anna entertains the stranger with a tour of the light-house and the jagged cliffs surrounding it. In return Nelson tells the wife stories of his life in the city with all its gayety and excitement. After a homely but tasteful meal, enlivened by the stranger's conversation, the time for parting comes with regret to all concerned, and wishes for future meetings. Anna especially realizes that an event has happened in her lonely life as she watches Nelson go from her desolated island home.

Some few days later the young husband is compelled to row to the mainland for provisions, and during his absence Nelson again visits the light-house, this time with the definite intention of spending a few hours in the company of the keeper's wife. Anna also expresses pleasure at seeing the gentlemanly sportsman again and, although her husband is absent, listens to his veiled love making, until she is carried away with his promises of a life of enjoyment and travel in the world's amusement and recreation centers, and agrees to accompany him. As the trim little yacht pulls anchor Anna has a change of heart and begs her companion to take her back at least long enough to tend the guiding light until her husband returns, but this Nelson refuses to do. His refusal brings the erring wife to the realization of her mistake and without further words she risks her life in a daring swim to the rocky island growing faint in the distance. Staggering to the light she has hardly enough strength to light the lamp, but finally succeeds and as the powerful rays light up the treacherous reefs, she discovers her husband's dory driven by the white-capped sea to sure destruction. Gathering what strength she has left the now frantic wife hurries to that part of the shore, where her husband is fighting for life and arrives just in time to rescue him.

BRONCHO.

THE CONVERSION OF FROSTY BLAKE (Two Parts—June 2).—Rev. Horace Brightray, pastor of a New England village church, is ordered by his physician to seek another climate. He goes to Agua Caliente, where he attempts to hold services in the hotel dining room, but nobody attends excepting the hotel clerk and maid, and a dance hall girl, Bubbles. The proprietor of the Legal Tender saloon is very bitter toward Horace and commands them not to attend services. Horace is soon out of funds and is ejected from the hotel. Sick and hopeless, he goes to the Legal Tender and slaps Frosty across the face with his hat, feeling sure it will mean death to him. Bubbles protects him and as he faints away, Frosty tells Bubbles he will make one play and if Horace wins, Bubbles may take care of him, but if he loses ——. Horace wins and Bubbles takes him to Frosty's cabin where she nurses him back to health.

As a great concession, Frosty tells Horace he can have the dance hall for one hour on Sunday to hold services. All the dance hall girls and gamblers attend the service. That night the Horned Toad, a bad man from Bitter Creek, comes into town. He reels into the saloon and roars at Frosty to line up at the bar. Frosty calmly draws his gun and points to the door and the Horned Toad backs out. Outside, he steps to the window and shoots at Frosty. Frosty runs from the saloon and chases the Horned Toad. Horned Toad runs up behind a tree in front of Horace's cabin and as Frosty approaches, Horace steps from the cabin, between Frosty and the Horned Toad, and is shot. Before he passes out, Frosty asks him to marry him and Bubbles, and Horace performs the ceremony. Frosty afterwards closes the Legal Tender, tacking up a notice that the Legal Tender is closed forever by the order of God.

DOMINO.

HOSTAGE OF THE NORTH (Two Parts—May 27).—The Strolling Players' Company are stranded in Dawson City, and Andrews, the leading man, with his wife, Edna, is almost penniless. They start for the gold country. Tired and hopeless after a long tramp, they come upon the shack of Dan Shaw. The old miner takes them in, and trustingly shows them a bag of nuggets which, for many years, he has been gathering to buy a home in California. Andrews and Edna take heart. They start out anew upon their quest. Andrews dies. Edna, to support herself and baby, becomes a dance hall girl. Because she resents the insults of the patrons, she is fired by the manager. In despair, she happens again upon Dan Shaw. That night she steals from him the bag of nuggets. But her conscience constrains her next day to return them. Meanwhile, Dan has been planning to sacrifice his dream of a home in California for the sake of Edna and her child. Putting the nuggets in another bag, so that she may not recognize them as his, he places them on her doorstep with a note, purporting to come from an old friend of her husband's. Edna takes the child and joyfully returns to her home in the East. Dan Shaw is left alone —to die in the gold country.

THE SCALES OF JUSTICE (Two Parts—June 3).—Judge Landsey sees in Walter Parker, brought before him for burglary, the makings of a man, and grants him his freedom to begin life over again. Parker gives the judge his word to live on the square. A few weeks later, the judge, entering his home late one evening, hears his wife, Viola, earnestly pleading with Paul Armstrong, a young clubman, in the drawing-room. He recalls how of late he had been forced, by absorption in his work, to neglect her. Doubtless, this is the outcome. The blow stuns him. Meanwhile, Parker, who has not kept to his promise, climbs up the fire-escape, not knowing that the house he had selected to rob is the home of the judge who pardoned him. On discovering the judge within, he beats a hasty retreat. Parker is in the act of getting away, when he is grabbed by a policeman. A struggle ensues. Parker shoots the officer and runs. By this time Viola has persuaded her visitor to leave the house by the fire-escape. He is seen and arrested for the murder of the policeman. At the trial, the jury declare Armstrong guilty. Judge Landsey is called upon to pronounce the sentence. He knows the man is innocent, but to establish this means involving his wife's reputation. The judge is under a tremendous strain. Viola discovers the dilemma, and begs her husband to substantiate the truth. She really is innocent, and so she has no fear of being misunderstood, she says. Her husband, and his honor, are dearer to her than life. At the last moment Parker comes forward and confesses.

HER EASTER HAT (Two Parts—May 28).—Bill Kane and his daughter, Molly, live in a New England fishing village. Bill is a big domineering fisherman and objects to Molly spending her money frivolously on fine apparel. The girl is almost in rags and has no dresses or hats fit to wear. Marie, the village coquette, blossoms forth in new raiment and wins Molly's fickle sweetheart, Jim, away from her. Several days later while passing the window of the village millinery store, Molly sees a pretty hat on display and covets it. The milliner tells Molly that since she is unable to pay cash for it she will let her have it on time. Fearing her father's wrath, Molly fears to buy and returns home without it.

A party of city picnickers on a launch ride put in at the port to fix a balky launch motor, and while the men are repairing the motor, the women go sightseeing through the village. They are beautifully gowned and passing Molly inquire the way to the village curio store. Molly directs them to it. Envious of the fine clothes of the city visitors and realizing that it was the lure of fine clothes that has taken her sweetheart from her, Molly resolves to brave her father's wrath and buy the hat on time. That same afternoon Bill Kane is paid his month's wages—some eighty dollars. Bill goes to the tavern with a group of fishermen friends and gets drunk. He returns home and catches Molly with the new hat. Bill returns the hat to the milliner and Molly is heart-broken.

Struve, a peddler, comes to the village and sells Molly a yard of satin ribbon. The peddler is warned not to apply at the tavern for shelter, as the tavern has an evil reputation and he is liable to be robbed. Struve applies to Bill Kane's cottage for shelter for the night and offers to pay well for the hospitality. Bill consents. The peddler has been followed to Bill Kane's cottage by two toughs who covet the peddler's money and pack. They break into the house at midnight and rob Kane of his eighty dollars and prepare to rob the peddler. They are heard by Molly at work and she attacks them. Her cries bring assistance and the thieves are captured. Molly is seriously hurt in the fight and is put to bed unconscious. The following morning sorry for his treatment of Molly, Bill Kane buys the hat from the milliner and presents it to Molly. The peddler also makes her a valuable present. Jim, Molly's lover, upon being told of the robbery and that Molly is badly hurt, hurries up to the cottage and begs Molly to forgive him and take him back into her affections, and Molly complies.

LITTLE CHRYSANTHEMUM (June 1).—Mrs Leighton and daughter, Marion, while traveling in Japan met a little Japanese orphan girl, Little Chrysanthemum, whom they prevailed to accompany them to the United States. Little Chrysanthemum is made much of by Mrs. Leighton's social friends. Mrs. Leighton's son, Bob, is especially thoughtful and showers upon the little Japanese girl attentions of every kind which she mistakes for love. Bob Leighton is engaged to be married and upon its announcement Little Chrysanthemum realizes the false position in which she now stands, and the weight of this grief causes her to take her own life. The climax is reached when the household discover the little Japanese girl dead with a note of explanation beside her.

THE FAILURE (Reliance—Four Parts—May). Tom Warder, a reporter, gets a story published exposing Isaac Shuman, a theatrical manager, who has insulted a young girl. Shuman flees town. Three years later he returns. Tom and Ruth Shipman, an actress, have since been married, and Tom has written a play which Ruth persuades Shuman's principal star is just the thing for her. When Shuman reads the play he copies the principal scenes, and returns the play, saying he cannot use it. Tom's play is accepted by another manager, but Shuman produces first. Tom's story of theft is disbelieved, and, eventually, through trickery and a free application of bribes, Shuman succeeds in getting Tom sent to the penitentiary.

During Tom's enforced absence, Ruth, his wife, and the baby have a difficult time. Ruth tries to return to the stage, but Shuman's influence keeps her out of a job. In the end the baby dies, and Ruth tries to work in a laundry. Her strength fails her, and, feeling that her death is near, she writes Tom to come and see her. Tom is now a trusty, but he cannot get permission to leave the penitentiary even to see his dying wife. Hopeless, he breaks his parole and the guards give chase. In the woods he finds the body of a suicide with whom he changes clothes. Putting the body in his convict garb, he causes it to float down stream. The guards see this body, which they have shot at, go over the falls and give up the hunt. Meanwhile Tom reaches town only to find his wife is dead. He seeks Shuman and kills himself in a way that makes it appear that the theatrical manager murdered him, and the picture closes, showing Shuman in a cell with the electric chair before him.

GHOSTS (Reliance—Five Parts—May).—Helen and Manders are in love and wish to marry. Her parents object to his poverty and want her to marry Alving, a notorious rake, who is wealthy and powerful. Manders protests. The family physician also objects because of the result such a match would mean on the children; but Helen's parents laugh at these new-fangled notions. The doctor then appeals to Alving, who laughs him to scorn. Urged on by her parents, ambitious Helen, disregarding all warnings, marries Alving. Later Helen discovers a liaison between her husband and a young married woman. She contemplates leaving her husband and seeks her physician's advice, but he declines to give it. She then sees her pastor, who advises her to adhere to convention and her husband. Meanwhile, the young married woman gives birth to a child by Alving, and the physician agrees to bring the father to see it and keep the real parentage secret. Helen also bears a boy named Oswald. When Oswald is nine, Alving dies, a victim of his excesses.

Oswald lives a clean life and studies art, but at times his mind seems affected. The mother remembers the doctor's warnings, but rejects them as silly. Knowing the boy has lived a clean life, however, she soon comes to accept the physician's predictions as fact, and schemes to save her son by marrying him to a sweet young girl. She picks out the daughter of her husband's paramour, and, totally unaware of the girl's parentage, draws the two young people together. They fall deeply in love and when their engagement is announced the physician feels duty-bound to tell Oswald the truth, and does so. Realizing that he must protect the girl he loves and embittered by his inheritance, Oswald plunges into mad excesses which estrange his fiancee. He grows to hate his father and then his mother for the past they have imbedded in his nature, and his mother slowly realizes the truth of the physician's predictions. Horror stricken, she watches the gradual rotting of her son's brain. The girl, meanwhile, has retired to a convent. Against the oncoming insanity, Oswald fortifies himself with poison, but one day his mother finds him sitting on the floor, paralyzed, playing with the sunbeams, and runs for the doctor. During her absence, he succeeds in reaching the poison and mother and physician find him dead. As her only hope of consolation, the mother turns to the physician.

RED TAPE (Two Parts—Ideal—May 24).—In the second rate boarding house filled with down and out clerks and "small time" theatrical people, lives "The Failure," so called because he is an unsuccesssful inventor. In spite of his lack of success, he is the patron saint of the other roomers because of his kindness. When his great invention is completed, he finds that "red tape" keeps him from giving it to humanity. Desperate at last, he surprises the successful man who has refused him admittance to his office in his own home, locks him, gagged and bound, in his garret, and goes forth, in the successful man's clothes. Success comes to the successful, so the failure finds that in the guise of a successful man he is accepted, and his invention is acclaimed to the world. But with wealth and fame lying at his feet, "The Failure" sends his money to his old friends at the boarding house, releases the successful man from the garret, takes off his wig and false whiskers which have given him the appearance of success, and goes out again into the world, asking that his invention be accredited only to "A Failure."

BUMPED FOR FAIR (Superba—May 25).—After Hank and Yank have parted for the day at their dog-kennel home door, Hank is struck by an automobile belonging to a nervous man named Smith. Hank is taken to Smith's home. He pretends to be badly hurt, and is told to ask for anything he wants. While convalescing, he is rolled into the park by the maid. Here Yank comes upon him. The tramps embrace, and Yank is advised to try Hank's method of obtaining a good meal. This Yank does, standing in the way of Smith's automobile. He pretends to be hurt, is carried to a hospital. The impostor is caught stealing food from another patient's plate by Smith. The latter and the doctor plan a joke. They hold a conference, in audible tones, and the doctor says he will have to amputate Yank's limb. Hereupon the tramp dives from the window. He does not stop until he reaches the kennel where he meets Hank, breathless, too, having been chased by the police for having tried to kiss Mrs. Smith.

WAR AT HOME (Two Parts—Grandin—May 26).—Ethel Mason and her husband, Ralph, find themselves in the midst of domestic strife over Ethel's poodle "Cutey." After several unsuccessful attempts to get rid of the dog, Ralph takes it back to the store where it was purchased. His act leads to a grand quarrel which sends them both "home to mother." Ethel's friend, Flora, persuades the young wife before she has gone very far to return home, but Ralph stays away, and the breach remains unhealed. At last Flora suggests that Ethel write Ralph to come home, pretending that he is the father of a son. At the same time Ralph decides to capitulate and wires that he is coming home with "Cutey." The girls find the telegram when they arrive home from a search for a baby, which they had stolen from a nursemaid. A scramble follows. The messenger boy unconsciously aids their cause by arriving to tell them that he has lost their telegram. They manage to keep the baby from Ralph's sight and return it to its nurse after a near arrest. After Ralph's surrender, he and Ethel settle down to domestic felicity with "Cutey."

LOVE AND PIES (Starlight—May 27).—The widow's pies disappear from her back fence. The deacon, rival with the farmer for the widow's hand, sees a chance to put his rival out of the running. He takes a pie and a bottle of chloroform to the farmer's room and when the rival lover enters, he puts him to sleep and rubs pie all over his face. In the process of making the farmer out as the pie stealer, the deacon drops his watch which is picked up by a tramp hiding under the bed. The farmer is convicted and put into prison. The tramp is sent to prison, too. He recognizes the farmer, who knows nothing about why he has thus been rudely cast behind the bars, and divulges the deacon's plot. The farmer and the tramp are released and hasten to the widow's house, where they arrive just in time to break up a happy little wedding party. The watch proves the tramp's tale, and the farmer and the deacon exchange places.

SHE COULDN'T GET AWAY FROM IT (Luna—May 27).—The money mad old maid tries to escape the tuneful air of "Tipperary" which seems to follow her every place she goes. She leaves for the west, thinking she can leave the strain behind, but the same Irish melody greets her ears on arrival at the ranch. She finds a little girl under her table crying. Learning that the unhappy little thing has no parents, she picks the child in her arms to soothe it to sleep. On discovering that she herself is humming "Tipperary," the humor of the situation awakens a kinder feeling in the woman's breast, and she returns to her home, after adopting the little girl, and lets "Tipperary" run riot.

THE LAW OF NATURE (Two Parts—Pyramid—May 29).—Ernest Morton, a young man of wealth and position, finds after marriage with his wife, that she does not wish to have children. Learning that the great wish of his wife is to be unfulfilled, and discovering one day his wife in an admirer's arms, Morton divorces Helen. Time passes and he meets and loves a girl with the instincts of motherhood strong in her. He marries her and when a child is born, his happiness is very great. Helen, on the other hand, finds, after a time, that the man for whom she gave up her husband is only a drunken degenerate, and life grows sadder and sadder, until she discovers that she is to have a child. In characteristic cruelty she is deserted by the father of her unborn child. After the birth of the child, she overhears the doctor say that she must die. Forcing strength, she takes the baby to the home of her first husband, and leaves it with a note in the automobile waiting outside the door, asking that he keep it, and returns to her room, unknown and alone, to die, while the happy wife of the man who had loved her first took her child to her heart.

THE SMUGGLER'S DAUGHTER (Two Parts—Premier—May 28).—Lillian's father and Bill are discovered in a conference by the sheriff, who know them to be opium smugglers. The officer of the law is shot, and the men are forced to get out of the country. They leave with Lillian in a prairie schooner. The injured sheriff is found by Fred, a young secret service agent who has just come to the country, who leaves him in the hands of a friend, and goes on to capture the smugglers. Lillian's

BETTY IN SEARCH OF A THRILL (Bosworth —5 parts—May 17). When Betty comes from St. Ursula's convent to visit her uncle's family in their town house in New York they are careful to hide all extreme, low-necked gowns, racy French novels and other worldly things which might shock the devout little convent girl. But Betty is by no means the demure little Miss Innocence they expect. She has had her fill of convent life. Even the possibility of a match with one of the finest young clubmen in New York does not satisfy her to remain a part of the Smart Fifth avenue life where by right of birth and fortune she belongs. One bright day the impulsive Betty disappears from her uncle's mansion, and from that time leads the life of a working girl.

She starts as a salesgirl in the dress goods section of a big department store, but the floor walker gets too familiar and she has to quit. She applies for a position in the chorus at the Gaiety theater, and the stage manager gives her a tryout as a dancer and though Betty dances beautifully the stage manager insists she first give him a little fee from her petty lips, and Betty spurns it. Discouraged, Betty accepts the chance to give a trial performance at a local cabaret, but as she comes tangoing down the aisle one of the young rounders at a table tries to pull her on his knee. He is promptly knocked sprawling by the devoted clubman who has come there to forget his blues in the lights and music. But the cafe manager discharges her. He wants a different kind of girl.

Disgusted at being insulted by employers, Betty next dons boy's clothes and passes as a young man, but a thick-headed policeman, searching for a young apache who has murdered his sweetheart, has to blunder into Betty's satchel in which she has been carrying her former feminine attire together with some of her own long, black curls which she has shorn to heighten the effect of her disguise. On seeing the unusual contents, the policeman at once sees visions of "the body," and poor Betty is placed under arrest. But Betty at last eludes him, only to be followed to a boarding house where she applies for a room. There the maid is smitten by Betty's "boyish charm" and when the police close in on the "boy" the maid loyally conceals her till they are gone.

It is a case of from the frying pan into the fire, however, and Betty is decoyed into a gambling house by a "steerer." She is being fleeced of her money when her erstwhile pursuers become temporarily her rescuers, and she escapes when the police raid the establishment. But they recognize her and resume their pursuit. When they overtake her, Betty dives into a lagoon but arrives, exhausted, on the other side only to find the police awaiting her. What a relief, then, for Betty to wake and find it has all been but a dream. So when the clubman returns from the garden with some roses as a peace offering the better to renew his pleadings he finds Betty has undergone a profound change. Betty finds her glamor, in the long run, but it is the glamor of her own home and husband, and not the feverish romance of an Arabian Nights tale.

THE SLIM PRINCESS (Essanay—Four Parts —May 24). Gloom overcasts the palace of Count Selim Nalagaski, governor general of Morovenia, Turkey. All efforts to make the count's elder daughter, the Princess Kalora, fat, synonymous with beauty in that country, failed. Popova, the Princess's tutor, devised a terrible revenge because the count called him a Christian dog. He was feeding the princess pickles to keep her thin. The beaux of the country paid assidious court to the Princess Jeneka, the younger daughter, but the laws of the country forbade her marrying before her elder sister.

As a last resort the count ordered the slim princess to stuff her clothing with pillows and invited all the dandies to a garden party. But they were deceived. They tried the weight of the princess and found her as light as a feather. Come uninvited to the party Alexander H. Pike, an American millionaire. He falls in love with the princess and comforted her by showing her pictures in a magazine, proving that in his country slim persons are considered most beautiful. But Pike was discovered by the count's slaves and barely escaped with his life. He returned to America.

The count found an advertisement in a magazine Pike had dropped in his flight, which promised to make thin persons fat. He sent the princess to America to try the cure. There she met Pike, who renews his courtship. But the impatient count learns from the ambassador that the princess was getting no fatter and ordered her to return. Pike followed. The young American then visited the court, told the count he was Grand Exalted Ruler of a fraternal order, a Knight Templar and King of the Hoo Hoos and asked for the hand of his daughter. The count, much impressed with the titles, consented, especially after he found that it was the slim princess the American loved. The cloud of gloom was lifted from the palace and Pike prepared to leave with the princess for America, where she could have all the varieties of pickles to suit her taste.

WORLD FILM CORP.

BEWARE THE DOG (World Comedy Star Film Corp.—April 26).—Geoffrey Ladd, on the eve of his marriage, discovers that he is penniless. A gold mine in which he was interested proves to be merely a hole in the ground. A ship containing treasure is lost at sea. Unwilling to expose his bride to poverty and not willing to confess his condition, he is about to take his own life when he is restrained by Dr. Isidore Mullen, a scientist, who has discovered what he believes to be a panacea for hydrophobia. His laboratory tests have proven acceptable to other scientists, but everybody is anxious to see the stuff tried on a man.

Mullen learns of the predicament of Ladd and makes him the following proposition: He will give Ladd $100,000 cash. In return, Ladd is to allows himself to be bitten by a dog innoculated with hydrophobia. The doctor is then to test his panacea upon him. He is keen upon having Ladd, as the latter is a man of reputation and position and the success of the experiment would establish his discovery on a firm basis. It is made a part of the agreement that in order to prevent the mind of Ladd from working and causing him to think he has hydrophobia that the bite shall be made surreptitiously. Ladd accepts the doctor's proposition and the latter gives him $100,000. The money saves Ladd. A new deal on the mine makes him a millionaire—the ship comes in and he's in fine shape.

Then he realizes that, with everything to live for, wealth, a young bride and all sorts of happiness, he is in danger of death and his fear of dogs becomes morbid. A toy Pom can make him climb a tree. One day he meets a girl friend who springs a toy dog on him out of a muff. He runs away to her surprise. Next day he meets a girl who has a fur boa with animal heads on it about her neck. He mistakes one of these for a dog, and he thinks he is bitten. He tries to find Doctor Mullen and learns that the latter has disappeared. When he is half insane with fright, the doctor turns up. Ladd's relief turns to worse horror, when the doctor tells him that the serum has not been a success. He thinks his death is certain and almost imagines himself into hydrophobia when the doctor tells him he never had him bitten and the girl with the fur boa showing up, Ladd sees how he was fooled. He gives the doctor the $100,000 back and all bets are called off.

"NEWMAN"
Brass Frames and Rails

"A theatre without a 'front' is like a suit of clothes without buttons," says W. H. Rudolph, of the Majestic Theatre, Dayton, O.—"Both are an absolute necessity. Your 'fronts' are far superior to any I have ever seen, and in my lobby and every hotel in Dayton the Newman Brass Easels prominently carry the Majestic announcements."

When buying, be sure the name "Newman" appears on all frames.

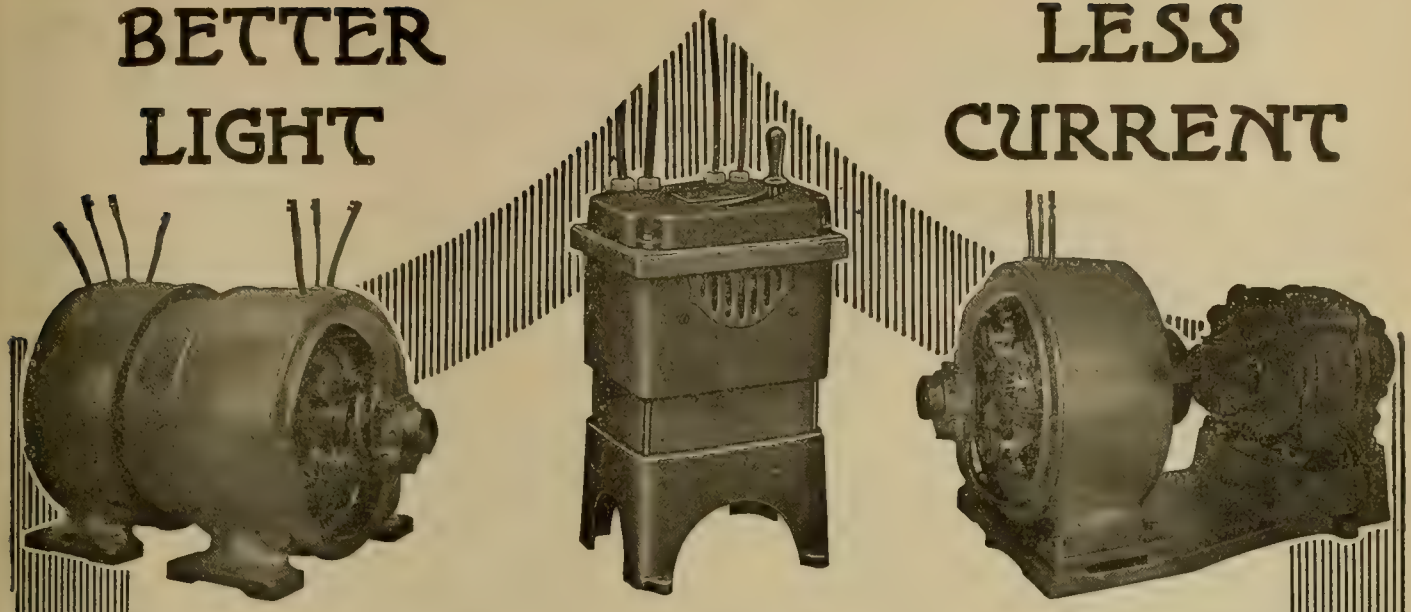
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

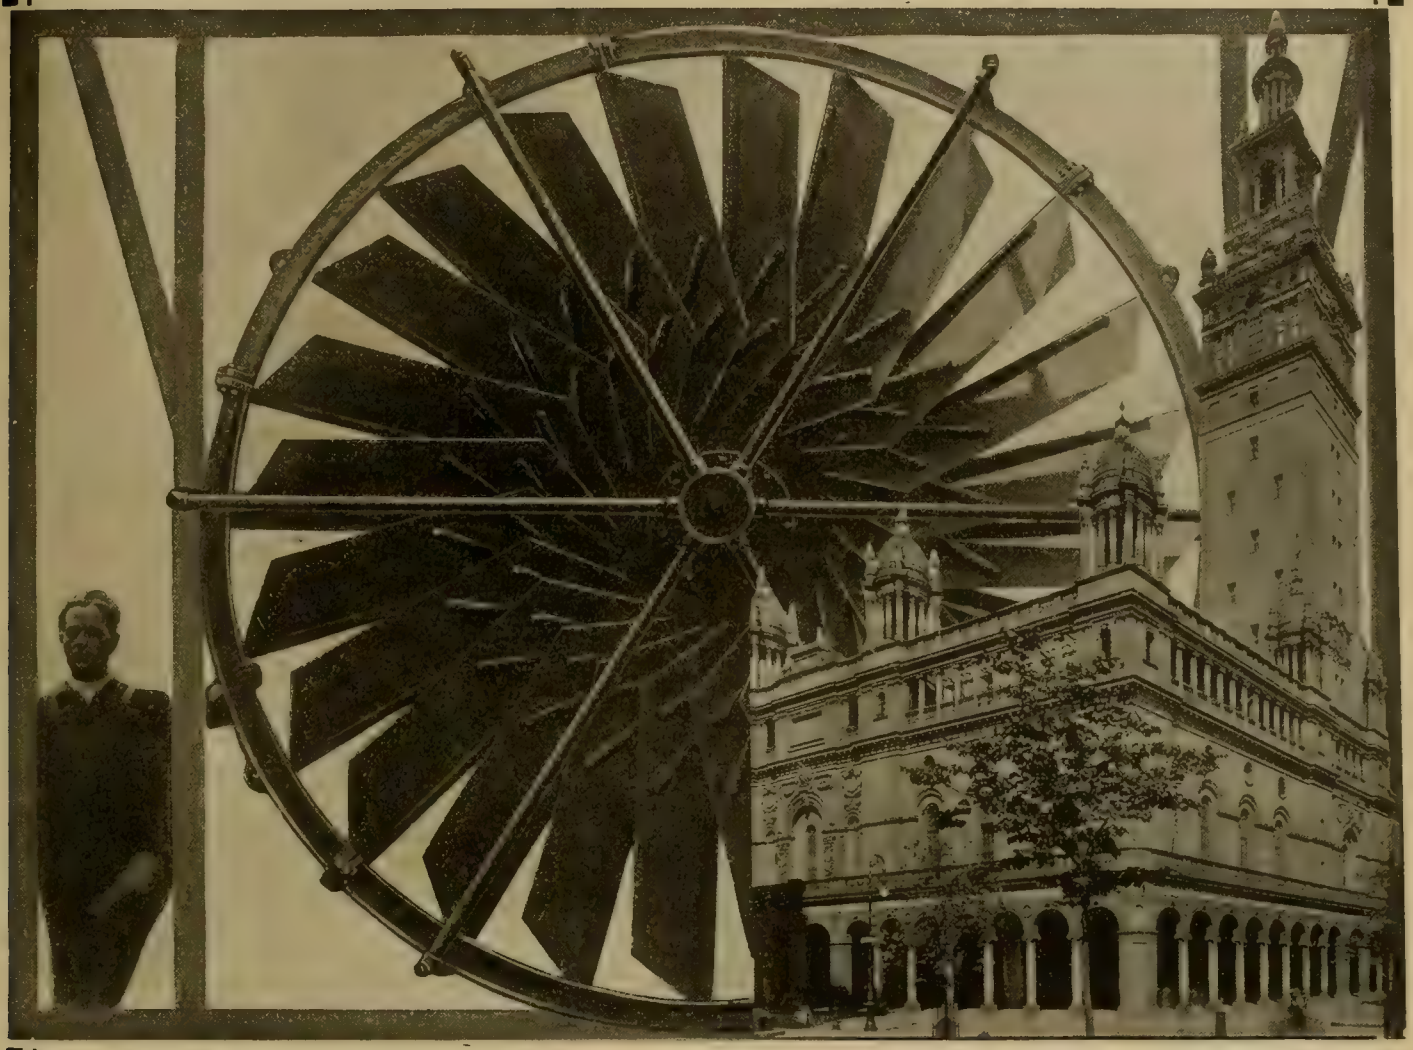
TYPHOON MULTIBLADE COOLING BLOWER



BIGGEST BLOWER IN THE WORLD

MANUFACTURED ESPECIALLY FOR MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, OPENING AS THE LARGEST MOTION PICTURE HOUSE IN THE WORLD. 12,000 CAPACITY.

One of the main features in advertising the enterprise is that it will be kept cool in the hottest weather by Typhoon Cooling System.

Typhoons will produce currents of air equal to any seashore breeze, free from objectionable drafts, such as created by noisy high speed exhaust and wall fans.

All the International Motion Picture Expositions were cooled by Typhoons. Typhoons made it possible to hold expositions in the hottest part of the summer, and the expositions made the Typhoons famous.

If you are interested in an outfit that will liven up your place send us the following information. Width of theatre? Length? Seating capacity main floor? Gallery? Could apparatus be placed on roof? Electric current available?

Two Six-Foot Typhoons will cool a 600-seat house in the hottest weather and the pair cost $372.00 with 2 or 3 phase A. C. Motor. Our Engineering Department will also furnish necessary drawings, and specifications for the installation.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Exhibitor:

WE hate to discuss family matters, but do you know that it's harder to live with a genius than with a saint? And when you have two it's the limit! Anderson and Hetzel are always bothering us. They want to take money that we would like for Minusa dividends and put it in experimenting on Minusa improvements. Think of it! And they don't stop nagging till they get it.

It's disagreeable, but it's this persistent search for the best that has changed the good old gold fibre into the wonderful Minusa. It's what keeps Minusa years ahead of any other screen in the world.

When you buy a Minusa your investment is safe.

You will have to abandon any other screen, because our improvements will make them obsolete. When you order it send all specifications. Minusas, you know, are different; they are "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre.

Personality Plus

As a good tailor puts personality into his work, distinguishing alike the clothes and the wearer, so we put personality into the building of our Screens. They are not so many pieces cut from a roll, glued or sewed together, with one to four seams distressingly visible. They are built up on individual frames, each succeeding operation leading up to the final application over the burnished tin, of a variable mattlack surface, that enables us to fit the Screen to the exact conditions of your house.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Uncle Jobie Goff says: "When ole Opportunity comes a-knockin' at yer door DON'T be in th' Summer kitchen!"

And Uncle Jobie Goff volunteers some sage advice, at that! The Selig Exposition Special which leaves Chicago, Ill., on Thursday, July 8th, for a seventeen days' tour of the great West and of Golden California, is your opportunity, Mr. Exhibitor!

We want you with us in California. We want you and your wife and the kiddies to be our guests aboard a Pullman Tram De Luxe. We are to visit the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors at San Francisco, July 11. We will see motion pictures in production and greet Miss Kathlyn Williams and other stars at the new Selig Jungle-Zoo to be formally opened at that time. We will see two Expositions, tour Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Barbara, etc. View Pike's Peak, Garden of the Gods, Grand Canyon, and see all the wonderful scenery which in itself is worthy of the entire cost of the tour. The rate is only $128 round trip, which includes Pullman, hotel accommodations, side trips, etc., etc.

You owe yourself, your wife and the children an economical outing. The Selig Polyscope Company, at great expense, has prepared such an outing for you.

FALSTAFF FILMS

MANAGER Rodney C. Davis, of the Kozy Theatre, Paducah, Ky., summed up the Thanhouser idea in a striking line: "WE NOW FEEL ASSURED—" he said in his letter.

ASSURED! That's the great, overpowering word! The Thanhouser product assures you—removes all doubt! No guess-work, no speculation. You know positively—before-hand—that if it's a Thanhouser or a Falstaff, you will be pleased, your PATRONS will be pleased and your mind is free from care. It's just like having a paid-up policy in a reliable company—YOU'RE ASSURED!

After all, isn't that the REAL feeling to have about your business?

ON THE MUTUAL PROGRAM

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 19

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

Summer is looked forward to with hesitation by many exhibitors. They feel that it is the dull season and they should retrench. This policy, I think, is directly opposite to what ought to be.

It is logical that in the good season, people are going to attend moving picture shows in great numbers and will be more easily satisfied with what is on the screen. In the dull season, however, when they would naturally stay away from the shows, people are only going to go when they see some picture of unusual merit. It must be apparent to the live and wide awake exhibitor that the way to draw people is to put on the very best program during the dullest months, for you can depend upon it, that dull season, or not, if a man wants to see a feature he is going to come, regardless of weather. If on the other hand you have a program which is not particularly appealing to him it is quite possible that he may do as you think he will—stay away.

We have anticipated this need of the exhibitor for the Summer time with an unusually strong program, preceded by advertising with unusual appeal, distinctiveness, charm and with the elements of human interest which will draw the attention of the passer-by, and bring him in through the interest it arouses. After they have listened to the lure of the poster, they will get punch and action, and elements of human interest in the plays—which cannot fail to satisfy even in the hottest weather. CONSIDER THIS CAREFULLY—TRY IT OUT.

Make a World Film night, even if it is your only night of the week and see if you don't get results. This has been tested on some of the hottest days and has proven profitable. To the live exhibitor, using World features and World co-operation, all seasons are "good seasons" and we know that Summer to him will prove as productive and profitable as any of the other months of the year.

As I am to devote a great part of the Summer in the field, actually studying the needs and conditions of exhibitors, so that I can more closely co-operate with them and give them money making films, and even greater co-operation than in the past. I shall in the fall start a new series of this nature gleaned from these experiences.

Stage Stars

(No. 84. Straight from the Shoulder

Broadway stars who have signed contracts to work for the Universal have actually been threatened to the effect that their salaries in the future will be CUT IN HALF if they appear in Universal pictures!

From the evidence I have been able to gather it looks like a concerted movement on the part of several feature producers to SCARE THE STARS AWAY FROM THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM! In other words, to keep them away from YOU!

Of course, the Universal will lick the very stuffing out of anyone who attempts this sort of trickery, but I print it just to show you to what extremes some of the feature people have been driven since realizing that the Universal's policy of PUTTING FAMOUS STARS ON THE REGULAR PROGRAM is going to make it impossible for anyone to gouge the exhibitors by means of extortionate rental prices.

You have no idea how frantic the feature people are. They are scratching their heads and stirring up their brains to find some way to "get even with the Universal."

They are trying to make the stage stars believe that they cheapen themselves by appearing on any regular program, but the stars realize that the Universal is going to enhance their value by putting them into the greatest productions that money, brains and skill can produce.

Threatened

Talks by Carl Laemmle, President)

Intimidation of stars and misrepresentation of facts are the only answer the feature people can make to the Universal's startling, revolutionary policy of putting great stars and great plays on the regular program. HOW ELSE CAN THEY ANSWER US?

Put yourself in their place. If you were renting features to exhibitors and getting extortionate prices for every day's rental, and the Universal came along and OFFERED THE SAME STARS ON THE REGULAR PROGRAM, what would you do? What could you do? Nothing, absolutely nothing. AND I PREDICT THAT THAT'S THE VERY THING MANY OF THE FEATURE COMPANIES WILL BE DOING VERY SHORTLY!

The Universal has found the way to protect the exhibitors. It hurts the feature people and causes them to run around in circles and scream "HELP! MURDER! POLICE!" They only stop crying long enough to shake their fists at the stage stars and blubber, "If you work for the Universal we'll see that your salaries for stage work are cut in half."

I love a good hot scrap. Even if the other fellow resorts to dirty methods, I still know the Universal can lick him, for the very simple reason that ALL THINGS WORK TOGETHER FOR GOOD, and that RIGHT IS MIGHT. The Universal is doing the BIGGEST THING THAT HAS EVER BEEN DONE FOR EXHIBITORS, the exhibitors know it, and all the threatening and bluffing and vaporing in the world isn't going to check the mighty Universal in its steady and amazing P-R-O-G-R-E-S-S!

LOOK AT THIS MAMMOTH UNIVERSAL PROGRAM CAN YOU BEAT IT ANYWHERE ?

"The White Terror" A Remarkable 4-Reel Imp Drama with Hobart Henley, Frances Nelson, Allen Holubar and Wm. Welsh

One of the most sensational pictures ever filmed. Startling and dramatic behind-the-scenes exposure of the "cure-all" fakirs. The play discloses how a "medicine" manufacturer fought the establishment of a sanitorium in his home town even to the extent of dynamiting the newspaper which started the movement. This dynamite scene is one of the most realistic pictures ever taken. In spite of every precaution Henley and Holubar had mighty narrow escapes from serious injury in this scene. The love interest is a central feature of the play, and the medicine man is finally brought to the right way of thinking when his own daughter falls victim to the "white terror," and her life is saved by sanitorium treatment. This feature is unique, high class and distinctive, and bears the enthusiastic endorsement of many leading medical authorities.

"In the Shadow of the Pyramids" Third Installment—2 Reels—of the splendid GOLD SEAL Oriental Series, entitled "Under the Crescent"

Princess Hassan, playing the lead, is an American girl, Ola Humphrey, who became the wife of the oldest son of the present Khedive of Egypt. How she sickened of Harem life; and the unrivalled and never before pictured secrets of the Harem form the basis of this remarkable series, each of which is a complete story in itself. This third episode shows the attempt of the princess to escape, of her thrilling adventures while hiding in one of the great pyramids, of her recapture and return to the Harem. Staged with a realism seldom if ever equalled in pictures, by Director Burton King.

"The Snow Lady" A beautiful Three Reel Laemmle Drama with Brinsley Shaw.

Positively the most beautiful snow and winter scenes ever used as the settings for a photoplay are shown in this thrilling story of the battle for valuable timber property. The pictures were taken at the Saranac Lake at the time of the Winter Carnival, which plays a most important part in the drama. A great big play, with fine acting and swift action from start to finish.

"The Oyster Dredger" J. Warren Kerrigan in a novel dual role in a strong 2 Reel Victor Drama.

Imagine Harry Kerrigan as a handsome but roughly and picturesquely clad oyster dredger. A wealthy girl, secretly in love with him, contrives through a bogus will to supply him with money and change his station in life. His discovery of this fact and of the duplicity of the girl's guardian, together with the development of a beautiful love theme, makes this a drama of virility and real heart interest.

"Blue Blood and Yellow Backs" Screaming Big U Comedy with Harry Gribbon, Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris.

A large and formidable mamma, a bee-u-tiful daughter, a bundle of kale and a rival suitor give the inimitable Harry Gribbon, lovely little Gertrude Selby, and clever Reggie Morris a corking opportunity for fun that fumes fast and furious. One of the real kind of farcical photoplays. With a good laugh at every foot of film.

"One Man's Evil" Unusual Western 2 Reel Bison Drama with Wm. Clifford and Edna Maison.

Harvey Clay, a stranger in a Western town, quickly makes friends with all the women, but is disliked and mistrusted by the men. His escapades furnish lively times in two families and give the sheriff an unwelcome duty. The action is stirring and the plot is very unusual.

"Into the Light" Strong 2 Reel Rex Drama with Jane Novak.

A gentleman burglar is surprised by a beautiful girl in the act of stealing her jewels. She reads to him a passage from the Bible. Further impressed at a Salvation Army meeting of the error of his ways, he becomes converted and goes West. How he makes a man of himself and eventually claims the girl makes a strong story full of action and unexpected developments.

All included in Regular Universal Program for Week of June 14. The best and most varied and only scientifically balanced program

Do You Know That King Midas Is Living and Turning Films Into Gold?

Of course you have read of the Phrygian King Midas. He was so wonderfully successful that everything he undertook yielded immense riches. The ancients were superstitious and built up a myth that he was so gifted of the Gods that everything he touched was turned into gold.

But you know quite well that it was business acumen and insight that brought him his great wealth. It is just as true today as it was in the time of King Midas. It is easy for you to make money. It needs only a little insight to know what your patrons want; a little foresight, not only to keep abreast of the times but a little ahead, so that you can meet new and constantly changing conditions; and initiative to discard old time stuff and adopt the best and most advanced ideas.

Essanay has established its business on these three qualities. George K. Spoor, its president, is a deep student of human nature. He has the insight to know what the public wants. Consequently Essanay plays always strike a popular chord. He has seen that the motion picture industry was advancing by leaps and bounds and has had the foresight to look for new ideas. And he has had the initiative to put them into effect. Essanay photoplays were first to meet the new demands; they have passed clear beyond the old time "movie;" they are real dramatizations of the best plays, with a plot and a human problem.

You can be a King Midas. You can turn your films into gold through your box office receipts. You may not have the time to work out all the intricacies of these problems. But you can give the public the very best plays—the plays it wants—Essanay plays. The result spells success, and success means money.

These Stars Can be Seen Only at Paramount Theatres

Until recently the coming of summer meant the passing of the high-class theatrical season. Not so today. Paramount has changed that.

Paramount has magically transferred high-class drama and comedy from the stage to the screen. Paramount has made it possible for the public to see, everywhere throughout the country, at any time during the year, the most famous plays and the best fiction, in their screen renditions—acted by the most celebrated stars.

Mary Pickford in Plays that give full opportunity for her inimitable art—"Such a Little Queen"; "Behind the Scenes"; "Cinderella"; "Mistress Nell"; Frances Hodgson Burnett's great idealistic story "The Dawn of a Tomorrow"; a most appealing picture entitled "Rags"; and a play that "just fits" Mary entitled "Little Pal."
—Famous Players.

Ina Claire in William C. De Mille's merry comedy of youth, "The Wild Goose Chase."
—Lasky.

Edgar Selwyn in "The Arab," a pretentious production of scenic as well as dramatic interest.—Lasky.

Hazel Dawn in the sprightly comedy favorite, "The Gay Lord Quex"; a new play "Clarissa," and "Niobe."—Famous Players.

Myrtle Stedman in "Wild Olive."
—Oliver Morosco.

Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower"; "The Crucible"; "Gretna Green"; the well-known play "Mice and Men;" and "Seven Sisters," the successful comedy of many daughters and few suitors.
—Famous Players.

Blanche Sweet in "Stolen Goods"; "The Warrens of Virginia"; "The Captive," the successful drama, "The Secret Orchard"; and a picturization of the popular play "The Clue."—Lasky.

Marie Doro in "The Morals of Marcus."
—Famous Players.

Laura Hope Crews in "The Fighting Hope."
—Lasky-Belasco.

Pauline Frederick in "Sold."
—Famous Players.

Leonora Ulrich in the comedy of social climbing, "The Society Pilot."—Morosco.

Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden."—Lasky.

Charlotte Walker in "Kindling."—Lasky.

Elsie Janis in "The Caprices of Kitty"; "Betty in Search of a Thrill," and in the laughable "Nearly a Lady."—Morosco.

George Waldon Fawcett in "The Majesty of the Law."—Morosco.

John Barrymore in "The Man from Mexico"; "Are You a Mason?" and in a picture dramatization of Richard Harding Davis' novel, "The Dictator."—Famous Players.

New York itself—the theatrical centre of the world—does not afford a better opportunity to see such an array of talent, and such a list of attractions as the Paramount Program brings to you, wherever you are. Go and see!

Watch closely for the announcement of each of these pictures in your locality. You will enjoy them, every one.

Facts and Comments

WE HAVE lately received numerous complaints from exhibitors, who feel that their good nature has been imposed upon in the matter of advertising local charities and welfare work upon the screens of their theaters. The average exhibitor is more than willing to oblige in such matters and we feel sure he would not complain if there had not been a plain abuse of his accommodating disposition. The exhibitor is bound to consider the wishes and the comfort of his audience. They come to see pictures. An occasional slide is all right, too many of them interfere with the legitimate enjoyment of the audience. We advise managers to cut out this paragraph and paste it in their offices as a suitable declaration on the subject. It may save them a little annoyance now and then.

SCORE one for the exhibitors of Jamestown, N. Y. They have buried two ordinances aimed at the motion picture interests. One was an ordinance to prohibit the motion picture theaters from opening on Sundays and the other attempted to establish local censorship. The corporation counsel of the city read a good deal of good law to the aldermen, leaving them wiser and we hope more cheerful men.

NEWS comes from Tennessee that the legislature has adjourned without adopting any censorship bill. Splendid co-operation between experts of the Fifth Avenue Board and the exhibitors of the state are responsible for this gratifying result. The attorney for the league was especially zealous and watchful and his loyalty and devotion to the cause of his clients deserves the greatest praise.

IN ANOTHER part of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the reader will find a letter from the pen of a small exhibitor, protesting in terms of indignant sincerity against the ruthless competition, of which the small exhibitor often becomes a victim. It is a letter well worth reading. We are too apt in the rapid advance of the art to overlook the fact that the motion picture came into being and attained its greatest prosperity as the entertainment of the plain people. It is quite true that there are almost no limitations to the artistic development of the screen and that its greatest triumphs in that respect are yet to come. On the other hand there is no reason why a cheap entertainment should be frowned upon. We use the word "cheap" with reference to the price of admission. The motion picture is essentially a popular entertainment and the small exhibitor ought to be protected and encouraged.

WE HOPE that no exhibitor within the domain of the Keystone state will fail to be in Reading. The convention there which gets together on June 7th will not only show what a splendid and harmonious organization there is in Pennsylvania, it will not only transact business of considerable importance to the exhibiting body, but it will, we are sure, establish new records of hospitality for Reading, which is saying a good deal. Reading on such occasions stands for the joy of living and "Pop" Zerr is considerable of an exponent thereof.

IT IS hard to believe that the legislature of an American state intends to enact a law forbidding the showing of wild animals on the screen. Some such law, however, was on the legislative calendar of California. In the early history of motion pictures there were if we remember correctly a few foreign-made films of Latin origin showing cruelty to animals. There have been, we regret to say, some disgusting "animal dramas" in which snakes played the leading parts, but it is a far cry from these isolated objectionable cases to a total prohibition of animals on the screen. The California measure was killed.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has opened an office in Los Angeles in charge of G. P. Von Harleman, formerly connected with our Chicago office. The office is located in the Haas Building in commodious and attractive quarters. In taking this step we have recognized the growing importance of the Pacific Coast as a centre of motion picture activities. We hope that the new office will be of good service to the motion picture interests there. We extend a cordial invitation to all our friends and readers to call at the new office and use it as a good place to get acquainted.

Avoid Freaks

By W. Stephen Bush.

ON THE upper and nether fringe of the great exhibiting body, in this, as well as in other countries, two classes of exhibitors may be discovered: Amateurs and "Old Showmen." Far be it from me to say aught against the large and estimable class of people who have come into the exhibiting profession from purely commercial pursuits and occupations. I know scores upon scores of them and they are almost without exception a credit to the exhibiting profession. The vast amounts of money that have in the past few years been invested in theaters of great size built especially for the showing of motion pictures have largely come from men with little or no experience in motion pictures. As long as these men realize their limitations and employ competent managers while they are content to learn in time, their accession to the ranks of the exhibiting body is an unmixed blessing. It is only when they scout experience and believe themselves budding geniuses that they do harm and generally far more harm to themselves than to anybody else. Experience can never be gained by inspiration or dreams. Once in a generation perhaps a man comes along who by the special favor of nature has been dowered so richly that but a little experience is needed to make him a master of his profession. These exceptions, however, are negligible and only prove the rule that experience must be bought at a heavy price.

We believe that the average competent manager of a motion picture theater would much sooner take his chances with an amateur in the profession than with what for want of a better term are called "old showmen." There are of course splendid "old showmen" who, having succeeded on the stage or in vaudeville or in some minor amusement, have turned to motion pictures and have prospered. On the other hand it must be confessed that too many of the "old showmen" have an excessive fondness for what is freakish. The memory of the late P. T. Barnum is still fresh in their minds. They think and speak of the public in the terms of the ancient side-show and medicine-show men. They cannot entirely rid themselves of the notion that the public likes to be "humbugged." When men of this type are entrusted with the management of a high-class motion picture theater, some sadly amusing results may be looked for.

But recently some men of this class interested in the conduct of a first-class motion picture house actually proposed to the manager to "liven things up" by having each lady in the audience presented with a sample of face powder. This ingenious stroke of policy was to be followed up by the appearance upon the stage of "a lady demonstrator" who was to initiate the feminine portion of the audience in the proper and advantageous use of the aforesaid face powder. The "old showmen" making this proposition were vehemently opposed by the manager who, like every normal person, was quick to see the cruel absurdity of it. They simply found it beyond their powers of comprehension to understand why such a scheme, which would make a hit with a sideshow, had no place in even a fairly well-regulated motion picture entertainment. Another proposition made by "showmen" of this class was to have wax-figures placed in some of the boxes to make "the matinees look more lively." There was the old dime-museum instinct for you. "Faking the rubes" at the county fair is a tradition that in some minds dies very hard and in other minds does not die at all. The manager of another high-class motion picture theater was approached by some music publishers with a handsome offer of money if he would allow their new popular songs to be inflicted upon his audience. The manager refused indignantly, but came very near being overruled by the owner of the theater—a genuine fossil of the Barnum period. One great show house in New York run by famous showmen is suffering very acutely from a lack of box office receipts simply because they offered the public a freak-show in which pictures played a subordinate and almost ridiculous part.

You can never improve pictures by the addition of freaks. In a motion picture entertainment the freak has absolutely no place. If the freak comes in the guise of a seemingly profitable advertising scheme it remains just as unwelcome.

To the men on the upper and nether fringe of the exhibiting body, such as are mentioned in the opening lines of this article, one thing ought to be made very clear: The exhibition of motion pictures is a profession by itself. It is a profession which easily absorbs the talent and the experience of the best of showmen. It is a profession that must be learned. To present the motion picture in its most attractive environment of music, song, art and atmosphere is a subject of inexhaustible study. It is fascinating to those who are really called. Their horizon widens, their sense of responsibility grows from day to day. Exhibiting is a profession which must be absolutely innocent of freak, fake or fraud. It is a business, to be sure, but it is more than a business. We have seen business men highly successful in purely commercial activities fail utterly in the exhibiting profession. To cater to the public by means of a high-class motion picture entertainment requires more than ordinary tact, more than common powers of discrimination and more than average knowledge and appreciation of human nature. There is no profession in the world with more room at the top. I am willing to predict that in the next few years the most money in this industry will be made by successful exhibitors.

The right kind of exhibitor; the man who keeps pace with the rapid growth of quality in motion pictures; who is keen to improve and to originate, will surely draw the big crowds of the future. I have seen it occur in a dozen cities; the progressive man with a clean and entertaining show and with his own ideas of perfect presentation draws the best and the largest crowds just as the magnet draws iron. The one fatal mistake of the day is to try and "play down" to your audience. Every audience resents it. A great vaudeville house recently changed to pictures exclusively. The manager was afraid that the pictures might be "over the head of his audience." He made a test. All persons entering the theater were presented with a card rquesting their names and address and asking if they were interested in advance information regarding the program. Of all the answers received the vast majority came from people who to judge by the location of their homes lived in very modest neighborhoods. The very people the management was not sure about came forward with unmistakable proof that they appreciated good pictures better than any kind of vaudeville.

It would not be such a bad idea for a manager who has his doubts to poll his audience and thus arrive at a pretty safe conclusion.

Plots Perpetual*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE constant reappearance of outworn intrigue is due quite as much to insincerity as to incompetency of writers. They depend on simulation rather than upon originality, and betray themselves by trying to make interest in a story depend entirely upon its general scheme, by considering its design rather than its aim, instead of subordinating incident and situation to theme. A plot may justly be regarded as a working plan of action and a diagram of character relations.

The ancient triangle of husband, wife and lover has been industriously jingled for many decades, and it may always remain as one piece in the orchestra, its little note sounding whenever it suits the piece, but it palls as a solo instrument. "Better neglect to feed your wife than neglect to kiss her" is the triangle theme. The childless woman's craving for affectionate attention, especially when her mind is idle, leads her to misinterpret her husband's devotion to work that is partially in her interest. His desire to protect is ascribed to neglect; her girlhood ideals have not been replaced by those of true womanhood; she is at the mercy of sentiment and she becomes an easy mark for the smooth-tongued gentleman of dominant predatory instincts, unless—and here is where we are told all about it—she is brought to a stern realization that there is something higher in life than self-gratification. She either falls into disrepute, or she repents in time and is folded in hubby's arms, thereby causing our honest countenances to be suffused with a glow of intense gratification.

Quite as popular with those authors whose equipment is plenty of paper, pens and ink, and two arms, may be the story of the beautiful working girl persecuted by the villainous head of her department in the store, or by the millionaire decadent who dangles a cigarette from his under lip as he objectively contemplates the subject of his dark schemes. Or she may be an innocent country girl caught in the web of a spider-legged city chap until Jim comes down from the farm to see how she is getting along, and takes her back home. There is something so delightfully unlike the American girl in this innocent and much-persecuted female that she should be typed from our imported unintelligence to be in keeping with the role.

Then there is Cinderella, the slave of envious ones, ragged, poorly nurtured, destitute of opportunity, how happy we feel when Prince Charming comes along and enables her to turn up her nose at her wicked sisters! Quite another Prince Charming may be the inadvertent guardian of an unhappy child, and watch her flower from an ugly little bud, while grey hair appears over his temporal bone and leads him to decide that some fair-haired boy is better equipped to guide and protect her. This bit of mildew has a flavor all its own, especially for girls who are about to stop braiding their hair and add an inch to their skirts.

Husbands who have accumulated silver shreds among the bald and a certain amount of wisdom in the process are often set down as mentally incompetent when their wives secretly embrace erring brothers. Such benedicts are often pictured in the act of shooting, or of shooting at, the erring brother, to the subsequent edification of all concerned. But when it comes to deeds murderous, no plot is so strongly entrenched as that of the unjustly accused. All evidence points to the guilt of the hero—even the deadly weapon gives silent testimony against him—and yet we know he is innocent. How can he escape? We suffocate as he is about to be executed. Then, when all seems lost, the ingenious playwright has the villain confess all, and we breathe again.

Those sweet little girls with hair in curls, bare feet and "nighties," who reconcile estranged parents by putting mama's hand in papa's hand, are busily occupied these days, for each one has to reform a burglar when he calls for the family silver. If the noble burglar is in a dress suit, and caught by a suspicious husband in the bedchamber, we are brought to a profound realization that one may steal for a living and yet have a delicate sense of honor about women. For the sake of the uplift, gentle woman's predilection for bridge whist and motor-cars is regularly contrasted with man's intense longing for the pure and calming influence of home, provided always that his "occasional" is not stronger than orange phosphate.

So poets of the screen sing because they must sing. Their imaginative work keeps in order our treasure house myth and fable. Inasmuch as almost any person can write a photoplay it is obviously not necessary to know anything in particular about life and literature. Why study? Why observe? Plots are plentiful and cheap. They are offered freely on the market as low as a dollar a thousand, and then every personal friend has a true story to tell that ought to make a good photoplay. Why bother about the complexity of character portrayal? Why penetrate human nature for the infinite variety of its manifestations when one can depend upon stock figures in well-tested plots?

Rule of the stage drama is that of letting the audience know what the characters do not, an expedient quite in keeping with the artificiality of picturing existence in a three-sided box. Those who go by rote can apply the same rule to screen presentation, but there is a delightful uncertainty concerning what we know about character and motive in real life. Why rob us of that keenest of intellectual pleasures, guessing for ourselves what motive is back of conduct, assuming always that we are capable of exerting intelligence of that kind? If we are drafting from humanity for the entertainment of humanity why not let revelations of purpose behind action come to us in a natural way, little by little, just as we gradually find out about those people whom we eventually distrust.

Gentlemen who write critical essays on the art of telling stories have figured it out to be an exact science so carefully and systematically that it would seem as though they overlook the idea of conception altogether. Possibly the creative author alone knows of the imaginative flame, the sudden mental flare that lights up earth and sky to where they meet, comprehending a wide sweep of scenes and situations seen clearly for an instant and remembered as a whole, though there be confusion as to outlines and details. With this vision is the author of original stories concerned. The vision sets no bounds—his medium does that—so it is the feeling, not the form, of his story that engrosses his attention. The plot with him is merely this or that method of attaining his end, failing as a plan of it renders sterile the beauty and delight of his inspiration. It is a good plot only when it shapes itself to the highest necessities of his inspiration, and it follows humbly, a servitor only, the conception. Entire freedom of choice as to method and plan to him whose soul is at work that there may be soul in his visualization.

Rothapfel Leaves the Strand.

Will Set New Standards in "The Rialto," the Old Victoria Theater—Will Have a Free Hand.

By W. Stephen Bush.

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL, the managing director of the Strand theater, and recognized as the premier exhibitor of the country, has tendered his resignation and will be out of the Strand in two weeks. A syndicate of well-known capitalists, among them such men as Felix Kahn and Crawford Livingston, have prevailed upon Mr. Rothapfel to join them in a motion picture enterprise, which it is confidently expected will eclipse even the marvelous records made by Rothapfel himself. Mr. Rothapfel will become the managing director of the Rialto theater on Seventh avenue and Forty-second street, formerly known as Hammerstein's Victoria. He is the vice-president of the company which has bought the theater, the other officers being Crawford Livingston, president, and Felix Kahn, secretary and treasurer.

When I found Mr. Rothapfel in his office he radiated happiness. It had been an open secret that he had been out of sympathy with the owners of the Strand or perhaps they had been out of sympathy with him—whatever the cause it had been evident for some time that Rothapfel had felt himself hampered in his work by impossible suggestions and by a lack of appreciation.

"At last," he said when the storm of congratulations had abated, "I will be free to follow my own ideas and to carry out without interference my own aspirations. I feel that I will be able to give New York a motion picture entertainment the like of which it has never seen before. My seating capacity will be about 2,500, which is somewhat less than the Strand, but the scale of prices will be adjusted in such a way that the earning capacity of the new house will be as great as that of the other theater. It will be managed in a way which will not make it necessary to increase prices, with the possible exception of about two hundred seats, which will be specially reserved. Both the exterior and interior of the theater will be thoroughly remodelled and in some respects entirely remade. The instructions are to make the Rialto the most beautiful theater in America. The outside of the theater will be a real flower garden. There will be two floors, and everything that is known to modern construction will be employed to produce the finest results possible.

"The stage will be built especially for motion picture purposes and in conformity with my plans and directions. The study and experience of more than a year will be embodied in the construction of the stage, which will be a revelation in motion picture presentation. The electrical equipment and the lighting system will mark an innovation all along the line. A switchboard will be constructed to meet the special demands which in my judgment the conduct of a motion picture theater requires. I will have an orchestra of thirty-five specially trained musicians, with a leader whom I have been trying to get for the last two years. I will have a staff of young people in thorough accord and sympathy with my plans. All employees will be under a merit system. I know how much better than a mere salary the prospect of sharing in the profits will act on the employees; how much it means in increased loyalty and increased efficiency.

"In the arrangement of my program, merit, and merit alone, will be the deciding factor. In the composition and balancing of programs I hope to improve constantly, and I make no idle boast when I venture to predict that the opening of the Rialto will mark a new epoch in the art of showing motion pictures."

Mr. Rothapfel, who has the architect's power of visualization and who sees the edifice of his construction complete in every detail before the first stone is laid, also has the artist's enthusiasm in his work. He outlined some wonderful details, which must make the opening of the Rialto memorable indeed in the history of American amusements, but as I began to jot down my notes he raised a forbidding hand, expressing a fear that some rival with more ambition than originality, might try to "anticipate" him. What I heard convinced me of two things, however; first, that the wonderful fund of striking and original ideas stored up in Rothapfel's mind is inexhaustible, and second, that there will be no limitation put upon his ideas and plans. He can go as far as he likes.

Just an example of this policy of unqualified support: He asked for the best organ procurable and the directors of the corporation immediately granted his wish. Though the purchase of the organ involves a very considerable amount of money the decision to buy it because it was the best and because in Rothapfel's judgment it was the one he needed, took probably less than a minute. We have seen the Regent and marveled; we next witnessed the revelation at the Strand and our marvel grew; if the Rialto keeps the promises of its managing director it will be more proof of the upward trend and the boundless possibilities of the screen.

No date has been set for the opening of the Rialto, but it will take place in the fall, either late in September or very early in October.

Our New Pacific Coast Office.

TO ENABLE us to keep more closely in touch with the large number of film producing companies which have located permanently on the Pacific coast, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has opened an office in Los Angeles, California. This office is in the Haas Building, Seventh street and Broadway, a very central and convenient location. G. P. Von Harleman will be in charge. Mr. Von Harleman has been our Western representative and in charge of the business end of our Chicago office almost continuously since it was opened in 1908, consequently he is familiar with all the manufacturing and producing companies as well as being very closely in touch with the exhibiting and exchange sides of the industry. Clarke Irvine, who has been our Los Angeles correspondent for more than a year, will be associated with Mr. Von Harleman.

We hope, through our three offices, so conveniently situated at the three principal manufacturing and producing centers of the industry, to continue to make our columns the most reliable, most up-to-date and trustworthy source of information in regard to this phenomenal and ever-increasing industry. We trust our friends and readers on the coast will make the greatest possible use of our Los Angeles office and assure them of our best-co-operation at all times.

SINGHI RETURNS TO LUBIN.

Though the fact has not been officially announced by the Lubin Company, it is reliably reported that Ferd. Singhi has again become manager of the big Lubin motion picture plant in Philadelphia. It was Mr. Singhi who built the big plant at Twentieth street and Indiana avenue, several years ago, and established it upon a successful operating basis. Circumstances, in no way connected with the picture business, led Mr. Singhi to resign his position and engage in other business.

Friends of Mr. Lubin have long known of his high regard for Mr. Singhi's ability and that he has consistently sought to bring him back into the business. This desire has at last been accomplished. On the heels of this news comes the information from the Lubin offices that the producing forces will be reorganized throughout.

Regarding the status of Ira M. Lowry, who has managed the Lubin plant for the past few years, it is understood that he will continue to work in conjunction with Mr. Singhi, dividing the responsibility with him. Both are young men with progressive ideas and plenty of energy and their combined efforts should tend to improve conditions at the Lubin plant.

MONTGOMERY TO BUILD SUBURBAN HOUSES.

Frank T. Montgomery, formerly general manager of the Montgomery Amusement Company, announces that he is about to undertake the construction of a number of suburban picture houses in Atlanta. Locations for four houses have been secured and work will be commenced at once.

Sauntering Through San Francisco.

Blaisdell Mixes with Exchange Men and Exhibitors; Also Finds Greenbacks Curiosities in the Golden Gate City.

From the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

San Francisco, Cal.

JUST a word with you exhibitors in the East who may be planning a trip to the Exposition City at Convention time. Either bring along a small purse with one division for gold and another for silver or else have your trousers pockets fortified by an extra thickness of cloth. For out here, bear in mind, a five-dollar bill presented in payment for a fifty-cent purchase brings back four cartwheels—real iron men. These native sons of the Golden West may even try to slip you gold in the breaking of a twenty—three five-dollar pieces, for instance, and four cartwheels say. At first it's a joke—you begin to meet up with this Western custom in the dining cars. Then you fail to see the humor in it—if sometime when already you have in your pockets four of these heavy fellows and unthinkingly you have handed out a five-dollar bill and discover you then have eight. You may even feel like insulting some one—and taking a chance on getting licked. But after a few weeks of it opinions change. Then, perhaps, if you don't have a pocketful of silver—a half dozen of the dollar size, several halves and a few quarters, you think you are broke, regardless of what you may have in the way of long green.

Over at the Bank of Italy the other day the paying teller threw out big shining twenty-dollar gold pieces in exchange for a check from home.

"This man is from the East, you know," said Special Representative Aiken of the General Film, who kindly had left his desk to go to the bank and identify the World man; "I think he would prefer bills, wouldn't you?" said Mr. Aiken, turning around.

"Y-yes," was the scarcely reassuring reply.

The gold did look tempting.

Talking last week with Mr. Turner of Turner & Dahnken, we noted that among the pile of gold and silver the big exhibitor was counting, there were a few bills.

"Glad to see there are a few Easterners in town," we remarked.

"Why," said Mr. Turner, running over the bills, "we take in a few of these. I remember when I went East four years ago I carried gold and drafts. When the bills began coming in in change I appealed to George Kleine. 'How do you pack the stuff?' I asked him. He showed me some kind of an arrangement."

The World man reached for a bill roll.

"Yes, that's just like the thing he showed me," said Mr. Turner.

It's a mighty big shop Turner & Dahnken maintain behind the offices of the circuit at 942 Market street. Claude L. Langley escorted the World man through the workrooms where are kept the supplies and where the publicity matter for the big coast chain of theaters is prepared. One of the items is a well-equipped printing office containing three presses. Then there is apparatus for making a three-sheet enlargement from a motion picture film, and that, of course, is one inch by three-quarters of an inch. Artistic slides also are produced here. "We find there is no advertising that is more effective than that we do ourselves on our own screens," said Mr. Langley. "You see, we are bound to reach our own people."

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit maintains its own cameraman. In the offices are complete equipments for developing and printing motion picture film and also for changing titles when alteration may be necessary. A great rack contains hundreds of different sized cuts for newspaper writeups, and on file in the office are the clippings pertaining to each of the eight houses on the T. & D. circuit. Projection is another factor very closely watched, said Mr. Langley. If in any house any part of the projection apparatus shows a tendency to wobble, out it goes.

Mr. Langley introduced us to E. Bruce Johnson, one of the circuit's executives, and to E. V. Clover, resident manager of the Tivoli Opera House, the big local theater of T. & D. It was just after this we met up with Mr. Turner, who told how he happened to be a motion picture exhibitor. He had been, or rather the firm had been, the owner of an arcade up north, Seattle, if the memory serves. There came a lull in business, no one would buy out the two men, so they stored the equipment. Then came the San Francisco fire and, by the way, a certain big event in the recent history of this town is referred to only as the fire. The firm telegraphed for the arcade equipment and set it up. "Fact," said Mr. Turner, "it took us nearly all our time carrying money. Then came the moving pictures and we put them in. When a lot of others came into the business we took up the exchange end. We were making six or seven thousand dollars a month when we sold out to the General."

Efficiency with a big E sticks out all over the T. & D. headquarters, and this remark goes both as to men and to means.

Harry Leonhardt, general representative of Fox Films, introduced us the other day to Henry C. Schmidt, of The Marquee, Palo Alto. Mr. Schmidt started in the exhibiting business six and a half years ago on a shoestring in a store show, to use his own words. He has built up his clientele until at present he controls a 500-seat house—and every seat is a fully upholstered nine-spring chair. Mr. Schmidt believes he was the first on the coast to introduce the shadow box; his present one is 35 by 16.6, on a 12-foot stage. In its construction were used 233 yards of green silk plush, with a curtain folding across. The ventilation of the Marquee is considered ideal. Mr. Schmidt is going to install a $10,000 photoplayer. For a program Mr. Schmidt uses General Film and features that he has seen. He was the first man in California, so far as he knows, to charge two bits for admission to a motion picture performance. His present prices for big stuff range from 20 to 50 cents. He has shown such subjects as "Columbus," "Prisoner of Zenda," "Cabiria," "The Christian," and "The Spoilers." Palo Alto is the university town for Stanford.

In the office of Mr. Aiken the Western representative of the General Film Company introduced us to Exhibitor Roy of the Photoplay, Burlingame, Cal. Here's a picture man who, in a town of 35,000 population, not only has a 500-seat house but is now having drawn plans for a theater seating a thousand, work on which will begin soon. Mr. Roy, who has been in the business eight years, says that while his present house is sufficient for the demands upon it, he is looking ahead and preparing for the future. He intends to make his new theater one of the finest on the coast. Burlingame is twenty miles out of San Francisco; among its inhabitants are many people of means.

Maurice L. Markowitz of the California Film Exchange has been in the business of distributing film since 1909, when he opened offices in the Pacific Building, renting films from Eugene Kleine and sub-renting them. As to general conditions Mr. Markowitz said that business outside of the fair grounds had gone down, in the motion picture industry, as well as in other lines. Mr. Markowitz estimated there were about sixty-five picture theaters now in San Francisco, that very few houses were being opened and that a number had closed.

In the office of the General Film Company we met C. M. Applestill, manager of the Theater Tulane of El Centro, Cal. El Centro is in the Imperial Valley, down near the Mexican border, about 700 miles distant from San Francisco. Mr. Applestill is responsible for the selection of the pictures and vaudeville acts shown in five theaters in the valley, the Gilbo, in Brawley; the McHenry, Imperial; the Empress, Calexico, which is right on the Mexican line; the Arcade, Holtville, and the Tulane. Mr. Applestill opened the first big house in the Imperial Valley, that at El Centro, when the population was but 1,200; it is now 6,000. He also has opera house and road shows from September to May. The Tulane is a vaudeville and picture house, but as to the former Mr. Applestill uses only acts that he has seen; he will go as far as Los Angeles to get the stuff he wants. The southern exhibitor said he was in San Francisco on a business trip, but would be back again in July for the convention.

There was strong evidence of the presence of orange blossoms in the office of Herman Wobber when we walked in on the vice president of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, which concern is the representative of Paramount Pictures Corporation, west of Denver. Behind Mr. Wobber was a young orange tree he had just brought north from Los Angeles. The Progressive has a fine suite of offices in the Pacific building. The company started business in July, 1913, and has consistently grown. Mr. Wobber said that while conditions as a whole are rather quiet, the Progressive had no complaint whatever. "We really claim for the Progressive to have fostered the idea of less frequent changes of program," said Mr. Wobber. "San Francisco boasts of having the first weekly change house in the United States. That was the Imperial. We have steadily striven for fewer changes at increased admission prices. It is this combination that has made the real feature possible."

We were speaking about the remarkable run of "The Clansman" at the Auditorium in Los Angeles—for nine weeks, as a matter of fact, and plans already completed for bringing it back. "Los Angeles is like no other city," continued Mr. Wobber. "It has a local picture atmosphere distinctly its own. In the first place there are many screen actors there and the citizens see them and feel they know them."

J. A. Partington, manager of the 1,500-seat Imperial, dropped in. "The Imperial on September 7, 1913, inaugurated its policy of weekly runs," said Mr. Partington in answer to a question, "and I think it was the first theater in the country to do so. Up to that time no exchange was issuing weekly releases. "Tess of D'Urbervilles' was the first subject thus to be shown, and it made a big hit. How do we find business? Why, its a bit still on account of the fair, I think its tendency is to get better."

The Imperial at present is charging 10 and 20 cents admission. There are seven pieces in the orchestra and the house has a large pipe organ.

What struck the World man in Sol Lesser's Golden Gate Film Exchange was the big storage vault. When we saw it there were about five thousand reels in it. Mr. Lesser said if all the film owned by the company were placed in the vault at one time there would be between eight and nine thousand reels. The Golden Gate has been in business seven years and all subjects are bought outright. As announced recently in the Moving Picture World Mr. Lesser has taken over the Kleine Attractions for three Western States. Tom North continues in charge with his office in the Golden Gate. In addition to this consolidation Mr. Lesser said a deal has been consummated whereby the All Star Feature Distributors absorbed the Pacific Film Corporation and the Alco Film Corporation of California, all subjects handled by these two to be issued through the All Star in the future.

The Golden Gate has closed a contract for $1,500 worth of office alterations in order to take care of the increased business; one feature of these changes will be the construction of five distinct booking offices. The Golden Gate formerly took every state right picture released. It is now distributing the productions of the Metro, Life Photo, Kleine and Tiffany ("The Heart of Maryland").

Mr. Lesser has just closed a deal for "Cabiria" in Honolulu.

Out at the exposition the other afternoon, we renewed with R. W. Horn, in charge of the fine exhibit of the Nicholas Power Company, an acquaintance formed last summer at Toronto. Mr. Horn showed us the largest model of an intermittent movement ever displayed, which, he said, was creating a lot of interest among the engineers and mechanicians in the grounds.

With Earl Snell, secretary of the California Motion Picture Corporation, we paid a mighty pleasant visit last week to the San Rafael plant of the California Motion Picture Corporation. It was a charming ride of a half dozen miles across the bay and another dozen on an electric train through a country of flowers. Roses were everywhere, tea roses and all conceivable kinds. There was one tree of the tea variety that seemed at least fifteen feet in circumference, and the top one solid mass of blossoms. At the plant we met Miss Beatriz Michelena, preparing for her departure on the morrow to the company's Boulder Creek Camp. Miss Michelena had with her one of her dogs—Nikolas II., an eleven-months-old Russian wolf hound, even now as tall as the tallest known of his breed. The California's star is a lover of animals and likes to talk of her horse and dogs. She does complain of open-air work, however, she says before she can get rid of one coat of tan there is another on top of it. Really, there must be a host of girls scattered through these U. S., who would envy not only her opportunities for acquiring this evidence of the sun's favor, but its acquisition as well.

This Sabbath in San Francisco has been a day of rain. It is the second daylight downpour we have seen since leaving New York nearly two months ago. Not strange, is it, that rain should remind a New Yorker of home?

(N. B. to N. Y.—Ignore last remark. Purely for California.)

George Periolat.

GEORGE PERIOLAT offers in "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's $20,000 prize photoplay, one of the most interesting and effective characterizations shown thus far on the screen—that of Luke Lovell, a Gypsy.

Mr. Periolat's remarkable genius of make-up stands him in good stead, for, as the accompanying picture shows, this might be a likeness of a real Gypsy rather than of an actor made up as one. Luke Lovell is a Gypsy in every sense of the word, a mingled good and bad dominating his activities, a loyalty to Hagar, possible of being swerved, being the most apparent element.

George Periolat.

Mr. Periolat lends to the character a deft touch that is most convincing and illustrates why he is often referred to as "the screen's best character actor." Chicago was his birthplace, where the family is well and favorably known. He went on the stage when twenty years old, playing engagements subsequently with the following companies: Maurice Barrymore, Otis Skinner, Julia Arthur, Hoyt's "A Texas Steer" and also being given important parts in the old Dearborn stock company in Chicago.

Mr. Periolat went into pictures five years ago, his first work being with the Essanay. He later joined Selig and finally the American, which company he left to go with the Universal, where he was leading man to J. Warren Kerrigan. He returned to Santa Barbara when "The Diamond from the Sky" was being prepared.

Marvelle Spencer, Ideal Ingenue.

NARROW escapes and hair-breadth avoidance of death have become part of the daily routine of a picture player's life, but the accident which recently befell Marvelle Spencer, the idolized little ingenue of the Ideal Company, at the Los Angeles studios, gave scores of onlookers a thrill they will never forget. A company of ten Ideal artists were taken a short distance from the city to enact several scenes for the filmization of William MacLeod Raine's famous western novel, "Crooked Trails and Straight," and the final work of the day called for a mad chase of several mounted cowboys after the fleeing Miss Spencer, carrying a message to save the life of her sweetheart. The scene was timed accurately, the place marked off where the girl was to be overtaken, and the word given to start. Hardly had Miss Spencer started on her wild dash than her horse shyed at the line of people watching the players, and, stumbling, threw her to the ground, rendering her unconscious. The swooping cavalry of cow ponies and their riders bore down upon her at top speed, and by a remarkable exhibition of horsemanship swerved to each side as they passed and Miss Spencer received but a slight cut from one of the nearest horses. She was rushed at once to the city and at present is recovering rapidly, remarking gamely to the doctors she will be in shape to retake the scene within a few days. It was the popular Ideal ingenue's first experience in western picture work and, but for the clever riding of the Ideal cow-punchers, might have been her last.

Marvelle Spencer.

M. H. Hoffman

Old Exchange Man Who Has Been Appointed General Manager of Universal Exchanges.

M. H. HOFFMAN, who has been general manager of the Universal Film Exchange of New York for the past year, was last week appointed general manager of exchanges for the Universal Film Mfg. Co. This is one of the most important positions in the Universal organization, and the officers of the company feel that they have selected the logical man for this exacting office. They admit, however, that the job of selecting was one of the hardest they ever tackled, for it is their proud boast that the Universal has a remarkable group of exchange men. The choice lay among some ten or twelve men of long experience, any one of whom would have been fully qualified for the work; but the fact that Mr. Hoffman happened to be located in New York, where he would be in closer touch with the executive officers of the Universal, turned the scales in his favor.

M. H. Hoffman.

Mr. Hoffman's rise in the exchange field has been very rapid and entirely due to his own efforts and personality, having been successively manager of the Twenty-third street and the Mecca exchange. He is at once businesslike and genial and has always been a personal friend to every exhibitor in his territory. He can talk to each exhibitor in his own language; and in such a cosmopolitan city as New York this implies a familiarity with something like ten languages and several dialects of each one. Mr. Hoffman is one of the squarest men alive, and it is his proudest boast that he has never broken faith with an exhibitor.

In assuming his new duties as general manager of exchanges, Mr. Hoffman is particularly gratified that he will still be in direct touch with the exhibitors, as he will make his headquarters in New York City and will retain his interest in the men with whom he has been associated. Just to show that he was still there as a solicitor, Mr. Hoffman celebrated his last week in the New York exchanges by taking a flying trip through western Massachusetts and Connecticut, in which he added a weekly business to the New York exchanges amounting to $450. The theaters which he signed are all large and representative houses like the Princess, Waterbury, the Bijou, Springfield, and the Majestic, Hartford.

Mr. Hoffman feels deeply the honor and the responsibility of his appointment and wishes it to be distinctly understood that he is at the service of everyone of the Universal exchanges. He regards his position as one of service, and the more service he can be to everyone the better he will be pleased.

"TILLIE'S PUNCTURED ROMANCE" IN COURT.

The action brought in the Supreme Court, New York County, by Marie Dressler against the Keystone Film Co. and Alco Film Corporation, to restrain them from exploiting the picture entitled "Tillie's Punctured Romance," came on for trial before Mr. Justice Page at Special Term on Tuesday, May 11, 1915, and continued every day until May 19, 1915. Edward L. Mooney represented plaintiff, and Austen G. Fox and Arthur Butler Graham represented defendants. Many witnesses were called, including Job E. Hedges, Adam Kessel, Charles O. Baumann, Walter Hoff Seeley, Howard C. Griffiths, Marie Dressler, her husband, James H. Dalton, and others, and the chief conflict of testimony seemed to be as to whether defendant Keystone Co. had declared that Mr. Dalton was just the man to handle the picture and thereafter did not ask him to handle it, and also whether the original agreement contemplated exploiting the picture by engaging large theaters throughout the country in which to show it, or whether the intention was to exploit the picture on the state rights basis.

Edna May

FEW child actors have had just the peculiar experience that has fallen to the lot of Edna May Van Velzer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Van Velzer, of 337 West 43d street, New York. With her parents Edna May has spent some time in China, where her father was interested in a motion picture project promoted by Brodsky of San Francisco. When Mr. Brodsky formed a company of players to go to China Mrs. Van Velzer and her daughter, together with their trick dog Nero, were chosen from the numerous applicants who sought to make the long journey.

Edna May.

Leaving San Francisco, the company stopped at Honolulu to make a few pictures and then went straight on to China by way of Yokohama, arriving finally in Hong-Kong. During the following nine months the company worked constantly in China, Ethel May appearing regularly in the productions and winning wide popularity among the Chinese and Japanese, who came from miles around to see her in the pictures. Nero, the trick dog, also came in for considerable praise. During the engagement several wealthy Japanese proposed to adopt little Edna May, so attached to her had they become.

It is said of Edna May that she is the first white child that ever played in a company with Chinese actors.

Mrs. Van Velzer had signed contracts for a continuance of the engagement in China and expected to remain there for an indefinite period, but these plans were frustrated by the European war, so she came back to New York and is seeking engagements with American manufacturers.

LASKY GETS "THE TRAVELING SALESMAN" AND "THE CHORUS LADY."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co. announces that it has obtained the moving picture rights for both "The Chorus Lady" and "The Traveling Salesman," the two most famous comedies written by James Forbes which were both originally produced by the late Henry B. Harris and which went far toward making the reputation and fortune of that manager.

When "The Chorus Lady" was first produced, it ran for almost two entire seasons in New York City, being transferred to several different theaters in order that its run might continue without interruption. It was considered then, as now, to be the best and most truthful picture of life behind the scenes ever presented on the stage, taking that life from the viewpoint of the less important artists.

"The Traveling Salesman" followed almost immediately after "The Chorus Lady," with equally great success. Though dealing with an entirely different phase of life, it was just as true in characterization and made just as wide an appeal. Both will be among the fall productions of the Lasky Feature Play Co.

VITAGRAPH MAKING "THE CAVEMAN."

Work on "The Caveman," in which Robert Edeson will be supported by Lionel Adams, Charles Eldridge, Fay Wallace and Lillian Burns, was started last week at the Vitagraph studio. The production, which will be one of the most pretentious that the Vitagraph Company has ever turned out, is taken from the play and the book of the same name by Gillette Burgess. It will be in six reels.

The title role in "The Caveman" is one of Mr. Edeson's most favorite parts and which he starred in successfully for several seasons, both on Broadway and on tour. Arrangements have been made by J. Stuart Blackton to utilize the steel works at South Bethlehem, Pa., for several scenes.

McCutcheon Gets Victoria Cross

Famous Photoplayer, Now Captain in British Army, Decorated for Bravery.

CABLEGRAMS which have reached these shores from war-ridden Europe mention the fact that a Lieutenant Wallace McCutcheon had been decorated with the Victoria Cross, promoted to the rank of captain on the field, and commended by the British Government, as the result of extraordinary bravery in the face of the enemy. According to the dispatches, this is of interest to Americans because Captain McCutcheon, who is now recovering from his wounds in a French Hospital, is an American.

But if the foregoing is of interest to the average American it is doubly so to exhibitors and photoplay patrons in view of the fact that Captain McCutcheon and the Wallace McCutcheon who, with Miss Joan Sawyer, figured so prominently in Kalem's "Motion Picture Dancing Lessons," are one and the same.

"Wally" McCutcheon, as he is known along Broadway, together with Miss Sawyer, were for a time instructors of dancing to the "400" and among the most popular of the interpreters of the modern dances. It was because of this popularity that the two were engaged by Kalem, over a year ago, to give dancing lessons before the motion picture camera. Under the title of "Motion Picture Dancing Lessons," these took the country by storm. He was also a Biograph director.

When the present titanic struggle broke out, McCutcheon volunteered his services to the British Government. The experience he had gained while a member of the New York National Guard made him a most desirable recruit and he was enlisted.

It will be remembered that dispatches from abroad during the early weeks of the war told of the concern caused by the mortality rate among the British officers. It was because of the resultant shortage in the commissioned personnel that Mr. McCutcheon received his first promotion.

According to the stories which have filtered over here, Captain McCutcheon's promotion to his present rank occurred in this wise. His company was ordered to attack a certain German trench. This was done, but the soldiers had barely covered half the distance when a bullet laid McCutcheon low. The sight of their leader falling threw his men into a panic and they wavered. In spite of his wound McCutcheon staggered to his feet and led his men forward. The trench was captured although only a handful of men lived to tell the tale. McCutcheon received several other wounds while repulsing a German force which attempted to recover the lost trench, but pluckily refused to be carried to a field hospital until sufficient British reinforcements to hold the position in the face of further attack, had arrived.

HOLLAMAN HEADS A NEW COMPANY.

Rich. G. Hollaman, one of the oldest pioneers in the moving picture business, is again in the harness as the president of the Mirograph Corporation, a close corporation for a nominal amount, though the stockholders include people of wealth and prominence. H. Randolph Guggenheimer, of the well-known Guggenheimer family of New York, is treasurer, and Wm. S. Ginnel, Jr., is the secretary.

The technical director is H. J. Streyckmans, who is too well known in the trade to need an introduction here. The service he rendered to the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Mutual Film Corporation in responsible positions is a matter of film history. The dramatic director is Roy Applegate.

The company is now engaged in producing "All for a Girl," by Rupert Hughes, as played by Douglas Fairbanks. Miss Renee Kelly, the beautiful and accomplished star, makes her film debut in this vehicle, having recently closed with "Daddy Long Legs," in which she was playing the leading feminine role opposite Henry B. Miller. Miss Georgia Harvey also makes her first appearance before the camera in this film. Miss Harvey is a Broadway favorite, her most recent success having been in "The Pink Lady."

CONTRACTS FOR TWENTY-NINE KLEINE FEATURES.

Some idea of the progressiveness of Pacific Coast exhibitors may be obtained from the statement of George Kleine's Seattle office, that it recently closed three contracts for the exhibition of twenty-nine Kleine features, each in three Oregon towns whose total populations are less than 1,620 souls. Theaters in Prairie City, population 348; Canyon City, population 364, and Burns, Oregon, population 904, have each contracted for the entire Kleine list of features.

United Stars Going to Reading

Edwin August Takes Pyramid Company to Convention City—Will Make Picture There.

EDWIN AUGUST, United star, and director of the Pyramid Company, and the remaining members of his company, Ruth Blair, Iva Shepard, and Bill Bailey, accompanied by Ethel Grandin of the United-Grandin Company, and Arthur Smallwood, president of the Smallwood Film Corporation, will leave for Reading, Pa., on Saturday, June 5, in order to make a photoplay for the United Program in the coal mining districts surrounding Reading during the days immediately preceding the convention of the Pennsylvania State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held from June 7 to 10 in that city, which they will attend. They will leave early Saturday morning, arriving in Reading at noon, and will be met by the officers of the local Picture's Exhibitors' Association.

Until Tuesday afternoon, when the first entertaining for motion picture stars will begin with an automobile parade, they will devote their attention to the making of the picture play, the scenario for which has been written by Edwin August, and which will give a graphic picturization of life among the humble miners. Mr. August has been requested to make scenes for this picture before a group of stars from other companies who intend to be present at the convention, so it is planned that an exhibition picture making expedition will be held at some time during the convention by the Pyramid Company.

Marian Swayne and Joseph Levering, two United stars from the Empress Company, will be unable to attend the convention as they are traveling in California, but Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the scenario editor of the company, who recently left Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, to come to New York, will be present, and will join actively in the discussion concerning censorship and the closing of picture theaters on Sunday, both of which he violently opposes.

Ray Smallwood, director of the Grandin Company, will also attend the convention. United stars from the Superba Company will be unable to go to Reading, due to a proposed trip to Canada, Maine, and along the Atlantic Coast, on which Director Charles A. Hutchinson is planning to take them, during which they will make comedies for the United Program screen.

To Produce in America

Famous Itala Company Will Have Studios Here—Definite Arrangements Not Announced.

ADVICES from Torino confirm recent rumors that the Itala Company is to produce in America. This move was decided on some time ago, anticipating the participation of Italy in the European war, but for various reasons Harry R. Raver, head of the American company, has withheld the information until operations were actually begun and definite statements could be made.

"Maciste," the now-famous giant of "Cabiria," will be featured in an important hero-adventure, written by Agnes L. Bain, the well-known author whose stories are well known to magazine readers.

A popular contest for the selection of an appropriate title for the first "Maciste" production will be held following a private showing of the first sample, at which time only representatives of the trade press will be permitted to compete. Fifty dollars in gold will be given for the best title submitted.

A portion of the "Maciste" productions has already been completed abroad. The remainder will be staged in America. The company of Itala players selected for the American engagement includes popular stars of "Cabiria." Many American artists will be used to round out the cast. Six reels will compose the average length of the new American-Itala productions. Much stress will be laid on the creation of novel scenes and situations, new effects and colorings and the incorporation in all productions of the Itala patented system for securing stereoscopic relief.

Mr. Raver would make no statement as to his probable market for the American-Itala productions other than an expression of confidence in the high quality of his company's films and the belief that they will sell readily when shown to responsible distributers.

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPANY RETURNS FROM CUBA!

A company of the Famous Players, headed by John Barrymore, under the direction of Oscar Eagle, last Tuesday returned to New York from Cuba, where they went about a month ago, to produce a feature film version of Richard Harding Davis' famous adventurous romance, "The Dictator."

Resignations of Roskam, President, and Abrahams, Vice-President, Are Accepted—Additional Capital and Increased Output.

FOLLOWING a recent meeting of the stockholders of the Life Photo Film Corporation and the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, an allied concern, the resignations of Edward M. Roskam as president and Leonard Abrahams as vice-president of the companies were requested and delivered. Messrs. Roskam and Abrahams also withdrew from the boards of directors.

Both companies were virtually reorganized last week, Bernard Loewenthal becoming president and remaining treasurer of each, whereas Jesse J. Goldburg continues as secretary and general manager of the Life Photo and fills the offices of vice-president and general manager of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company. Under the new regime, with a substantial increase of the capital invested, the operations of Life Photo will be on a larger scale than in the past.

Beginning with the first of June, two five-part features will be released each month and from September on a five-part feature is promised for every week. The photoplays will be adaptations of stage successes.

In speaking of the plans of the reorganized companies, Mr. Goldburg said that he did not care to make a definite announcement as yet, but intimated that there was no reasonable doubt about the additional capital invested assuring the fulfilment of the projects he has in mind. The studio in New Jersey will be retained; another probably will be leased in New York; still another will be built on the Coast, and by the coming autumn it is more than likely that the Life Photo will have installed a producing company in England. Representatives of exchanges controlling the output of the Life Photo Corporation have expressed approval of the reorganization that promises a greater number of pictures, and many applications for five-year franchises have been received.

Ruth Roland, Star of "Who Pays?"

RUTH ROLAND, who is being featured in the Pathe-Balboa "Who Pays?" series, has been on the stage for thirteen years and yet is only twenty-two. Few of the screen favorites of the day can point to a record like that.

Miss Roland made her debut at the age of four as "Baby Ruth," on the Pacific Coast, and was regarded as a phenomenon. When she was playing "Little Lord Fauntleroy," at the age of six, in San Francisco, she attracted the attention of David Belasco, who did not hesitate to say that she was the best child actress he had ever seen. She continued on the stage until she was eleven, when she was sent to a private school, remaining there until she was sixteen. Her success as an ingenue was even greater than as a child. Her versatility was such that she played comedy or drama with equal ease.

Ruth Roland.

Four years ago she was "discovered" by a Kalem director who engaged her to appear in Western and Indian plays. Later she was put into comedies and was highly successful.

Last December she received the offer of a year's contract with Balboa at a flattering salary, to star in the big "Who Pays?" series, about to be made for Pathe, and accepted. In this series she has found a fitting vehicle for her art, and her work has received universal praise. Gifted with a particularly expressive and mobile face it is very easy for her to convey her thought by her facial expression.

Miss Roland is unspoiled, popular though she is, and is all girl. She rides a horse like a centaur, fences, plays tennis, swims, fishes, shoots and runs a motor car. To her athletic tendencies may be ascribed her grace of movement and ease of manner.

Famous Players Secures Sam Bernard

AMONG the demand from exhibitors throughout the country for more frequent appearances on the screen of important stage comedians, the Famous Players Film Co. has secured the exclusive motion picture services of the distinguished and internationally popular comedian, Sam Bernard, reputed to be the highest salaried comedy star on the stage to-day. This fact possesses added interest because of the numerous efforts made by leading feature concerns for a long time past to induce this noted star to transfer his inimitable talents to the screen. Mr. Bernard ignored these past proposals in the belief that screen comedies were as yet imperfect, and it is said that only a view of the recent Famous Players comedy-features, notably the John Barrymore successes such as "The Man from Mexico," and "Are You a Mason?" convinced him that humorous subjects could be depicted on the screen with every artistic and comic advantage.

Sam Bernard.

Mr. Bernard will in a short time make his debut before the camera for the Famous Players in an adaptation of one of his greatest stage successes, probably "The Dangerous Maid." Mr. Bernard's list of comedy triumphs is so long and diversified that it is a difficult task to select the most popular and effective for screen portrayal. A repetition of his stage successes reads like a play booking agency's catalogue of comedy subjects. The best known of his delicious characterizations, however, are those of Schmaltz in "A Dangerous Maid," Conan Doyle in "The Man in the Moon," the Khedive of Egypt in "The Casino Girl," Adolph Klotz in "The Belle of Bohemia," Twanks in "The Silver Slipper," Max Hoggenheimer in "The Girl from Kay's," Schmaltz in "The Rollicking Girl," Mr. Hoggenheimer in "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer," Ludwig Knoedler in "Nearly a Hero," Herman Schultz in "The Girl and the Wizard," and Herman von Schellenvien in "He Came from Milwaukee."

GREAT REPRESENTATION FOR METRO.

General Manager Richard A. Rowland, speaking for the Metro Pictures Corporation, offers the list of high class picture houses in Greater New York playing Metro program as the best evidence of the progress and popularity of the new organization of which he is the guiding spirit.

Among the Metro exhibitors are B. S. Moss circuit of three houses, B. F. Keith's theaters in Greater New York, including the Alhambra, Crescent, and Flatbush; the Marcus Loew circuit of eleven theaters; William Fox's houses; F. F. Proctor's houses, which compose their bills with pictures and medium-priced vaudeville. The other individual houses now on the Metro roster are Regent theater, Seventy-second Street Playhouse, Royal, New Meridan, Arena, Casino, Electra, Superior, Columbia, Carlton, Claremont, Garden (Far Rockaway), Lyric, Flatbush, Duffield, Avon, Olympia, Crescent, Banner, Art, Manhattan, West End, Morningside, Riverview, Hamilton, Eighty-first Street, Avenue B, Yorkville, Grand, Circle, Classic, Waco, University, Regun, Harlem, Fifth Avenue, Burland Casino, Playhouse, Concord, Savoy, Nostrand, Atlantic Avenue, Richmond (Staten Island), Bronx Comedy, and Star, Rex, Lee Avenue, Bronx Savoy, Ronley, Rome, 107th Street and numerous others.

Edward Saunders, head of the New York Metro, claims that every house on Broadway from Forty-second street to 207th street is playing Metro pictures, with the exception of the Grange theater, at 136th street and Broadway, and the Strand, at Forty-seventh street and Broadway.

Including the outdoor theaters, the New York Metro is supplying 146 theaters in Greater New York, with an equal proportion throughout the state.

Catching a Steamboat in Rome.

Larry McGill Takes Four-Day Trip in Quest of Atmosphere for Metro Picture.

LAWRENCE B. McGILL, recently appointed director-general for Metro Pictures Corporation, admits, what no director ever was heard to deny—a craving for accuracy in settings. As a producer for the Eclair, the All Star and the Life Photo Film companies, he proved to his own satisfaction that there is no such thing as a good substitute. This or that, is, or is not, needed in a picture, and if it is needed, why time spent in the quest is well utilized. He had been with the Metro Corporation only a few days before his artistic creed was put to the test.

Lawrence B. McGill.

What happened makes a good story. We will call it "In Rome, Ga., or Catching a Steamboat," and introduce Mr. McGill as the hero. "I was considering plans for the picturization of Hulbert Footner's novel, 'The Sealed Valley,'" he said, "and found that an old-fashioned steamboat propelled in a rapid river was necessary. Now it is easy enough to locate old-time steamboats and one does not have to go far to find a river with rapids, or shoals, as they call them down South; but striking the two together is not so simple. Then there was another point to be considered. Mr. Footner's tale is of the Northwest and precludes southern vegetation.

"After a deal of unprofitable enquiry, a friend of mine suggested Rome, Ga., as a possibility. He was certain that I would find the right sort of a boat floating in a suitable river. On his recommendation I went to Rome, arriving there early one evening, knowing that I must complete my business and catch the four o'clock train back to New York on the following afternoon. It took me just about half an hour to learn that a likely craft was making daily trips up the river—a river with shoals—and that her captain lived quite a piece down the road. Rome's jitney bus is a 1905 model automobile that runs on smooth pavements, but is not trusted elsewhere. It carried me to the captain's home at 8.30 o'clock and obviously everyone had gone to bed. There are few limits to a director's nerve, but somehow I did not have the courage to rouse the household. Instead, I scribbled a note asking the captain to stop for me at the hotel on his way to the boat in the morning. This I stuck in the screen door where it couldn't be missed.

"The hotel clerk called me at seven, I took my time at breakfast and waited in the lobby. Half an hour passed and I became uneasy. I looked up my old friend, with the jitney bus, and asked to be taken 'down the road' again. A young woman met me at the door. 'Didn't the captain find a note?' I enquired. 'Sure, he found it, all right,' came the answer, 'but he said he was too busy to stop. He went up the river with a load of sand at five o'clock.'

"We jitneyed back to town and to the docks where a number of motor boats were anchored. Half an hour later I had found the owner of one, and arranged to be taken to Livermore's Island, where 'The Panther' was reported to be spending the day. Opposite a mud bank, a mile out of town, the motor broke down hopelessly. We pushed to shore; I scrambled up the bank and boarded a trolley car headed for Rome. At the hotel they told me of a man with a real automobile, who might, if properly approached, be of service. It seemed that no one had ever gone to Livermore's Island by the land route, but after a little urging the owner of the car was willing to try.

"That man ought to make a success of life. He said he never had started for any place without getting there. Nothing stopped him until we came to a freshly plowed field, over which, in the distance, we could see smoke rising from the stack of 'The Panther.' Then he allowed that he guessed we had better leave the machine and walk. Another obstacle was a canebrake between us and the river, and, having reached this, we couldn't attract the attention of anyone on the boat anchored at the island, until a laborer rowed to shore to get water from a spring. He took us out to the captain, we came to terms and located a place where the boat could be photographed going up the rapids with only rocks in the background, so that the scenes will not appear incongruous in a story of the Northwest. Altogether, I was away four days to arrange for a picture that will occupy about 300 feet in the completed production."

Mr. McGill said that he probably would take his company to the Adirondacks for the greater part of the action in "The Sealed Valley," every foot of which will be photographed out of doors. He is going to build cabins in the wilderness and is determined to have things precisely as the author intended, if it takes all summer.

W. A. S. Douglas Leaves for France.

W. A. SHOLTO DOUGLAS, for some time serial manager for Pathe, and more recently assistant to the Vice President, Charles Dupuis, sailed for France on Saturday, May 15, by the American liner St. Louis. Mr. Douglas is to join the forces of Charles Pathe in Paris and expects to remain abroad permanently, where he will represent the Pathe American interests.

Mr. Douglas's career makes interesting reading. Born in the north of Ireland thirty years ago, he ran away from school at the age of fifteen and volunteered for service in South Africa against the Boers. Because of his height his story that he was twenty was accepted, and he remained in the army for nine months, taking part in the battle of Paardeburg, and entering Pretoria with Roberts' triumphant army. Returning home he tried the entrance examination for a commission in the army, but was "plucked." Then he enlisted in the famous South Lancashire regiment known as the "fighting 40th," which was recently cut to pieces at the battle of Neuve Chapelle. With a section of his regiment he went to West Africa and saw service in the native rebellion of 1905, where as sergeant in charge of a maxim gun he was severely wounded. Later he was promoted to a commission as second lieutenant. He resigned his commission and went to Hayti as a soldier of fortune, becoming a major in Simon's heterogeneous army. He was with him at the capture of Port-au-Prince, at which time Mr. Douglas came to the United States and entered the newspaper field, serving four years on the staff of the Philadelphia North American, and three years on the New York Evening Journal, which position he left to join the Pathe forces.

W. A. S. Douglas.

Mr. Douglas is a relative of the Marquis of Queensberry, who devised the rules by which modern boxing matches are governed, and is himself in the line of succession to that famous Scotch title. His great great grandfather was the celebrated Duke of Queensbury, head of the house of "Black Douglas" and famous in literature as "Q," bosom friend of George IV., and the hero of novels by both Thackeray and Conan Doyle.

"THE SPENDER" (United Prohibition Drama).

"The Spender," a two-reel photodrama from the pen of Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the Unitarian minister who left the pulpit to write motion picture scenarios, has been chosen by the National Unitarian Church Association to be used as a campaign picture in the fight of the church and of the National Unitarian Temperance Society against intemperance. This picture will be shown all over the world as a positive factor in the temperance fight and will replace the filmization of Jack London's story, "John Barleycorn," which was used last year, and was sent to Unitarian churches, meetings and temperance conventions over the entire world.

Walthall With Essanay.

George K. Spoor Announces That He Has Placed Gifted Actor Under Contract for Feature Productions.

DURING his visit to New York, last week, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company, announced that he had placed Henry Walthall under contract to appear in Essanay feature productions, thereby securing one of the most gifted screen actors in the country.

Mr. Walthall's new alliance was not altogether a surprise, for rumors of the change have been in circulation for several weeks. Nor will it be surprising if Donald Crisp soon leaves the Mutual studios to direct as well as act in Essanay pictures.

Since the early Biograph days, when Mr. Walthall was developed under the direction of D. W. Griffith, he has advanced steadily in artistic accomplishment and popular favor. He is a master of subtle expression, and in parts requiring a display of emotional feeling has few equals. In Griffith's "The Avenging Conscience" and "The Birth of a Nation," he gave truly notable performances, and more recently in Balboa's production of "Beulah" his acting was the distinguishing feature of the picture.

During the past year Mr. Walthall has made several changes. He left the Griffith forces on the Coast to become a star in Balboa productions, then returned to Mutual; but now, according to the contract, his wanderings are at an end for some time.

Valdemar Psilander.

VALDEMAR PSILANDER is acknowledged by critics and the general public to be Europe's greatest and most popular dramatic screen actor; his appearance in a photoplay is an assurance of the success of the production, for his great versatility enables him to portray any character to the acme of perfection. He possesses a singular, powerful and sympathetic personality, and one of the most important factors in his great success is his ability to impress audiences with the magnetic rendition of his characterizations. His technique is finished in the extreme; he enters into the spirit of the role he is playing, thereby giving a natural and not overdrawn interpretation which is polished and elegant to the last degree. His strong face is wondrously mobile and appealing, and he suggests the true artist at a glance.

Valdemar Psilander.

Psilander's appearance in cinematography marked an epoch in this art. He realized that even greater talent is required for the picturized drama than for the spoken, and after making a thorough study of the fundamental requirements he became convinced that in this branch of acting lay an unlimited field for the development of his histrionic genius.

Since other leading producing companies have used all inducements to procure this protege of Thespis, the Great Northern Film Company is to be complimented upon its success in renewing their contract with the most brilliant and unrivalled star of filmdom, albeit an unprecedentedly enormous salary was stipulated.

To those who have yet to become acquainted with this superb interpreter of dramatic roles a rare treat is in store, to his old admirers, the anticipation of a continuance of many delightful moments.

CRYSTAL HAS DOWNTOWN OFFICE.

The Crystal Film Company has taken an office in the Longacre Building, New York, for the convenience of those who find the Crystal studio on Claremont Parkway to be inaccessible. John M. Erickson, formerly with the Lubin Company, will be in charge of the downtown office.

Otis Harlan Goes to Selig.

The Famous Light Comedian Will Star in Selig Red Seal Comedies.

OTIS HARLAN will leave New York City at an early date to succeed Harry Mestayer as lead in Selig's stock company. Mr. Mestayer will go to Los Angeles to star in Selig productions there.

Otis Harlan is one of the best known light comedians now living in America. As is well known, he achieved fame and fortune in the late Charles Hoyt's comedies, and later appeared as principal fun maker in the support of Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup" and other plays.

Otis Harlan.

"This is my first try at motion picture work," said Mr. Harlan in a recent interview, "but I am sure that I shall like the work. Like some others in the profession, it took me some little time to see the light, but, like the others, I have concluded that there are as many possibilities for artistic and conscientious work in motion pictures as in the spoken drama. I am happy, indeed, to join the Selig forces, for Mr. Selig's artistic ideals are well known."

Mr. Harlan will star in Selig Red Seal comedies, produced at the Chicago studio. He will be supported by a carefully selected company of players.

Morosco Secures Cyril Maude.

CLOSELY following the departure of George Fawcett, the well-known metropolitan star, for the Morosco-Bosworth studios, at Los Angeles, comes the announcement that this organization has signed another star of wide repute, to appear in pictures under its trademark.

Cyril Maude is the latest acquisition of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in association with Bosworth, Inc., and was secured only after much persuasion and negotiation on the part of the producers. Mr. Maude is a star of international repute, it being commonly conceded that he is one of the most beloved actors in England, while in this country his work in such triumphs as "Grumpy" and "Second in Command," both of which took New York by storm, have made him particularly popular with metropolitan audiences here.

Cyril Maude.

Mr. Maude's career has been unusually active and has included many successful tours on the other side, as well as in this country. Born in London, he obtained his dramatic instructions under Sir Charles Cartwright and the late Rona La Thiere. His first appearance on the stage was in Denver, Colo., as the servant in "East Lynne," after which he returned to England and there appeared for the first time at the Criterion Theater, London, where he registered an immediate hit. The screen vehicle for Mr. Maude has not yet been selected, but it will no doubt be one of his biggest successes on the theatrical stage. Work on this photoplay will be commenced the early part of next month.

Frohman's Funeral.

Last Rites for Famous Theatrical Manager Assume Proportions of Public Demonstration—Many Professionals Present.

THE last sad rites over the remains and in the memory of the late Charles Frohman, victim of the Lusitania disaster, were held at Temple Emanu El, Fifth avenue New York, on Tuesday morning, May 25, at 11 o'clock. There was a great attendance on the part of the members of the theatrical profession, many of whom had, at some time in their career, been connected with the deceased in a professional way. To their numbers were added the friends, relatives and throngs of citizens who knew the great manager, either personally or by reputation, and came to honor his memory. A greater demonstration has rarely been seen in New York.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman conducted the religious services and pronounced a touching eulogy to the memory of the deceased. He was followed by Augustus Thomas, a personal friend and associate of Charles Frohman, who owes much of his success as a dramatic author to the great manager. Mr. Thomas' address was remarkable for its beauty in thought and diction.

The honorary pall bearers were: Authors—Augustus Thomas, Edward Sheldon, George Ade, Henry Arthur Jones, Paul M. Potter, John W. Alexander, Richard Harding Davis, and Porter Emerson Brown. Actors—William Gillette, E. H. Sothern, Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, William Faversham, William Collier, Francis Wilson and John Barrymore. Managers—A. L. Erlanger, David Belasco, C. B. Dillingham, William Harris, Alf Hayman, Marc Klaw, Charles J. Rich, John D. Williams, Samuel F. Nixon, and Harry J. Powers.

Private services were held at the home of Daniel Frohman, brother of the deceased, and interment, also private, was made at New Union Fields, Cypress Hills, Brooklyn.

Edwin Arden.

EDWARD JOSE and his assistants began yesterday, in the Pathe studio, in Jersey City, the production of Mr. Jose's first picture release, "The Beloved Vagabond," the scenario of which is based on Edward Locke's famous novel of the same name. From all indications, this is to be one of the most elaborate productions of the year, and within the next few days the large company which Mr. Jose has engaged will journey far afield to many points of scenic beauty where the outdoor pictures will be made. That the promise of an elaborate production will be fulfilled is proven through the fact that Mr. Jose will not alone personally superintend every detail of the work, but that he has chosen a cast which, even in these days of costly picture-making, has rarely been excelled. Mr. Jose is himself an actor of sterling excellence, as has been shown by his portrayal of the leading role in "A Fool There Was" and many other big film productions. It will also be recalled that he staged nearly all of these picture plays himself and his last great effort preceding his resignation from the Fox Company was the writing of the scenario and the directing of "The Resurrection," based on Tolstoi's great novel.

Edwin Arden.

For "The Beloved Vagabond" Edwin Arden has been engaged as the particular star. In his principal support will be Kathryn-Brown-Decker, and Bliss Milford. Prominent in the cast also will be Eric Mayne, who made such a favorable impression here in "The Whip" at the Manhattan Opera House; Claude Fleming, Stephen Gratton, Harold Crane, Boris Korlin, John Coleman and Mrs. Brundage.

The release of "The Beloved Vagabond" will shortly be announced through Pathe Freres.

Francis Joyner.

TO BE ABLE to interpret convincingly and with equal ease juvenile roles and old men parts is a valuable asset to a photoplayer and it is because of this asset that Francis Joyner of the Lubin players has been so successful on the screen. It matters little to him just what type he plays. Acting to him is an art, and to his art he gives the best in him. He is not content to be a juvenile and go on day after day playing the same type parts; he wants variety, and since he has been with the Lubin players he has had an opportunity to play as many varied roles as any man in the studio. That he has been successful in them will be admitted by all who have followed his work in the Lubin pictures.

Francis Joyner.

Joyner was born in New Orleans in 1887 and began his stage career at the age of seventeen in Chicago with May Hosmer. He began by playing small parts, but his ability to put character into his work, his sincerity and hard study, gained him speedy recognition and at the end of the first season he was playing principal roles.

The following season he joined Willard Mack's repertoire company and to Mack must go considerable of the credit of bringing out the possibilities of the young actor. It was through Mack he learned the valuable lesson that to be a really good actor a man must be versatile. Joyner was with the Mack company for two seasons and then played the juvenile role in "The Futurity Winner" and with Davis Higgins.

During the next few seasons Joyner played in stock companies in Duluth, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Chicago and Brooklyn. He left the Keith Stock Company in Brooklyn to join the Lubin players and since then has played under various directors, his versatility making him in much demand.

WARNING.

Our readers in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York are hereby once more cautioned against paying any money to anyone whatever who claims to be an agent for this paper and who offers subscriptions at less than our regular rate of $3.00 per annum. We have just been advised by an exhibitor in Mamaroneck, N. Y., in regard to the operations of a swindler who is offering subscriptions to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and one or two other moving picture magazines and who is also claiming to represent the Kraus Manufacturing Company and some of our other advertisers. We understand he is a young man of rather short stature and fair complexion, well dressed, wears a diamond ring and is a good talker. In Mamaroneck he was using the letterhead of a business firm in Philadelphia and was offering the Kraus post cards at about half price and subscription to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD at $2.00, etc. It is needless to say that the man is an impostor and should be promptly arrested for swindling. We will be glad to appear against him if he is trapped by any of our readers.

It is a good plan to pay no money to unknown parties for subscriptions to magazines at any time. Either send your check or postal money order direct to the publishers or subscribe through your local newsdealer or any of the well-known subscription agencies. The safest and most direct plan at all times is to send your subscription for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 17 Madison avenue, N. Y. C.

CHICAGO PRODUCERS IN TOWN.

George K. Spoor of Essanay, and George Kleine, both of Chicago, were in New York last week. Mr. Spoor returned home after a few days' stay, but it is understood that Mr. Kleine will remain in New York for some time supervising the production of his feature pictures.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

SAN FRANCISCO LEAGUE RE-ORGANIZED.

Adopts New Constitution and By-Laws and Elects New Board of Officers.

AT A MEETING of the motion picture exhibitors of San Francisco held in the Pacific Building on May 14 the work of reorganizing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was completed and a large number signed the membership roll. A new constitution and by-laws was drawn up by a committee consisting of R. S. Abrahams, J. A. Huff, R. L. Marks, J. Partington, L. R. Greenfield, I. Oppenheimer and Eugene H. Roth and so satisfactory was this that it was adopted without change and a vote of thanks tendered the committee for its excellent work. Copies of the by-laws and constitution, together with a letter setting forth the objects of the organization and the special need at the present time for organized effort, were sent to every exhibitor in the city and by the time the next meeting is called it is expected that the membership will be further increased.

In setting forth the objects of the organization reference is made to several problems that have presented themselves recently, including the breaking of contracts on the part of exchanges. This section of the constitution is as follows: Section 1. The purposes of this organization are self-protection, to raise the standard of motion picture films, to prevent breaches of contract, either on the part of the film exchanges or exhibitor, to prevent discrimination or showing of favoritism by film exchanges, to regulate insurance rates, to secure protection against adverse legislation, to adjust difficulties with labor, to raise the moral standard of motion picture theaters, the adjustment of minor matters of importance to the exhibitor, and to handle any other matter pertaining thereto and to further the interests of all members thereof in all matters pertaining to the exhibitors' business.

At the election of officers the ones chosen two weeks ago to serve temporarily were elected to serve during the ensuing year, these being R. S. Abrahams, president; J. A. Huff, vice-president; R. L. Marks, secretary-treasurer; Eugene H. Roth, I. Openheimer, L. R. Greenfield and J. Partington, directors. H. J. Gosliner moved that a committee be appointed to represent the league in its dealings with film exchanges and the president appointed A. Goldberg, Joseph Huff, H. J. Gosliner, I. Oppenheimer, Louis Greenfield, H. L. Beach and J. Hellman. The two latter are members of the Alameda County Local and will represent the East Bay interests. Regular meetings will be held by the league on the second Tuesday of each month.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION CALLED.

Notice and Appeal to the Moving Picture Exhibitors of Michigan.

Mr. Exhibitor: Michigan State Branch No. 4, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will hold its annual convention at Lansing, Mich., Tuesday June 8, 1915, at 10 a. m. We just went through another siege in the Legislature and succeeded in preventing any unfavorable legislation, which is a benefit to you as well as it is to members of our League. Don't you think it is about time that you join and give us a little financial and moral support?

With the moving picture men well organized, it would be impossible for any set of cranks or fanatics to make laws detrimental to our business. Why not join this organization and encourage the men who have spent their time and money for the interest of the moving picture business in general?

At this meeting we will elect delegates to the San Francisco convention. If you contemplate going to San Francisco this summer, why not go with the party from the league?

Enclosed find application blank which please fill out and mail to me with $6.50 which pays your admission fee and three months dues.

Hoping to receive your application and expecting to see you at Lansing, June 8, I am, Fraternally yours,

PETER J. JEUP,

President Michigan State Branch No. 4, M. P. E. L. of America.

P. S. Hotel Wentworth, headquarters and meeting place.

INTER-MOUNTAIN LEAGUE MEETING.

Convention Held at Salt Lake on May 20—Officers Elected.

HARRY A. SIMS, of the American theater, Salt Lake, was elected president of the Inter-Mountain States Exhibitors' League at the organization meeting in the Hotel Utah, Salt Lake, Thursday morning, May 20. Other officers chosen to help direct affairs of the league were Clifton Pierce, of the Star theater, Springville, Utah, first vice-president; C. M. Stringham, of the Manti theater, Manti, Utah, second vice-president; H. J. Carrigan, of the Empire theater, Salt Lake, secretary, and A. L. Stallings, of the Princess theater, Provo, Utah, treasurer.

Fifty of the most prominent exhibitors of films in the inter-mountain country were present at the meeting and discussed ways and means of promoting the general and specific welfare of themselves. It was mentioned—oh, quite incidentally—that efforts would be made to hammer down the rates on film rentals.

One of the principal objects of the formation of the league, however, is to bring into closer association all exhibitors of films in the region of which Salt Lake is the capital, that the business of entertaining the public may be brought to a more or less uniform high standard. Closer acquaintance between exhibitors, it is believed, will cement their interests and make it possible for them to gather together now and again for a "good cry"—or a jollification meeting, as conditions demand.

MINNEAPOLIS HEADQUARTERS FOR WISCONSIN.

In the big Metro advertising display which appeared in the May 22 issue of the Moving Picture World, it was erroneously stated that Metro pictures were distributed throughout Wisconsin by the Chicago Metro Exchange with offices at No. 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill. A correct statement of the case is that Metro patrons in the state of Wisconsin receive service from the Minneapolis Metro Film Service, No. 217 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis, Minn.

MABEL CONDON LEAVES MOTOGRAPHY.

Mabel Condon, an associate editor of Motography for the past three years, and head of the New York office since September, 1913, resigned on June 1 and will leave for the Coast next week. Miss Condon expects to spend the summer in California, returning east in the autumn to continue magazine work. Since she joined the editorial staff of Motography, after a general newspaper training in Chicago, photoplay actors have had no more sympathetic interpreter of their personalities and activities. As an interviewer, as a reviewer of pictures and more recently as the business manager in the eastern territory Miss Condon has made many friends who will welcome her return to New York. Charles R. Condon will occupy the desk vacated by his sister.

KEMPNER IN CHICAGO.

J. L. Kempner, actively in charge of the sales end of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., has been in Chicago for the past few days engaged on a deal which promises to be of great importance to the interests which he represents. Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, well known in Chicago amusement circles, have recently purchased extensive territorial rights for "Prohibition," in which Mr. Kempner is also interested and are showing considerable enthusiasm over the marketing of Radium Gold Fibre screens in the mid-western territory.

MAJESTIC OWNERSHIP UNCHANGED.

Wild rumor has it that the Majestic theater, located at Woodward and Willis avenues, Detroit, Mich., has changed ownership. The Majestic Theater Company, Inc., owners of the house, requests the Moving Picture World to refute such remarks in its columns; and further states that the proprietors have no desire to sell the Majestic. The house can seat 2,160 persons.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Illinois Sate Censor Bills.

A GREAT opposition, which is being added to daily, has been manifested towards the Olson and Curran bills which have reached second reading in both the Senate and the House at Springfield. Moving picture manufacturers and exhibitors joined the Chicago club women and others opposing the bills to create a state board of picture censors for Illinois.

It seems that the most active open advocate of the Olson and Curran bills is Louis G. Stevenson, Secretary of State. The state board would be part of his office and would materially increase its patronage. In addition, the fees would go into the Secretary of State's office, not being turned over to the state oftener than once every three months. With the automobile fees, which are collected under similar arrangements, it is estimated that the fees would be worth, at two per cent. interest, $20,000 a year to the secretary of state.

Robert R. Levy, representing the International Motion Picture Association; Maurice Fleckels, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.; R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Mfg. Co.; J. P. Grier, of the Mutual Film Corporation and Samuel J. Schaeffer, representing the film manufacturers generally, appeared in Springfield last week to head off the bills. In addition, letters of protest have been pouring into Springfield from friends of the Chicago censor board.

"The Chicago censor board has worked around until it is satisfactory," said Mr. Levy. "There is no need for an additional board of censors. There seems to be more back of the bills than appears on the surface."

On May 20 a dispatch from Springfield to the Chicago News showed that an error had been made in transcribing the Curran house bill. Lines 5 and 6 of Section 3 read:

"The board shall charge a fee of one ($1.00) dollar for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet, and one ($1.00) dollar for each a 'ditional foot."

Mr. Curran announced that the house bill was intended to read the same as the senate bill on the same subject. The senate provides an examination fee of $1.00 for the first one thousand feet and $1.00 for each additional one thousand feet of film. He promised he would introduce an amendment correcting the error in the bill. The moving picture men present said that the bill, as drawn, would force the moving picture industry out of the state.

George Kleine, who is at present in New York, was also very active in taking steps against the passage of the bill as drawn. He wrote Captain Farrell, of the House of Representatives, and also wired Thomas Curran, the father of the chief bill. In addition to referring to the manifest mistake that had been made in that part of Section 3 already quoted, he also drew attention to Section 7, which reads as follows:

"Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the State of Illinois unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Illinois board of censors or the congress of censors, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars nor more than three hundred ($300.00) dollars, or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, for each offense."

Referring to this section Mr. Kleine wrote Captain Farrell as follows:

"Section 7 provides that every reel of film, including old subjects that have accumulated in various stocks should pay $1.00 per reel. There are many thousands of reels within the state that may be shown from time to time, which earn very little money, and it is a hardship to assess this tax against all of those films."

Mr. Kleine also wrote:

"In the interests of justice, as well as that of the public which would ultimately have to pay these fees, I ask that this, or any other, bill covering censorship receive serious consideration before it is acted upon by the House.

"There is one phase of the censorship practice that has not received enough attention. Manufacturers are under constant pressure to meet the growing demand for educational films. Pressure is necessary because this part of the business has been unprofitable and every added burden postpones the time when this demand will be satisfied.

"We will mail to you, and to every other member of the Legislature whose name is before us, a copy of a catalogue of educational films which has just come from the printer and which is not yet ready for distribution. Five years ago I issued a similar catalogue for the general good of the business and of the public at a great deal of expense, and rather heavy losses in film investments. I have some expectations of getting back at least the cost of the paper and printers' ink that I am putting into the present edition. There is little hope of recovering the cost of the films that are listed in the catalogue.

"It seems to me to be public policy to exempt educational films, which can be specifically described as scenic, scientific, travel, industrial and pedagogic, from censorship fees."

The outlook at the present writing looks promising for the defeat of the censor bills; but then it is hard to judge just what our state solons may do.

Credit Where Credit Is Due.

On another page in this issue there appears my review of "The Millionaire Baby," the second of Selig's Red Seal photoplays released through the V. L. S. E., Inc. In that review I did not think it was just quite the thing, from a dignified point of view, to refer to the important work done by J. A. Berst to make this film what it is.

This is the first feature picture produced by the Selig Company in Chicago under Mr. Berst's personal supervision. It gives a fine and promising indication of what may be expected in the production of pictures at the Chicago studio under his personal direction in the future, and also at Los Angeles.

In my review I referred specially to the clearness of the story as told in the pictures. This was due, I am assured by Gilson Willets, the scenario author, to Mr. Berst's personal supervision of the scenario scrip. He worked on this script night and day, going over it scene by scene many times, making revisions, changing construction and causing to be added business of his own conception. It is Mr. Berst's polishing and finishing work on the manuscript that has made the production so clear as to the story.

Mr. Berst has a very keen nose for a story. He also possesses the dramatic sense far stronger than do many photodramatists and directors. His imagination works all the time and he has a quick sense of humor, both of which faculties he applies to the making of the Selig pictures.

The manuscript of "The Millionaire Baby" was not handed to the director to put on, until Mr. Berst had himself put his O. K. in writing on each and every one of the 250 scenes. He went over the manuscript with the most delicate intelligence comb, and a polished and finished story is the result.

In direction, too, Mr. Berst gave personal attention to every detail. The sets, the properties, the wardrobe—in fact, every little detail is the work of Mr. Berst's personal supervision. He also personally attended to the final trimming, or editing, of the film.

It must be understood, when it is stated that Mr. Berst "worked" on the scenario—which he regards as the first and most important consideration in the making of a picture—that he worked on it with the author of the adaptation. He did not merely read the dramatization of the novel. He worked actually with the author of the adaptation, not as one merely suggesting this or that change, but as a collaborator; he himself writing in many scenes and much business, working on it, on many occasions far into the night, in company with Mr. Willets, the builder of the adaptation.

Mr. Berst is a terrific and a hard worker, and possesses that capacity for detail that marks him a genius in picture making. He deserves chief credit for all phases of "The Millionaire Baby;" for he alone was responsible so far as production was concerned, working, of course, shoulder to shoulder with Mr. Selig, whose acumen, in the first place, led to the purchase of this excellent story.

U. S. Court of Appeals Supports Chicago Censor Board in Barring Offensive Pictures.

The fight against the proposed state censor board for Illinois—as outlined in the Curran and Olsen bills now before the senate and house—by Chicago Women's clubs and the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union, referred to in my last letter, has been strengthened in an unlooked-for way, so far as "home rule" for Chicago is concerned.

In a decision rendered by the United States Court of Appeals, Friday, May 21, the city's right to censor moving pictures was upheld. The decision, which was unanimous, was signed by presiding Judge Francis E. Baker, Judge Kohlsaat and Judge Landis, the latter sitting as a Circuit Judge during consideration of the case.

This case arose from the filing of a suit in the United States Court, about a year ago, by the Mutual Film Corporation and the H. & H. Film Company, for an injunction to restrain the city and the Chicago board of censors from interfering with moving picture exhibitions.

Complainants held that the Chicago censorship was an abridgment of the rights guaranteed by the federal constitution, and that it abridged the freedom of the press and freedom of speech. Judge William H. Seaman (now deceased), sitting as a District Judge, after hearing the arguments, decided in favor of the city.

The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals affirms Judge Seaman's ruling. Cutouts from white slave pictures and other alleged offensive film features, ordered by the Chicago censor board, led to the filing of the suit.

The arguments in the Court of Appeals were made six months ago by Assistant Corporation Counsel George L. Reker in behalf of the city. He insisted the city had a right to censor films under its general police power.

"The city has the same right to censor moving pictures that it has to establish and maintain a health department," Mr. Reker argued at the hearing. "Censorship is the department of the city which looks after the moral health of the people, particularly the children and the youth of the city."

The decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals upholds this view.

Mr. Reker said that the ruling is sweeping in its nature, and that it leaves no further room for doubt as to the fight of the city to censor and prohibit objectionable or immoral moving pictures.

"The decision means much," he said. "Legislation is now pending in Springfield which contemplates the destruction of Chicago's censorship. The plan is to take that power away from the city and place it in the hands of the state authorities.

"The state is not as well qualified to censor Chicago's moving pictures as is the city itself. I believe the decision will do much to frustrate the attempt to take this necessary power away from Chicago."

"Twilight Sleep" Barred in Chicago.

The hearing of a petition of the Motherhood Educational Society of New York for a writ of mandamus to compel the city to permit the exhibition of "Twilight Sleep" took place before Judge John P. McGoorty, in the Circuit Court last week.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Geo. L. Reker appeared in behalf of the city and Attorney Herman Frank for the petitioning society. In his argument Mr. Reker contended the writ should not issue because the society had no standing in an Illinois court, it being a "foreign" corporation and not licensed to do business in Illinois.

Attorney Frank demurred to this contention, saying it was technical, and that the question at issue was whether or not the pictures are immoral. Judge McGoorty overruled the demurrer and declined to issue the writ.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Miss Maibelle Hikes Justice, the well-known scenario writer for photoplays, I regret to announce, is still suffering from the shock and horror of losing her only sister, Mrs. R. Delno Shymer, of New York City, in the Lusitania disaster. Miss Justice was in Los Angeles when she learned the sad news while watching the Selig production of her serial, "Chronicles of Bloom Center." Her sister and her husband sailed with a party of four gentlemen from New York City, and not one was saved. Mrs. Shymer had been over in Europe last January and February and returned in safety on the Lusitania, so that the last trip made on the vessel was taken with all confidence. For over a week after the disaster no authentic reports could be gotten from the American consul at Queenstown, Ireland. During the horrible time of suspense Miss Justice was still further prostrated by being unable to join her mother, at her sister's residence, 41 W. 47th street, New York City. The Shirmer party had sailed on a business venture, and several well-known financiers were members. Miss Justice and her mother are now the sole survivors of the family.

Another loss of life on the ill-fated vessel, which closely touches the trade, is that of Patrick L. Jones, of the London staff of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, who was returning to England after a visit to the New York office of that weekly. He was seen standing on the deck of the Lusitania, as the water rose higher and higher, taking pictures of the passengers as they scrambled into life boats. His heroism is best described by C. T. Jeffrey, of Kenosha, Wis., a survivor: "I was on B deck, on the starboard side, and about five minutes before the ship sank I saw Jones," said Mr. Jeffrey. "I happened to look from the companionway and found the deck deserted save for one young man, who stood about thirty yards away. He had a camera and was standing at the rail, balancing himself with one foot on the top rail—for the boat had a frightful list—and was taking picture after picture of the life boats that were being lowered and of those already on the water."

L. Retchin, manager of the Paulina theater, Paulina street and Milwaukee avenue, was a visitor at the World office last week and purchased a copy of the "Technique of the Photoplay." The Paulina seats 900 people and charges an admission of five cents for four reels of Universal and Mutual pictures, and 10 cents when six reels are shown. Mr. Retchin reported good business.

O. C. Hammond, owner of the Phoenix theater, 3104 S. State street, the Elba, 3115 Indiana avenue, and the Delphi, Thirty-first street and Prairie avenue, called last week and subscribed for the Moving Picture World. Mr. Hammond is at present very much interested in the output of the V. L. S. E., Inc. He was especially eager to ascertain information about Lubin's production of "The College Widow," by George Ade, which he had arranged to book in some of his houses.

Viola Allen is at present enthusiastically engaged in the production of Essanay's five-reel photoplay, "The White Sister," at the Essanay studios. As the reader may recollect, the adaptation for the photoplay is made from the novel of F. Marion Crawford, in the stage dramatization of which she made such signal success. "I am much pleased with my surroundings and with the way the work is progressing on the picture," said Miss Allen recently. "I am more than anxious to see it a great success, both because of the Essanay Company and of Mr. Crawford's family, who are greatly interested in the filming of the book story, which they consider Mr. Crawford's greatest work. It was partly for this reason that I consented to appear in the pictures." Richard C. Travers, Essanay's leading man, has returned from Chattanooga, where he was working with Essanay's Tennessee company, to play opposite Miss Allen. "The White Sister" will be released through the V. L. S. E., Inc., on July 19.

I made a call on I. Van Ronkle, Chicago district manager for the V. L. S. E., Inc., at their office in the Business College Building, southeast corner of Wabash and Adams, last week. The spacious office is being refitted as quickly as conditions will permit, owing to the strike of the carpenters and other craftsmen in this city, and will be in fine shape in about a week. Mr. Van Ronkle has allotted the various departments space to the best advantage. I was especially struck by the roomy vaults that will be used for the storage of the films, where each subject will be placed so as to be reached at a moment's notice. The inspection department has been provided with all safety against fire, as well as for the comfort of the workers. John Rock represents the Vitagraph interests at this office and still retains the former office of that company in the Schiller Building. Mr. Van Ronkle, when asked about the condition of business, stated that the volume was unprecedented and that the demands were increasing daily from all parts of the territory covered by him.

James Martin, manager of the Magic theater, Fort Dodge, Ia., writes me that he has resigned as manager of that house after holding the position for two years, and that on June 1 he will take over the lease on the Princess theater at Cedar Rapids, Ia. The Princess is now closed for renovation, which will include an addition to the building, which will add 160 more seats to the capacity, giving 700 seats in all. Work is now going on and it is expected that the Princess will open the first week in June. Mr. Martin states that business is very good at the Magic just now, after a slight lull during the early spring months.

A suit for $2,500 has been filed in the United States District Court by Federal Attorney Charles F. Clyne, against David B. Baker, president of the Chicago Moving Picture Supply Co., 37 S. Baker holds that the films were made in the United States.

Associated Service Enters Field

New Manufacturers' Combine Has Six Weeks' Releases Ready.

WITH the arrival early this week of Arthur Bard in New York after a trip from the Coast, the "Associated," the new manufacturers' combine, inaugurated the campaign which will soon place a weekly program of twenty-one reels of one and two-part dramas and comedies before the exhibitor at a figure which has heretofore been considered impossible.

The Associated is an organization composed of eight west coast manufacturers, who are merely re-entering under a new name a field with which their previous experience has made them familiar. As a step forward in the direction of a more logical and economic method of marketing their product, these concerns banded together and will not only produce in harmony, but will also distribute their own film, thereby eliminating the expensive system which up to the present has been thought necessary in the bridging of the gap between manufacturer and exchange.

Arthur Bard.

The producing companies comprising the Associated Film Manufacturers are: Empire Film Manufacturing Co., Los Angeles, of which Mr. Bard is president; Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, Santa Barbara, Cal., formerly principal producing company for Kriterion program; Linblom Motion Picture Company, San Mateo, Cal., formerly releasing on Kriterion program; Burke Film Manufacturing Company, Los Angeles, which has marketed subjects through Pathe and independent companies; Navajo Film Manufacturing Company, Los Angeles, formerly releasing on Kriterion program; Ramona Film Manufacturing Company, Santa Barbara, formerly releasing on Kriterion program; Banner Film Company, Los Angeles, makers of "Banner" brand comedies, featuring Bill Stinger.

Flavia Arcoria

EVERYONE who has followed the history of musical comedy for the last number of years recalls with pleasure the memorable bits of comedy work and the singing hits of Flavia Arcoria, who since the day when she created the role of "Lady Anne" in "The Student King" of Henry Savage, has been one of the most popular of the comediennes of the light opera stage. She has now joined the Empress Stock Company, and will support Joseph Levering and Marian Swayne in one and two reel pictures for the United Program.

Flavia Arcoria.

Speaking of her new work Miss Arcoria said: "I began working for the pictures as an extra for the Edison Company. My engagement with the Empress Company has been my first permanent one in the pictures. So far the only criticisms I have received from the director has been not to work so fast. In light comedy—especially in the light comedy such as I have done on the musical comedy stage — a certain dash, a bravado, is all that will make the part go over, so, often in working for the pictures I put too much dash in my dash. I miss the beautiful lines and the music in the pictures, but I think they are fascinating. Acting before the camera is very apt to be stilted and unreal, I think, since of course it is necessary to exaggerate many things to make the action get over to the audience."

Miss Arcoria did not tell us, but we will add it for her, that she has a smile so genuine, a sympathetic understanding so deep, a refinement and a seriousness with all her attractive sense of humor, that she quite captivates every one whom she meets. Picture fans have already begun to watch for her appearance on the screen.

Two of the splendid and unusual pictures which will appear on the United Program soon, made by the Empress Company, in which Miss Arcoria will be seen, are "The Spender" and "The Vivisectionist," a study in psychology written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris.

Reminiscences of a Studio Manager

PART I.

By Julius Stern, General Manager Eastern Universal Studios.

THE motion picture industry is the most wonderful in the world!" That was my deduction when I entered it in 1908, and it is my conclusion today. No matter how many years one puts into this business, he will always perceive that he has still something to learn. You pick out a player for a star, and the passing years prove your judgment a joke. The player is an inglorious failure. You discard some other player in favor of the man who turns out a failure, and the discarded one proves the success of the ages. The same with directors, and so you are forced to feel that this is the most marvelous business in the world. Before going into my experiences as general manager of first the Imp and then the Eastern Universal studios, I will tell of my entry into the picture business.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, now president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, had a small theater on Milwaukee avenue, Chicago. That was in March, 1908; it seems so long ago that I forgot the name of the little house. Anyway, Mr. Laemmle had me take the position of manager at a pretty meagre salary, because the limited capacity did not return a very big profit, and he therefore could not pay much. I might say that even at that time Mr. R. H. Cochrane, who created the copy for the throwaways, now vice-president of the Universal, and considered one of the advertising geniuses of the business, was associated with Mr. Laemmle as a partner.

Mr. Laemmle often found difficulty in those early days in securing the kind of films he thought would bring the people in. We dealt with Eugene Cline—"old timers" will quickly recall this pioneer film "renter"—and the Chicago Film Exchange. The latter concern was owned by Max Lewis and was one of the biggest and most formidable "renters"—the name "exchange" wasn't used so generally then—in the middle west. Today the Chicago Film Exchange is a memory. Mr. Laemmle's efforts to secure more film caused him to become interested in the film exchange business, and hence the Laemmle Film Service which started in pretty small quarters on Dearborn street, Chicago. I acted as purchasing agent, booker and assistant manager. You had to hold down a lot of jobs in those pioneer days! Mr. Maurice Fleckles had just entered the film business then and was the manager.

At the very start of his exchange business—when I was still managing the little theater for Mr. Laemmle—he secured what were known as the "Association Films" for rental to his customers; that is, he belonged to what was known as the Film Service Association, membership in which gave him the right to purchase the brands of the Edison, Vitagraph, Lubin and older film manufacturers. At about the time I took up my triple job with him, Mr. Laemmle had seen fit to withdraw from membership in the Association and to buy the films of the Independent makers—Biograph (then Independent), Great Northern and the old International Projecting & Producing Company brands. Later David Horsley began to produce the "Nestor" Independent Films in his back yard at Bayonne, N. J., and Messrs. Kessel and Bauman, from a tiny loft above a drug store at Sixth avenue and Twenty-sixth street, were watching a small company of cowboys and Indians who were making Bison films for the partners. I remember well how Charles O. Bauman sold us the first Bison release. Many people think the Bison made "Indian pictures" from the very first, but as a matter of fact that initial Bison was a white man's drama, called "The Disinherited Son's Loyalty." Bauman brought it into our office himself! He doesn't sell his stuff that way nowadays!

Then Mr. Laemmle got the manufacturing idea, too—or, rather, he had had it for some years but now decided to apply it—and engaged as producer the late W. V. Ranous, of the Vitagraph, at what seemed to be a phenomenal salary for a director, but which would be considered ordinary now. Mr. Laemmle also engaged Florence Lawrence and her husband, Harry Solter, of the Biograph. Miss Lawrence had just then developed into the first of the "Picture Stars," under the name of the "Biograph Girl." I became interested in Mr. Laemmle's manufacturing company at the outset, but did not quit the exchange business to join it until a year later.

We hit on "Imp" as the name of our films through a prize contest. The word was made up of the first three initials of the firm name: "Independent Motion Pictures Company." Other Independent manufactories started, until, all told, they were able to give the Independent exchanges quite a program. I must say it wasn't exactly a high quality program, while good for its day, considering the handicaps that the Independent manufacturers of that time had to carry—limited capital and patents' trouble. These other manufacturers were: "Actophone," produced in the old Cameraphone studios on Eleventh avenue, New York City. Strange to say, these are the present Universal studios! Of course, the Actophone Company used but one floor, whereas the Universal today has stages on every floor. "Powers," made by P. A. Powers, now treasurer of Universal, in a renovated police stable at Wakefield, New York

First Imp Anniversary Banquet, October 25, 1910.

City. Mr. Powers had associated with him Joseph A. Golden, who had been a scenario writer and director for the Biograph, and Ludwig G. Erb. Mr. Golden is now president of the Crystal and Mr. Erb vice-president of the United Film Service. "Thanhouser," produced by Edwin Thanhouser in a renovated skating rink at New Rochelle, New York. Mr. Thanhouser had no associates in the enterprise but Lloyd F. Lonergan even then was writing the Thanhouser scripts; Bert Adler was a sort of general assistant and one of the first of the picture press agents; and I think the director was Barry O'Neil, now one of the chief directors for Lubin. The first leading man of that first Thanhouser Company was Frank Crane, who later became one of my directors in the Universal studios. He gave stage directions to some of our very best leading men. "Pantograph," promoted by Tom Evans, now the proprietor of his own film factory and actually produced by Paul Panzer, and later by W. V. Ranous, who had quit the Imp. Mr. Panzer had left the Vitagraph Company, one of whose first leading men he was, to help Mr. Evans form the Pantograph. Later Mr. Panzer went to Pathe, where I last heard of him as the villain in "The Perils of Pauline." George Edwards Hall, who has been with the Universal since the beginning, was also a Pantograph director.

I have already mentioned David Horsley's "rear yard" Nestor studio and the company, Messrs. Kessel and Bauman, sent forth from above the Sixth avenue drug store to make pictures in Staten Island. Milton H. Fahrney, who is still director for Mr. Horsley producing the new MinA brand for the General Film Company, was his director even then, and I think that Al. E. Christie, now the Universal-Nestor comedy director, was an assistant to Mr. Fahrney at that time. Mr. Horsley ran the camera until he became prosperous enough to employ Alfred H. Moses, Jr., who left the management of a film exchange to see if he could manipulate a moving picture camera. Mr. Moses liked the photographic end so much that he has stuck to it, being one of the photographic experts today of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. At the Kessel-Bauman loft the bookkeeper was A. E. Gaussman, now interested in the Metro Litho Company. I think their first director was Charles K. French, who is still producing pictures in Los Angeles, and Pierce Kingsley, who is at present making Dramagraph features, wrote those first Bison scripts. "Eclair," "Ambrosio," "Lux," "Itala," "Great Northern," these were, as today (with the exception of Eclair) imported brands, but undoubtedly they were very welcome in the Independent theaters at that time of ambitious but by no means perfect American-made films.

Speaking of small beginning, I mustn't forget Imp's. Mr. Ranous used the open-air platform of the Harley-Merry studio in Brooklyn. The offices were on the first floor of the building at 111 East Fourteenth street, and the factory on the floor above. Mr. Tom Cochrane was Imp's first manager, and R. H. Cochrane handled the advertising, as he had for the Laemmle Exchange and the little theater before that. Leon J. Rubenstein, present publicity man for Thanhouser, was an assistant to Manager Cochrane, and "Doc" Willat, fresh from the Vitagraph factory, was superintendent of our factory. Another present-day feature manufacturer, Edward Roskam, of the Life Photo, was Doc's assistant, and Jack Cohn, the present editor of the Animated Weekly, was a boy in the dark room. Joe Brandt, present manager of the home office of the Universal in New York City, shortly afterward came in as Mr. Laemmle's secretary.

The Imp then moved to a more spacious office and factory at 102 West 101st street. The Independent manufacturers organized the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company—called for short "The Sales Company"—and moved into the offices we vacated on Fourteenth street. The sales company marked a wonderful advance by the Independents at the time. Herbert Miles, who had for long been secretary of the Film Service Association, became secretary of the Sales Company. He also made the Yankee films for the Sales Company program. William Steiner, famous among Film Service Association members, was associated with Mr. Miles in this enterprise. Then Herbert Blache started the Solax films at Flushing, L. I., where he had been manager of the Gaumont plant, and his sales manager was George A. Magie, now general manager of Universal City. Besides Bison, Kessel and Bauman entered the Reliance in the Sales Company list, producing these films in a studio that is now the home of a lithograph company. They engaged many of the Biograph players—Marion Leonard, James Kirkwood and Henry Walthal, which made quite a sensation in the Independent circles of that day. Of course, the pioneer Independent makers, on whose beginnings I have tried to throw some light, all released regularly through the Sales Company.

About this time Mr. Laemmle decided on a four months' trip to Europe and sent to me at his Chicago exchange to come on and take his chair in his absence. I therefore undertook the general business management of the Imp Company until Mr. Laemmle's return, when I devoted myself entirely to the studio, which was then on West Fifty-sixth street. Mary Pickford, who at that time we were publicizing as "Little Mary," and who had been engaged by Mr. Tom Cochrane at a moderate figure, was just ending her career with the Imp. Others in the "stock" then were Owen Moore, who had just wed Miss Pickford and with whom he had worked at the Biograph studios; King Baggot, still loyal to Imp-Universal pictures, after five years' service; Isabel Rae, now of Biograph, and William Shay, now a star in feature pictures. The stage was a little affair and the directors were Francis Grandon and Tom Ince; the latter is today the proud Czar of Inceville. My first scenario editor was Henry (Pathe) Lehrman, who is now a director and one of the owners of the L-Ko comedy films on the Universal program. After him as scenario editor came Herbert Brenon, who had been runnning a small picture house out in Pennsylvania and who later became one of the Universal directors and the maker of "Neptune's Daughter."

Shortly after I took up the managerial reins at the Imp studios, a young man by the name of Jack Reid came to us with a unique proposition. It was to film a story around a submarine; he stated he could "fix it" with the government for the submarine, and we accepted his proposition. I gave the scenario to Mr. Grandon for production, and, as was the case with almost every Imp made, the director "took" a good many more feet than he needed. In this instance, 2,000 feet were taken. We looked at the "first positive" to see what eliminations were to be made to bring the picture down to the required thousand feet. However, all that Mr. Grandon turned in seemed so vital to the subject that I was honestly puzzled where to start cutting. At that time, let me add, there had never been an American-made two-reel subject. The "market" had never asked for such an incongruous length, but with the 2,000 feet of submarine stuff-that-couldn't-be-cut I decided to take a chance. We would launch it on the market as it stood! Mr. R. H. Cochrane wrote some ads about it in a little trepidation; we all felt nervous about the venture—but lo and behold! the exchanges responded and bought the subject. Yes, and more marvelous, the Independent theaters consented to book it, and we even got letters from them saying that their audiences sat both reels through. Indeed, "From the Bottom of the Sea," which was the title of the subject, was a great success! Today, of course, the two-reel picture is an ordinary length. What vast changes come in short periods in the motion picture business! For, after all, it is but a few years since we released "from the Bottom of the Sea" and held our breath!

"THE MELTING POT" AT HIPPODROME.

"The Melting Pot," initial production of the Cort Film Corporation, in which Walker Whiteside has been starred, is to be shown for the first time at the Hippodrome next Sunday, continuing as the attraction of the week at the big Sixth avenue playhouse. Efforts are being made by Manager Tauber of the Hippodrome and the Cort forces to make the first showing a gala event in theatrical and picture circles. Mr. Whiteside will see himself on the screen for the first time on Sunday evening and a large number of stage and photoplay celebrities will attend that performance in honor of Mr. Whiteside.

The music for the film has been especially arranged because of the large part which the art plays in the development of the screen version of Zangwill's great play. The Hippodrome orchestra will play the same symphony as that played by the orchestra which appears in the concert scenes of the picture and the ceremonial marches used on such occasions will be played during the Easter parade scenes in the Kishinef streets.

John Cort, president of the corporation, has made arrangements with the Hippodrome management so that all exhibitors who wish to may see the picture.

ALL STAR CAST IN "HEARTS AND SWORDS."

Louise Glaum, George Fisher, Jack Davidson, Gertrude Claire and Charles French comprise the strong cast that will be presented in "Hearts and Swords," the thrilling Domino story of an incident in the Mexican revolution that is to be released on the Mutual program by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, June 24.

British Notes.

AS mentioned in my communication of last week the French Government has invited the assistance of three leading motion picture producing houses in that country to co-operate with them in the photographing of incidents and movements along the French line of advance at the front. Now, I hear, there is a likelihood of the British Government following this example. A journalist usually well informed upon matters military tells me that within a few weeks official kinematographers will be seen near the British firing line, their purpose being to record the movements and position of the troops. As in the case of France, those pictures suitable for public presentation may be released to exhibitors through the ordinary channels, but fundamentally the experiment is for military purposes only and it would not be surprising if none of the films so taken should ever pass beyond the censor.

Important negotiations are pending for the reproduction by the camera of another batch of notable English stage classics. After considerable inducement Sir Arthur Pinero has consented to personally superintend the perpetuation of his plays, "The Gay Lord Quex," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "Iris," and others. Oscar Wilde's play, "Lady Windemere's Fan," and "The Importance of Being Earnest" and Arnold Bennett's "The Great Adventure" are also down for early reproduction.

It seems paradoxical in times when reputations are very hard to make and very easy to lose, that a man who was unknown five years ago should achieve the fame held by the late and respected Bunny. Had he been a statesman or a great soldier the English press could not have paid more sympathetic tribute upon his demise, and last Wednesday column obituary notices were the order of the day in almost every daily newspaper. Bunny's diverse work disarmed criticism and his numerous biographers are agreed that his popularity sprang alone from his naturalness, his complete disaffection for the dramatic or histrionic. In trade spheres the loss is none the less and the innumerable messages of condolence passed through the Vitagraph Co.'s London offices must have been sufficient to warrant a special department. Bunny's personality was typically Dickensian and his ultra-English characteristics contributed materially to his success both in the works of that famous author and in his partnerships with his physical opposite, Miss Finch. In course of time Bunny in the flesh may be forgotten, but as nature's pioneer picture player the Bunny on the film will live through many generations to come.

An application of the moving picture possessing at least the merit of originality is foreshadowed by Mr. Langford Reed who opines that the day is advancing when the commercial salesman will carry with him a portable projecting apparatus as an indispensable a necessity as his illustrated catalogue. Mail order courses, correspondence schools, and postal professors appear to have carried the science of salesmanship to a fine degree, but the commercial traveller fortified with films illustrating his wares in actual use and a portable apparatus for their exhibition should be at a marked advantage over his brother dependent alone upon the inevitable pamphlet and stereotyped arguments, however flowery and exuberant they may be.

A recent estimate places the number of men engaged in the moving-picture industry who have joined the colors since August last at upwards of 20,000. One hundred and twenty men are serving from one circuit alone.

The Edison Company moved from Clerkenwell Road, London, into their new central premises, 164 Wardow street, London, last week, the change bringing the last of the great American producing agencies into the heart of our accredited film center.

The announcement, recently to hand, that four leading manufacturers in the States have decided to join hands in the marketing of special features has been received with a certain amount of apprehension in this country. When the industry was in the weaning stage, when the great names in picturedom today were comparatively meaningless, it was a matter for admiration that in America, the birthplace of syndicalism, the element of the monopolist had been so far kept out of a promising industry. No doubt it was due mainly to the absence of precedent that the only ambitious attempt we have had on this side to create a "corner" ended so ignominiously. It must not be inferred for one moment that the amalgamation in question has been accepted to solve a special difficulty—i. e., that of distribution of features and prevention of duplication. But without doubt it has fomented a suspicion against what might follow. And it very often happens in business that a suspicion of this kind is infinitely more disconcerting than the actuality.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Miss Helen Case.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES, releasing three-reel feature dramas on the General Film Company's program, have secured a leading woman of unusual personality and ability, and one with an enviable record of screen work. Miss Helen Case, recently with the Vitagraph Company, and one who has been seen with very important releases of a number of companies during the past four years, has brought to Knickerbocker Star Features much clever talent and skill, the result of much hard work and successful experience on the stage in vaudeville, musical comedies, heavy dramas, besides screen work with several of the largest producers.

Helen Case.

Miss Case is a woman with charm and convincing personality, somewhat of a serious tendency, but equal to characters of most varied types. She excels in characters calling for strong emotion, passion and the display of gripping personal force.

With the Vitagraph Company she proved herself such a good horsewoman that she was sent to the Western Vitagraph Company, with whom she took the leading parts in all dramas calling for daring and spectacular riding. In "The Thumb Print," "The Legend of the Black Chasm" and "The Picture Writer," Miss Case was at her best and won many laurels. In "The Thumb Print" she was the first leading lady with Earle Williams.

Miss Case was also leading woman in all of the military dramas of the Kay Bee and the Broncho companies, following her engagement with the Vitagraph. Afterwards she joined the 101 Bison Company of the Universal and did all the heavy riding acts, calling for fearless action and great daring.

In Knickerbocker Star Features Miss Case will be called upon for most difficult roles; at present she is engaged in the first release, "The Kick Out," playing the part of the Mayor's daughter, with Ralph Stuart as Mayor. This part is calling for a display of most varied qualities, from simple girl-like affection for her father, tragic emotion in romance, to a hand-to-hand encounter with roughs and a real fight in issuing an edition of The Clarion, when plunder and murder are in the air.

ESSANAY PRODUCES "BRAGA" STORIES.

Essanay has purchased the photoplay rights for the famous Braga detective stories by Henry C. Rowland, which have been appearing in the Cosmopolitan. There is a touch to these stories that is irresistible, and critics declare they are excellent for photoplay production. They include "Braga's Double," "The Rajah's Tunic," "Jabez's Conquest," "Business Rivals," "Legrand's Revenge," and "The Return of Gentleman Joe."

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THIS is the life! What life? Why, the theatrical life. If we fall down on the "straight" we can make good on the picture. They have a lot of panhandlers with them playing leads. I knew Ignatz Cowboy when he used to pick up my hairpins and, of course (as you know), I'm married, he used to be valet to my husband. Occasionally he would play parts. Of course I am just off the road and I do not wish to make comments until I know where I stand. You see that big beast standing over there. I don't wish to do harm to anybody, but if I ever met him on the road again I'd smash his face. Nice? Oh, yes, he's nice, but what is he doing down here, doing picture work? Why ain't he working on his merits? Me! Why, I've just closed and came down here to see what some of those fourflushers are doing. Me work in this with forty-five weeks of good stuff—the regular burlesque! Not for mine. I was foolish in my time, but that was when I drank milk. I've got wise. It makes me laugh to read about all the big people going into the pictures. Why, we put on sketches that kill them, and if they fall flat we let the curtain drop and put on a picture that brings down the house. Then we come in before the enthusiasm dies out. Say! You can't beat the pictures. They've hurt us and wounded us, and put us out of the business, but tell the truth; how many of us ever knew of a twenty-six or a fifty-two week contract before the pictures came in? Of course I am generous to concede that we are all professionals. And did you ever notice that were it not for the pictures there would still be a lot of cabaret singers still singing for the treats. Every time you see a piano run out in 'one' you may go home and make your wife a present, because you lose. In nine times out of ten they are graduates of the cabaret, or paid by the song publishers. They are the by-products of not only the motion pictures, but of the management."

All people are not sincere. For instance, a young lady who sat beside me said to her escort, "I love Charlie Chaplin." Of course you've got the pulse of the escort. He was an admirable young man, and exceedingly de (pardon) composed. "Why do you love him?" he timidly asked. "Because he is so decided," she answered. "He is, yes and nay," O-o-o-o-h!

The Chaplin case is one of the most powerful demonstrations of the present age of billing. That brings them in. That is where the exhibitor wins. Something new and novel. I passed a place a few nights ago and saw placards announcing pictures of Peary's explorations. It was supplemented by an announcement that "Peary discovered the North Pole, but it was not 'Cooked.'"

And bad as the pun may be you cannot blame the exhibitor in face of the stuff some of the publicity agents put out. It is easy to determine those who have been trained in the mercantile business and those who have had some experience in the handling of motion pictures. I have read the chaff and the more I read it the more I regret that the particular element to which they refer got into the business.

As the story goes, a few years ago a prominent manufacturing concern went into a big advertising campaign, the result of which was that that particular firm secured an exclusive trade, the patrons feeling protected. In other words, advertising must bring to an exhibitor a patronage that is dependent upon the exhibition of a certain make of films.

To make a parallel of the clothing business and the motion picture business is like placing a house painter on the level with a scenic artist. Nine-tenths of a given number may be satisfied by the clothing dealer, but sadly disappointed by the efforts of the motion picture producer. Strange as it may seem the average public is a better judge of pictures—particularly motion pictures—than it is of cloth.

Any man who compares the clothing business with motion pictures presages trouble.

The writer says that the exhibitor gets his trade by exhibiting a line of goods the public likes. That is true. But in doing so the exhibitor cannot follow in the footsteps of the clothier. The latter may establish a reputation for a certain material, cut and fit. He may hold a customer for years. But what producing company can tell a story that will meet the sentiments of any one man or woman day after day. A picture does not last as long as a suit of clothes, neither can the clothes be changed as readily as the pictures.

The great trouble is that many of the producers of moving pictures are interlopers who think nothing of the future of the business, but figure on quick returns. Their allies are exhibitors of the same calibre—most of them being former cheap vendors.

In the clothing business you size up the situation on the "all wool and a yard wide" or "all wool, but the buttons" proposition. In the motion picture business of to-day you cannot do that. You must not only have the goods—but the people, and the money.

"Why the money?" asks some one. "You get a picture and then's the profit." That is the sort of stuff that has created the bleeding sore of censorship.

The motion picture industry is cursed by those who seek notoriety and personal gain, financially. The latest candidate for honors is Mrs. Carman, of Long Island. Some Broadway people have her in tow and this is what they say: "Mrs. Carman's salary? Well, just say she will make more than the President of the United States gets in a year. We are going to make a fortune out of this murder."

In the eyes of the public Mrs. Carman must be looked upon as innocent of the charge made against her. On the first trial the jury disagreed. On the second the jury found her not guilty. What more does Mrs. Carman want? Before her first trial was concluded a report was spread that the Vitagraph company had made a bid for her services in pictures. That company lost no time in branding the report as a fake. On the second trial the verdict was barely announced, if not before, that moving picture companies were after her. And at the same time her lawyer announced that he had not been paid adequately for his services. It was simultaneously announced that the resources of Dr. Carman, husband of the accused, had exhausted his fortune in defending his wife. Our sympathies go out to Dr. Carman and his wife, but we cannot see why the motion picture people and patrons should be saddled with the expense. The doctor is just as good a doctor to-day as he was before his wife was accused, and the sympathy that must go with acquittal should stand by him. It is impossible to see why the conditions of the case and his expenditures should make his wife a motion picture star. The case of the young southern girl must yet be fresh in the mind of the people. Perhaps Mrs. Carman may claim superiority in social standing and facts, but the theme remains the same. Mrs. Carman has been acquitted and her husband is a qualified physician. According to the verdict both have an open way, the former to be a good, dutiful housewife, the latter to labor and re-establish the revenues of a practice. Why go into the picture field? To get rich quick? The story may be very sensational, but it must pass the Board of Censors. The Southern case failed to pass, and we doubt that the Carman case will. It is not a good screen story, notwithstanding Mrs. Carman is innocent. Whether guilty or innocent, it is against public policy to rehash the experiences of the accused in such cases. If the newspapers were as well censured as the motion pictures Mrs. Carman and her advisors would not be dreaming of fortunes.

POWELL IN FLORIDA.

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation, whose picturization of Porter Emerson Browne's "A Fool There Was" added further laurels to his reputation as one of the foremost photoplay directors, is at the present time in St. Augustine, Florida. Mr. Powell is filming the world-famous play, "La Giaconda," by D'Annunzio, and as this is recognized as one of the greatest of the famous author's works it will no doubt make a notable production and should prove to be one of the most popular photodramas ever made.

WORLD'S CHAMPION CYCLIST FOR UNITED PROGRAM.

Charles Ellis, president of the Yonkers Motorcycle Club, and winner of the recent race to Boston, a distance of 463 miles, which Mr. Ellis covered in 15 hours and 10 minutes, thus winning the speed record of the world, has joined the Starlight Company at Yonkers and will henceforth appear from time to time with "Heine and Louie" (James Aubrey and Walter Kendig) and Miss Viola Brown on the United program.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Knows What.

HARRY CHAPPELLE, of the Fuller Opera House, Madison, Wis., wanted to get out an announcement. Did he go to a printer who would set in Old English "to look like real engraving?" No, gentle reader, he did not. He went to a man who is still alive and he got a good card stock printed in a gloss ink, in a modified gothic. The varnish is so thick that the ink dries down just as copper plate work does. You can run your finger over it and feel the ridges. The printer did not use offset sheets, which shows he may have one foot in the grave, perhaps, but outside that it is a card good enough to get married on if you wanted to. The job did not cost much more than an old English crime would have come to. It looks vastly better. It is the opening announcement, the time above all others when things should be done well, so Mr. Chappelle not only got the best job he could, but he said "present this card" and not "this card and ten cents."

Some time when you want an extra good piece of work that does not have to be rushed, ask your own printer about a "short" gloss ink. If Mr. Chappelle keeps up that pace we hope he sends in every week. And keeping up the pace does not mean spending as much money each week, but doing things as well in their proper class. It is not what you pay for your printing that marks class. It is how you do it and what you get for the money that counts.

Precisely that same sort of a job could be given to a one night attraction and be a waste of money, but a throwaway, as well done for a throwaway would be just as good work.

A Haynicker.

Hay and Nicholas, of the Haynic, Fairmount, Minn., writes:

> By-the-way, you might ask the small town boys if they ever tried the experiment of placing a nice frame (accent on the "nice"), in the lobbies of their local hotels, and then keep the frame filled with a nice clean poster. There are a lot of picture fans among the commercial men, and we have found this a good advertising medium.

This is a mighty good suggestion. Traveling men are interested in the pictures, perhaps more than any one class of business men. Many of them are dyed in the wool fans. Get out a frame that tells the week's bill and where the theater is, the time of showing and the rates of admission. If you have no weekly one sheet programs—and few have—use a nice poster for the Saturday feature and paste on this your printed program. It goes without saying that the frame should be glazed.

They send in their late doorknob and an advertisement for "The Black Box," using a strip across the top and bottom three of the one column half-inch cuts supplied by the Universal.

It is strange that none of the press departments for companies issuing serials have ever supplied border stuff. A border of twelve point black boxes in widths of one, two and four ems sold by the inch could work up nicely.

Practical Press Work.

A late issue of the Motion Picture Guide, issued by Proctor's Broad Street theater, Elizabeth, N. J., tells how the Proctor house staff were first on the scene at a fire next door and were throwing water on the blaze when the city firemen got there. That is press work that counts, particularly this paragraph:

> Although the fire only indirectly threatened the theater and the house had long since been closed for the night, the Protective Service was ready for any emergency and rose to the occasion promptly and efficiently. Such prompt action is always to be expected in Proctor houses. At the Broad Street Theater the same effective measures safeguarding the interests of the public are always in readiness for any emergency.

That sort of thing counts and takes the curse off the film fire stuff. The happening is made the text for a column story of the efficacy of the Proctor precautions.

It Has Been Done.

W. S. McLaren, of the Colonial theater, Jackson, Minn., sends in a program and an automobile appeal and adds that though he has sent several programs in he has seen no comment thereon. We fail to find the advertisement of an occulist on the program sent, but if there is one in town Mr. McLaren should consult him at once, or else read this department more thoroughly. The program is a four pager, eight by nine, a bit too wide for the depth. Seven by nine would be a much better size. It runs one fourteen em column of advertising and a twenty-seven em column of program on each page except the first. It's a clean looking issue, free from too much black type and fussy ornamental stuff. The program might be pulled in to get it all on two pages, giving one column for chat and notes. Here is a good argument from the little house stuff that is run:

> Owing to our "suburban" location we are able to "repeat" on the down-town houses without impairing our business. Thus we are enabled to get second run on nearly all the big features, and are not obliged to play anything that does not come up to the "Colonial standard," as is the case on first run features.
> The Colonial does not run film the day it is issued. This is left to the downtown houses, but we run it soon after issue and it is well worth while waiting for us, for we get a chance to see it run before we book it and we book only the good ones. If you see it advertised at the Colonial it's good because we've had a chance to know it's good. That counts for something, doesn't it? You save the trip to town and are assured of only the best. How many times have you been stung "down-town?" Ever stung here?

The house is about a mile from the business section and preparing for the business trade issued this circular letter:

> Jackson, Mich., March 24, 1915.
> To our Friends the Automobilists:
> The season is fast approaching when you will be driving your car with more or less regularity. A great many "auto" owners have visited "The Colonial" during the last two months, and many more have expressed themselves to the writer about as follows—"Just as soon as the weather is right and we are using our machine, we are going to come over and see you often."
> We therefore want to extend a cordial invitation to you to visit Jackson's most inviting and best equipped photo-play house—"The Home of Good Projection and Flickerless Pictures." We enclose a copy of our program for the week of March 28th, and want particularly to call your attention to the following features which we have booked for the immediate future.
> Thursday and Friday, March 25 and 26 (Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon) "After the Ball."
> Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, March 28, 29, 30 (Miss Lyda Borelli), "The Naked Truth."
> Thursday and Friday, April 1 and 2, "Should a Woman Divorce."
> Sunday and Monday, April 4 and 5 (Claire Whitney and Stuart Holmes), "Life's Shop Window."
> Automobiles can be conveniently parked just around the corner on Orange Street as well as on Main Street east of the Theater.
> If you come once we know you will come often. Thanking you in advance for your acceptance of this invitation, we are,
>
> Gratefully yours,
> COLONIAL THEATER,
> W. S. McLaren, Manager.

That's mighty good, but not strong enough. It is a point so well worth making that it should be hammered home something like this.

This does not pretend to be anything but a circular. It is not printed in typewriter type but in an ornamental fourteen point that looks more like a small eighteen. It is fancy cut and yet legible in every letter. It is printed with a really black ink on a crisp bond stock that is as good if not better than most business houses employ for letter heads. In every particular it proclaims class and is precisely the sort of thing that will appeal to the man who is able to own a car.

There is no reason why the suburban house should not appeal to the automobile trade, and particularly the airdomes a little later, but the appeal must be properly made to impress the prospect.

Mr. McLaren adds that the program is distributed by mail only as he finds that by mailing and distributing in the theater many got two or more copies and as many more none at all.

Whaddyemean?

The Washington Star in advertising current features tells that at the Lyric is to be seen:

> Lyric, 14th and Irving Sts., N. W.
> TODAY—MAT., 2 P. M.—CHARLIE CHAPLIN, in "THE JITNEY ELOPEMENT." Don't miss seeing CHARLIE. Also, "THE WOMAN HE WRONGED," Powerful and Gripping 4-act Drama. Also an excellent Keystone Comedy.

It pays to read your copy over and see how it sounds.

Wants Some Samples.

J. E. Lawson, of the Playtorium theater, Toronto, Can., asks for some samples of eight-page programs, explaining that they are not satisfied with what they have. If you have a nice eight please send one to him. His present program is badly laid out and as badly printed. The rules do not take the ink or else the paper will not take the ink from the rules. It is probably the former, as they get good color from some of the bold face. There is an utter and absolute lack of uniformity in arrangement and you have to look hard to see which is program and which is advertising. On page two the house bill falls in the middle. On page three the center is taken by a cut with program above and below. On three and four the program rises to the top with two third-page advertisements below, but falls to the center again on the following pages. All of the rule work is the same. A six-point rule border around the program, wherever it appears and a one instead of two point around the advertising would make a big difference.

Copy has been carelessly prepared. On the front page is a cut of a scene from "Caprice" with a "see page 3" below it, but the advertisement is on the second instead of the third page. On page three Harry Pilcer's name is spelled "Pilcher," but on the seventh page the printer has another guess coming, and probably being thirsty, spelled it "Pilcener." The longest line of description runs for "Caprice" and is merely:

> Portraying little "Mary Pickford" in her most brilliant role, that of a poor, uncultured girl making her entrance into "society."

There is no excuse for the quotation marks around "society" and if quotes are used with the name, it should have been "Little Mary" Pickford. These little points are noted, sometimes more keenly than exhibitors realize. We hope that when the samples come in Mr. Lawson will see how to frame attractive phrases as underlines for his titles. He has the room to use and could use it to no greater advantage than in telling about the film in crisp, snappy sentences.

It Must Be Good.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, sends in copies of its opening program. It is a pretty house and the program lives up to the general air of things. It runs sixteen pages and cover. The latter is a stiff rough stock with an embossed design and title. The title is in gold, rather too much on the lemon order to fight the heavy cream cover. The medallion is done in pink, a mean color to handle but which has worked out well in this instance, though a deep blue design and a reddish gold or bronze letter would have been stronger and more effective. The house talk is set in bold twelve point and is printed as well as it is set. It is free from bombast and extravagant promises, but gives the right idea of the aims of the promoters. The program is unusual in that it makes the music as much a feature as the films, and the selections are not only named but a line is added in explanation. In announcing Bartlet's Witches Frolic, for instance, the program gives:

1. Selection

WITCHES' FROLIC.....Homer N. Barlett

Mr. Earlett is an American musician living in New York city. This number is especially written for the piano, but readily lends itself to the manipulative and tonal capacity of the Majestic Theater Organ (Frank Fruttchey, Organist)

This gives the musical selection the dignity of a number on the program instead of letting it be unconsciously regarded as an interpolated nuisance. It might be well to let the director look over the program proofs, though, for we do not believe that he is responsible for "Offenback." In addition to the organ they have an orchestra under competent direction. The picture show of the future is going to give more attention to music because the most profitable class of patronage does not want the title of one film running into the tail-piece of the preceding subject. They want a diversion in the run in which to let one story settle and prepare for the next. Music is the logical and most acceptable offering, and it is well to prepare for it now.

One of the best announcement lines and one that suggests the tone of the nine-page announcement, is this:

> Even the manner in which the ushers and attaches of the theater deport themselves is different from any other institution of the kind in America. They are trained to receive audiences with almost military respect and discipline and to handle any emergency that may arise.

If the Majestic keeps on as it starts it can do much toward changing picture history in Detroit. We will appreciate it if they will place us on the mailing list for all samples of advertising.

Oh, That O. E.

H. C. Curtis, Jr., of the Town Hall, Alto Pass, Ill., sends in his first program and wants comment. The first comment is that he has a moral, though not a legal, right to kill the printer with malice aforethought and a lethal weapon. The entire first page is in Old English and small old English, at that. No printer with a good heart will wear out that stale type on an unsuspecting patron. He'll scrap it and buy modern faces. Mr. Curtis should change printers, if possible, or convert this one to ways of decency. He should have a light rule border put about the pages. Then he should have the front page reset, making three banks or divisions of the matter. The first, the name of the town and the theater, the theater being named first, should rise to well to the top of the page. The "Program" and "Week of" should stay where it is and the hour of performance and the admission price should drop to the bottom, but not so far that he cannot move from page four the line about the non-arrival of films. This last should be set in six point in some light face italic. He should write his stuff so that the program matter will not turn over to page four, and use page four for the "Dopester" talk he now runs. This page, if the copy is changed each week and held to the present tone, can work harder than any other part of the program.

It will be better to divide the type in the program proper either more equitably or else in proportion to its importance. In the current program a two-reel Vitagraph is dismissed with the seven-word statement that it is in two reels and features Mr. Costello. A one-reel comedy of no particular merit is given eight lines and a word. A little practice will enable Mr. Curtis to write about so many lines for each subject and so divide up the space. Each day should have its third of a page and a two reel should get twice as much as a one reel. The program is a good starter, with no serious breaks except on the printer's part, and we think it will improve.

The Result.

E. M. Simmons, of the New Family theater, Adrian, Mich., writes:

> Last season's anniversary program received a Jess Willard punch from you which I hope has been profited by in making up this one. Go to this one. I want to be shown where I can improve.

We think that Mr. Simmons is sincere. As a result of the comment last year he got out a real program this time. The cover is a yellow brown printed in black. There is a six-point Acme border, a simple but effective design that is much better than rule work and yet but little more elaborate. Across the top is the name of the house, just below a two-color ornament in red and black and at the bottom in a double line the words, "Third Anniversary Souvenir program." There is plenty of blank space, but the page does not look bare. It is quietly elegant.

There is a twelve-page program inside, plenty of foreign advertising, but so handled that it does not interfere with the program proper, and so is not resented. Each item of the April features is taken up in chronological order with this arrangement of heading and text:

Thursday, April 1
William Fox presents Charles Richman and Catherine Countiss in
"THE IDLER"
By C. Haddon Chambers, as produced at Charles Frohman's Empire Theater, New York.

> The plot in a paragraph: Madly infatuated with the wife of his friend, the Idler, a young Englishman of wealth and position, is ready to go to any length to win her for his own. Through his knowledge of incriminating circumstances involving her husband, he attempts to persuade her to elope with him. At this point the husband intervenes, and a denouncement ensues, startling in its dramatic intensity.

Then follows the anniversary program in greater detail. There is some good house talk, an argument against talking in the audience, the statement that "This theater is perfumed daily by Shepherd's Drug Store," which may or may not be a recommendation, and some stuff like this:

> Miss Daily, our cashier, is thoroughly informed at all times as to the coming attractions, and will be only too glad to render any information concerning our future plays, and is willing to give any message to your friends whom you are expecting to meet at the play.

In place of an elaborate souvenir the theater issued cards good for each day of Anniversary Week for the price of five days and at a ten cent general admission. They were printed up much the same as a series ticket, with numbers to be punched each day, and with each feature stated. It was a fine program in all six features, and there is no Willard punch to be handed any feature of it. Mr. Simmons profited by the punch and did this one right, which was why the punch was handed out a year ago.

A New One.

The Jewel theater, the pioneer house in Easton, Pa., is trying a new scheme. It advertises that it will give out $5,000 worth of stock in the amusement company running the house, a share to each purchaser of one dollar's worth of admission tickets, until the issue is exhausted. It offers these reasons:

> BECAUSE, We want to make our patrons, walking, talking advertisers, and in order to enthuse them in advertising THE JEWEL, and secure more patrons, WE ARE GOING TO TAKE THEM IN AS PARTNERS IN THE BUSINESS, by giving them stock free.
> THE PATRONS OF THE JEWEL have the preference in securing this stock, and the right is reserved to limit the issue of stock to 250 shares to any one person under this free distribution.
> COME EARLY, BUY TICKETS, GET STOCK, and ALWAYS PATRONIZE YOUR OWN THEATER.

The value of the shares is not stated, but it is to be presumed that the shares represent one dollar each. Not many will receive a sufficiently large block to interest them greatly in the income, but it may make attendance at that house in preference to others a matter of pride of ownership. The idea is certainly a novel one.

Played Geese.

G. E. Fitzgerald, advertising manager of the Electric Palace, Tyler, Tex., writes:

> To boost the Paramount, "The Goose Girl," I had some little white blankets made to fit three geese, in red letters on the blankets:
> "THE GOOSE GIRL"
> HERE
> WEDNESDAY
> During the afternoon and evening performances the geese were driven across the stage in the glare of the spotlight, at other times they were in the lobby with little signs tied to their necks. It took.

The idea is good. It could have been amplified by having the geese led through the street by a little goose girl in person, a costume easily faked. It is good to set a lobby display, but more people will see it if the display is taken around. It is not the man who passes your house you most need to reach. It is the man who does not.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Busts and Inserts.

PROFESSOR NEAL seems to be determined to get the same strangle hold on photoplay technique that he already has on story writing. Lately he questioned two "busts" in a single scene and we pointed out that he means insert and not bust. Back he comes with:

> Now here's a confession—and I suspect there are other Dummköpfe who could say the same thing. The theoretical distinction between insert and bust is not clear. I never would have written in and numbered scenes for those photos; I know better than that. But plenty of busts are inserts in everything except (1) numbering and sometimes (2) representing action. To get No. 2 out of the way, please (note that pleading "please," please) concede that there is a border-line kind of stuff that can puzzle a fellow. If you think it can't be conceded, I'll omit the "sometimes" before the (2). All right? Then we'll go ahead.
> Jack is sitting between his wife and Myrtle. He leans over to talk with his wife, but on the other side we see his hand slip out toward Myrtle. What of it? Well, we "bust" into a separately numbered scene to show that Jack is squeezing Myrtle's hand while he is pretending to devote himself to his wife. Then we come back to the first scene just as we left it, and go on with it, only we give what follows a number of its own—three numbers for what in effect is only one scene Now, that bust is really nothing but an insert, eh? In the taking, scene 1 doesn't have even to be broken off at the point where Jack reaches out his hand; it has only to be dragged a little at that point, to provide for loss in cutting. I've noticed plenty of scenes in which this is so. The camera can go right on and take scene 3 without a stop.
> Separate numbering, therefore, is used for convenience in assembling and cutting; it does not represent any essential difference between the bust and insert. There remains No. 2—action. Let's figger. Charlie Chaplin, with those dependent pants of his, has to slide out over a window-sill in which is a big nail—whereby hangs Charlie and the story. We haven't time to show how the nail comes to be there; that's not in our story; it's just there, and we have to show it. Now the chances are that the close-up showing the window-sill will break another scene. Moreover, there is no action in it. Is it an insert, a bust, or—what? Well, the camera has to have a separate placing to make it, so we call it a separate scene, and go on. Only * * * that close-up of the sill remains unclassified, unless we classify it as an insert because a cutting of the film within a scene is necessary to put it in its proper place. Again, The boob waits—anxiously; the infernal machine is set to go off in 15 minutes, and Lord! how short 15 minutes can be. And to show how fast the clock can run, we show the clock-face, with the hands moving—may be we will cut away and back once or twice to increase the effect. Well? Is that clock-face, with the moving hands, a bust or an insert? Ordinarily, the clock-face is "on screen"—an insert. But now the hands represent action—a change in situation, at least. Do we bust the clock-face? We bust it if the picture shows not only the clock-face, but also the boob-face as the boob sees his time draw short, but otherwise do we insert? Understand, it is the fundamental classifications right now that bother me, along with the fact that "inserts" is used in two ways—both as a general term, and a specific term—for explanatory matter that has to be cut into the single scene. It strikes me that we need an additional term in order to indicate this latter kind of insert clearly when we talk about it. Technically, the window-sill view is a close view; bust we can define as a magnification of part of a larger action within which it is included (See Sargent); but insert used to name explanatory or itensifying views included within the scene confuses me, because there are too many other kinds of insert besides this. We could do worse than to call it an "on-screen," since everyone knows that this is the kind of thing that will follow when he reads "On screen" in the scenario. Of course, there is trouble with "close-view," too, for it does not distinguish between a close-up view with, and a close-up view without action.

Sometimes the difference between bust and insert is very largely pure theory, but if it can bother Professor Neal it can bothers others, just as many are bothered about the difference between close-up and bust. A bust is pretty much the same as a close-up except that it is closer up. If you see a large room and many persons, the fact that Jim and Jessie are holding hands is likely to be overlooked. We come close up to get just Jim and Jessie and by cutting off the rest of the large scene we emphasize that action as being the important part of the scene. But if we have what is already a close up as compared to the wider field of the big scene, as shown in Professor Neal's Jack and Myrtle, we come even closer in until the camera gets only Jack's and Myrtle's hands. This is the true photoplay bust, a small section of some larger action, showing but a detail of the general action to which it is desired to draw particular attention. We already show Jack, his wife and Myrtle in a what is practically a close up, but Jack leans toward his wife and squeezes Myrtle's hand at the same time. The spectator may follow the larger, though less important, action and watch Jack speaking to his wife. To prevent this and to give proper emphasis to the hand holding, we photograph that, cutting out all the rest of the scene.

This is a bust because it is the recorded action of the players, and should be made with the players who participate in the larger action.

But suppose that instead of holding hands Jack slipped a note to Myrtle and she read it. We want to show on the screen what is in the note. This note is a part of the large scene, but it is not necessary to have Myrtle hold the note. We have written.

Woman's
On screen—Hand holding note—
Myrtle,
Meet me same place tonight at ten. Jack.

It does not have to be Myrtle's hand. Any girl, called in from the joining room, can hold the note. There is no reason why the director should carry this note to the point where the scene is made and make the negative of the letter right there, so that it will fit in. He marks it on the leader sheet and the leader room makes it and it is inserted in the scene as "Insert number three," or whatever its number may be. When the negative is cut to proper length, a cross mark is made where Myrtle takes the note, a double cross and figure three are marked and this is printed on every copy of that scene, and each time the scene is joined on a reel, the girl cuts across at the mark and splices in or "inserts" the strip of note of the proper length.

When the negative comes in from the camera man, the strip of film carrying the scene in which Jack hands the note to Myrtle is numbered with the number of the script and the number of the scene, let us say it is scene seven. The complete scene is marked number seven. But if that hand holding stunt were used instead of the note reading, then the action would come in the shape of two strips of negative, numbered seven and nine and another strip, made a moment later, showing the hand holding and numbered eight. Then in joining up eight will be spliced to seven, and nine to eight, and the result will be practically one scene in which, as Jack leans over to speak to his wife the field of the camera seems suddenly to be contracted to show only the hands, returning a moment later to the large action.

This is why it is that the busts are numbered and the inserts are not. Inserts, including leaders, might be numbered as "Insert six" or whatever the number might be, but it is so seldom that all leaders, letters and other forms of insert are adhered to that it does not pay to have the author number these. Getting back to Professor Neal's letter, it is quite true that scenes before and after the hand holding might be made as one scene with a break, but the careful director prefers to stop and make a new scene number.

Going on to the next point. The nail on which Mr. Chaplin hangs is really an insert in one sense, since it is an object without action, but it is this particular nail in this particular wall which must be seen. Later on there will be action literally on this same nail, so the director must make this. The leader room cannot take any nail or any wall. It must be this specific nail and this exact type of wall, so the director makes it, and having made it, he must give it a number, so it becomes a numbered bust and not an unnumbered insert.

Working with the clock, if any clock face will do or the clock can be sent to the leader room, then it is an insert. If it is a peculiar clock, then the director makes—and numbers—it.

In general practice the rules are that any action that is part of a larger scene and yet too small to show more than a limited field of action is a bust, while something without action, though seemingly a part of a scene, is an insert. But if a bust can be made by the leader room it is an insert and an insert that must be made by the director is a bust. That's about as closely as it may be defined.

An Encore.

About time to be sounding the warning again to keep away from your hobbies when you want to write. No matter how much you may hate the demon rum, do not write all temperance stories and hope to sell. Do not write too much on any one subject that lies close to your heart. You are apt to be so interested that you'll fail to realize that few will share your enthusiasm. If the lady of your heart has refused to marry you or has obtained a divorce, do not write scores of stories of men who have died of broken hearts. She may see one on the screen, but no more than that and so the cumulative effects of your lesson will be lost. If you've been stung in a lawsuit do not write a hundred stories with lawyer villains. You'll hate the villains so that you'll get your story all out of focus. We used to know an actor people hated to work for because after a tremendous death scene he would lie with his back to the audience and tell the other players funny stories. With him the magnificent death throes were purely a matter of training. He was one of the best little spirit breathers on the American stage, not because he loved death, but because he was paid large money to die with tragic fervor. A story writer of the best sort is much like the player. He must get thoroughly into the spirit of the story, but it must not become too personal. He gives to the writing his very best, but he gives it as a matter of professional pride and not because it is the expression of his own soul. If you get too close to your story it is like standing too close in front of the camera. Feel the emotions of those in the scene as fully as you can, but don't try to write yourself or your secret soul into the picture. If you do it is bound to be unbalanced.

Leader and Action.

"To precisely what extent may leader replace action in the telling of the actual story?" I mean by that, can the punch be given in a leader instead of a scene?"

That's what a writer thinks is a point. But it is not. The real punch is not the visual action, but the idea behind the action. Take the decrepit theme of the rou who wooes his own illegitimate daughter. We might know all along that Jane was Torrington's daughter, or it might come at the big moment in the form of a leader. "My father!" The action might have told several scenes back precisely that thing. There would have been a punch when we knew that the girl was Torrington's daughter but the other half of the punch would have come when those two persons discovered the relationship. Here it is clear that the single sentence "My Father!" coming at the right moment, would concentrate all of the punch into that moment. Here it is the leader rather than the scene that gives the punch but here, even, the action must support the leader. The words must be used at the moment of greatest tension and the entire action must be planned to support the stated fact.

The example will roughly support the theory, but even here it is possible, with planning, to escape the leader. Suppose that early in the story the girl, playing with a necklace examines the pendant. The scene runs:

17 Martha's home—Martha in invalid chair. Jane enters, kisses mother, asks how she feels. Martha gives charm. Jane examines with curiosity—

On screen—Woman's hand holding necklace. Pendant is half of a large coin. Back to scene. Jane looks at Martha inquiringly. Martha with an effort speaks—

Cut-in—"Your father wears the other half.". Back to scene—Martha tells Jane to slip about neck. she does so. Martha, wrought up, sinks back in half faint. Jane offers restorative.

That establishes a fact. At the time we look to see if figure importantly in later scenes but it is probably forgotten or if remembered it might be supposed that it will be used to establish the fact of Jane's illegitimate birth, therefore it comes as a surprise when we see this.

94 Dressing room—Jane in negligee removing make up. Torrington enters—presents flowers—Jane pleased—he speaks—clasps her—she does not resist strongly—suddenly starts—fights off, a look of horror on her face—points to Torrington's watch charm—he looks ashamed thinks she may have heard of his past escapades, tries to laugh it off—tries to embrace her again—she starts back—with a movement pulls the chain from her neck—matches the coin—Torrington looks with horror—questions—she nods assent—Torrington turns and staggers out—looks as though he had received his death blow. Jane sinks on chair—weeping violently.

Now the scene seventeen comes back and we realize, without the aid of a leader, with growing horror, that the pair are father and daughter.

If you have the right sort of facts it is generally possible to plan ahead to tell them without leader by substituting the visual for the mental, as this token is made to stand for the concrete fact of paternity, but there are times when it is permissible to use a leader for the punch though it should always be remembered that you are writing a motion picture play and not a drama or a fiction story.

Synopses.

Many correspondents have written to ask if the stories of the films as printed in this paper are synopses or press work. Perhaps others are interested, but not to the point of writing. Most of them are synopses. Many of them are the synopses as supplied by the author. Some are synopses supplied by the director to incorporate the changes in the story and some, generally the longer ones, are written by the press agent for the company. It is not possible to tell what is what, but if you will accept the shorter ones as being about what a synopsis should be you'll not be far from wrong.

But the chief value of the department of stories is not as a study of synopses so much as a study of the plots and the plots put out by the various companies.

Written Comedy.

F. Burr Wills writes in surprise that he finds that he can read this department and learn things and then read it again and learn still more from the same stuff. Surely. This department is like a text book. It is to be studied. He writes, also:

> Others, writing to you, seem to have the same experiences as myself.
> Alice C. Brown's letter tells us she can think of all kinds of funny things, but after getting it on paper it seems flat, or silly and stupid.
> Ditto here. Recently wrote a two-reel comedy. Spent a lot of time, and took considerable pains with the script. Tried it out on the household after I'd finished it, but none of them busted anything about their anatomy as I doled out the thing to them. Believe the Mother did smile once or twice, but it was so faint you couldn't notice it, and when I finished the "reading" I didn't know whether to follow my original idea, and send it in, or to "pigeon-hole" the script and give up.

Then he sent it to a reviewer and was told it was great. We do not put much faith in the opinion of a man who finds that it brings fees to be an extreme optimist, but it is more apt to be a comedy if it does not sound like one.

This does not mean, of course, that all stories that read flatly are good comedies. It merely means that properly written comedy action sounds as flat as dramatic action since it is the action and not the words describing that action which should be funny. You can either be funny on paper or on the screen. You cannot be both at the same time. If you properly describe the action it will not sound funny, because it is the technical description of action unhampered by any effort at humorous action. The stuff Miss Brown writes is tiresome to read as reading matter, but if you can visualize the words you can see that in every scene there is not only the leading comedy action but the amusing by play as well. That is what counts.

"Scene 19."

Stop some time and figure out how many times you have written the word "scene" in your scripts. Suppose that you have written a hundred scripts with an average of forty-five scenes to the play. You will have written the word four thousand five hundred times. That makes between fifteen and sixteen solid pages of double spaced typewriting needlessly done. You follow almost any of the books on technique and you write:

Scene 19. Henry's home as in Scene 6.

> Henry and his Mother enter from the house—she kisses him good bye—he exits—she stands waving to him.

Of course you have committed no crime but you have been working overtime. Suppose that you wrote it:

19—Home as in No. 6. Henry and Mother enter from house—she kisses him—he exits—she stands waving.

Any director will know that the numerals stand for the number of the scene. He will not think that it has reference to your street address, your age or the street you live upon. He's able to arrive at the fact that the numerals stand for the number of the scene. The reference to number six is equally clear. You use the double cross character on the machine and do it with the depression of one key instead of five. In writing that one scene you save a line of space and nine key taps. More than that, you have simplified the work. Why labor overtime when the labor is of no avail? You might go even further and adopt the Moore technique and write

Scene 19.

Leader (None)

Location—Henry's Home as in Scene 6.

Action—and give the action.

You can do that but if you do you'll be fussy to no purpose whatever. It stands to reason if no leader is written in none is to be used. It is not necessary to label the location. You'll waste a couple of extra sheets of paper and half an hour of your time, but you will get nothing for it. Put the scene numbers into the margin where they can be caught up quickly, and you'll save your own time and that of the producer.

Technique of form is worse than valueless when it complicates the script. It should be the aim of form to give the fullest information with the least trouble. Make it as easy for the director as you can. And make it easy for yourself if you can, but be simple and understandable.

Getting Help.

About the quickest way not to get help is to insist on having it. When you reach the point where you are entitled to assistance it will be given you. Editors will offer suggestions, other authors will offer suggestions and you will know how to ask for help, but you must wait until you are deserving. About once a month some one gets the idea that we have a kind heart and will read and criticize a script free. So they send it in, generally without a return cover, and even add the request that we revise and send to some company instead of returning to the author. It never happens that way. The script goes back without comment. When you pay ten cents for a copy of the paper you get more than ten cents worth. You do not buy the right to half a day's time. You are welcome to ask information, but not when it requires the handling of a script.

But most authors do not confine themselves to newspaper writers in their campaign of grafting advice. They write any one they think might be coaxed. Miss Elaine Stern says she gets scores of letters. Any arrived author will tell the same story. They are literally besieged, and they have learned not to reply, for a reply but brings another and more impertinent demand or even downright insult, as when a certain author took the pains to suggest that a plot was the chief requirement and received in return:

> You say my play ain't no plot. It's got lots more plots than the rotten stuff you write. I don't see how you can sell such things.

Keep plodding along. Plan to do your own work and when your own work has brought you to the point where you show promise you'll find that you have a lot of big brothers and sisters ready and willing to help. They will even ask permission to help you sometimes, but if you make a crude approach you will never be helped. You will have tired people out long before you qualify.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

IT IS AN established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 87.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is carbon made of? Tell us how you select carbons when you buy them. What do little globules of black matter which sometimes collect on the point of the lower carbon indicate?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 81.

There has been a general all round, first-class mix-up on question 81. As intended, and as contained in the question booklet, question 81 reads as follows: "Could you use a 40 ampere, 220 volt fixed rheostat to get 40 amperes from a 110 volt supply? Could you use 110 volt rheostats on 500 volt supply? How many ohms resistance is there in a 51 watt 110 volt incandescent lamp filament?" Now I do not know how it ever happened, but in the department it got printed as follows: "Could you use a 40 ampere, 220 volt fixed resistance to get 40 amperes from a 220 volt supply? Could you use 110 volt rheostats on 500 volt supply? How much resistance is there in a 25 ampere, 110 volt rheostat. How do you figure it?"

Well, I have concluded that those who answered right either way are entitled to go on the Roll of Honor. That is only fair I think. I would again suggest to those who are working on the answers to the questions that they procure the question booklet. It is better in every way that you should have it, the supply is limited, however, and may be exhausted before you are all supplied, though I think they will be equal to the demand.

The Roll of Honor consists of: Joseph H. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Tacoma, Washington; A. C. Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon; C. E. Lawson, Cleveland, Tennessee; John Solar, Watertown, New York; L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; Montreal, Canada; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; Baltimore, Maryland; P. Reg Dey, Brandon, Manitoba; Vernon Kidd, Victoria, British Columbia; Chicago, Illinois; and W. M. Lamb, Richmond, Virginia.

I was somewhat amused at the mental struggle some of the boys had evidently gone through in trying to figure out what I was driving at when I asked if a 40 ampere, 220 volt fixed rheostat could be used to get 40 amperes from a 220 volt supply. Some of them thought I meant a rheostat not designed to work in series with an arc; others got the notion that I had in mind the fact that after a period of use the resistance of a rheostat increases somewhat, and others doped out still other reasons for my asking that kind of a question, which was creditable to their ingenuity and also to their knowledge of resistance.

I have selected the reply of A. C. Stewart as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 81.

By A. C. Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon.

The Question:

Could you use a 40 ampere, 220 volt fixed rheostat to get 40 amperes from a 110 volt supply? Could you use 110 volt rheostats on 500 volt supply? How many ohms resistance is there in a 51 watt, 110 volt incandescent lamp filament?

The Answer:

Dividing question 81 into three parts: (1) A rheostat built to deliver 40 amperes on 220 volt direct current would have a resistance of 4.3 ohms. (220—48=172÷40=4.3). To get 40 amperes at the arc from a 110 volt D. C. line, a resistance of (110—48÷40=1.5) 1.5 would be needed. To use the 4.3 ohm resistance on the 110 line it would only be necessary to short circuit about two-thirds of the coils, or, in other words, only use about one-third of the rheostat to get approximately 40 amperes.

(2) 110 volt rheostats could be used on 500 volt supply by connecting about seven of them (25 ampere capacity) in series.

(3) A 51 watt, 110 volt lamp would have a resistance of 237.2+ ohms. It is figured as follows, though the finding of the method made Yours Truly "dig." It was finally discovered on page 221 of "Swoope."

"Resistance equals the square of the pressure divided by the watts expended;" and working this out we find, for a 51 watt, 110 volt lamp: 110·110÷51=237.2+ohms.

Non-Rewinder.

E. W. Harris, Tamaqua, Pennsylvania, forwards photograph of his non-rewinder, and says he will present one to the department for approval in the near future, as it is patented and approved by the Board of Fire Underwriters, and it is proposed to market the device in the near future.

I would not care to say anything concerning this machine at present, but will await an inspection and demonstration, whereupon, if the device seems practical, and appears to be so after actual tests in different theaters, it will be given an extended description in the department.

As a Matter of Common Sense.

In the latter part of April the Houston, Texas, Operators' Union had some trouble with the managers and there was a walk-out, the result of which we have not yet heard. According to our advices the demand of the operators was that there be one chief operator at a salary of $17.50 per week until December 31, 1915, at which time the salary be raised to $20.00, and for the employment of a relief operator at $10.00 per week. The proposed contract also provided for the payment of overtime in case the operator put in overtime. The managers refused.

Now let me ask the Houston managers if they don't think that, purely as a matter of common sense, a demand as moderate as this should have been granted? If they employ a bricklayer they will pay that bricklayer at least five dollars for eight hours, or $35.00 a week, and other trades are in proportion. The Houston managers doubtless want good pictures put on their screens, and in Houston, as in other cities, the box office receipts will, at least to a large extent, depend upon the skill of the operator. What grade of skill do you expect to get, gentlemen, at less than twenty dollars a week? Why if you go much lower than that the operator will be able to make more money by breaking into the penitentiary, making fancy canes in his spare time, and selling them to visitors who come to rubber-neck at their unfortunate fellow men.

Quite True.

F. E. Mortimer, inventor of the Mortimer Film Cleaner, Freeport, Maine, writes:

> We read with interest article in April 3rd issue, in which G. W. Campbell cautions against getting too much tension on the Mortimer cleaner, since some patches are not very strong. We agree with Mr. Campbell. Some patches are not strong, and that is one good fault of the little cleaner—it finds bad splices. We are running eight reels in our theater in Freeport, and never think of running a film through the projector without first putting it through the cleaner, not only to clean it, but to detect the bad splices. It is better to have the film pull apart while going through the cleaner than while going through the projection machine. As a consequence we never have to put on the curtain the "Wait a Minute" slide, or a slide asking the audience to "Smile A Minute, the Operator is in Trouble." We will gamble Mr. Campbell never has to use such slides on account of patches breaking, and we want to thank him, through the department, for his endorsement.

All of which is eminently correct, and perfectly true. It is far better to have poor splices pull in two on the cleaner than on the projector, therefore the fact that the cleaner does pull them apart is not a fault, but a virtue.

Airdomes.

Now that the birdlets will soon begin to twitter, and to bill and coo, the grass to sprout, and the lima bean shove its nose above the ground, theater managers will begin to talk airdome, and in many cases talk will materialize into action. For myself, I have long since gone on record as approving a combination house, in which the roof can be opened and the sides removed temporarily, but where vacant land is to be had beside the theater, the out-door proposition is excellent, though the airdome is seldom worked out with any considerable degree of common sense, especially with relation to the screen. Now I am not going to write a long article, going into all the various details of airdome planning. There are a great many different, and fairly good methods of finishing the surface of the ground and providing seating arrangements. And by that same token there are a great many bad methods also, some of which seem to be very largely in favor.

The suggestion I shall make is just a little bit radical. It is a theory of my own, but I don't see any earthly reason why it won't work out in practice. The unprotected airdome screen must have some waterproof surface, such as metal painted with white paint. It starts off gaily in the spring, gets a little fuzzy along towards the middle of summer, and by fall is more or less disreputable. As a rule there is no adequate protection from the rays of the moon, or the ordinary night light. Now I would build my airdome screen as follows: First set four 6 inch by 6 inch timbers down in the ground six feet, tamping the dirt in around them solidly, or, better yet, filling in the hole with concrete. This will give a supporting foundation for your screen which will withstand any gale that will blow. 4-in. x 4-in. timbers will do if there is plenty of room behind to brace them. These uprights must be long enough to reach as high as you want the top of your screen to be, and if your screen is to be 12 ft. x16 ft., the timbers will have to be 12+6=18, plus whatever distance you want the bottom of the screen to be above the ground. If you want the bottom of the screen to be 6 feet above the ground, then your timbers will have to be 18+6=24 feet in length. In setting the uprights make sure they are in perfect line with each other by nailing a board to the front face at the top of the timbers and another near the ground; also be sure, by means of a plumb-bob, that the uprights are perfectly perpendicular. When the uprights are placed, cover them on the front side with cheap tongue and groove lumber, set with the tongue upward and the groove down so that it will shed water on the back. On top of this nail 2-in. x ½-in. furring strips, running up and down, spaced one foot center to center, and on this place either metal or wooden laths, and on the laths place one or two coats of one of the patent hard plasters, finished perfectly level, but in the rough—sand finish, and on the top of this place one or two coats of ordinary alabastine, muralite or one of the patent calcimines, outlining the picture in flat black in the usual way.

So much for the screen itself. Now the airdome screen, in order to be effective, should have a wide shadow box, painted black inside, and I see no reason why this shadow box cannot be provided in the shape of two wide doors which, in conjunction with a properly constructed flaring apron at the top, will thoroughly protect the screen surface from rain when it is not in use. First, however, in order to protect the screen from the rays of the moon, and bring the picture out sharply on moonlight nights, there should be an apron not less than 6 and preferably 8 feet wide at the top of the screen, and this apron should not have a rise of more than 3 feet from the level. It may be built in the form of a very flat arch, and so made that when the doors are open they will join with the edge of the apron, and thus form a complete shadow box 8 feet in every direction.

In examining the sketch, the top half is a top view of the flare, showing the top of uprights A-A-A-A; beams B-B-B-B, made of 3 x 4 to the underside of which the flare number is nailed, and E-E-E-E-E-E-E-E, inset boards left loose, supported on the upper edge by hinges, to relieve the wind pressure. At the top right and left nand corners is a 4 x 4 upright, which should also be set 3 or 4 feet into the ground. This upright supports the edge of the apron and forms a support for the outer edge of the door when it is swung open. The lower half of the diagram is a front view of the screen as seen from the auditorium, showing the doors open. The apron may have a rise of two or three feet, though it is really not essential that it have any rise at all, since the entire audience of the airdome will be seated below the screen, therefore you can run it right across flat if you prefer. The arch shape will, however, look better and will shed water better too. It should be covered with tarred roofing. At the right is a detail showing one method of supporting the apron by letting sills B-B-B-B extend over, mortising them into top of post A and attaching a brace from the back end of the post, as shown.

You may, of course, build a screen in this form without doors, that is to say, making the side flare stationary, but in that event you will have to paint your screen, but it is difficult to get a thoroughly satisfactory weather-proof screen surface.

This sketch is crude, but I think you will readily grasp the idea, and let me say that while such a screen would cost a good deal more than the one ordinarily used, its construction is nevertheless entirely practical and would prove to be a good investment. The inside of the doors and the underside of the apron should, of course, be painted dead black; also the picture on the screen should be outlined with black.

Please understand there are many details of construction not shown. I am only giving you the rough idea. Any man competent to manage a theater can take that idea and put it into workable shape.

I Think So.

S. L. Swaim, Lexington, North Carolina, says:

> We are using two Powers SixA projectors on 110 volt, 60 cycle current, and wish to install a lighting system in the building. This system will be D.C. Will you kindly advise us as to whether or not motors can be obtained so that should our engine fail we could use city A.C. without changing the motors?

As I remember the matter there is such a motor made, but it would be, I think, very unsatisfactory and highly inefficient. I cannot advise anything of that kind. Moreover, I would suggest that if you install a lighting system you could do this, and it is not at all a bad thing to do either, viz.: get two generators, one a 60 volt D.C. machine to supply current to the projection arc, and the other a 110 volt machine to supply the theater auditorium lighting and drive the motors, including the machine motors. This would cost somewhat more in the beginning, it would save you money in the end as against a straight 110 volt installation, and as against a straight 60 volt installation it would allow you to use standard lamps and connect to the city A.C. at will, simply by cutting some extra resistance into this projection arc circuit.

George Brown, Waterbury, Connecticut, asks the following:

> Well, Brother Richardson, I think I can get one over on you this time. Can you tell me where the intermittent sprocket hits the pass-over gears? Well, well, this will get your goat all right!

Nope. Nothing doing in the goat line. I don't own such an animal any more.

Nothing Doing in the Tribe Line.

Thomas F. Hickey, Stillwater, New York, orders a Handbook, renews his subscription, and says:

> Please convey my respects to Brother Richardson. May his tribe increase.

Why, man, what are you talking about? My tribe is done all growed up, and getting ready to start tribes of their own. By-the-way maybe that is what Friend Hickey has reference to. If so, I join with him.

In the Woods.

J. H. Hendren, Cary, Kentucky, says:

> I am manager of a little house away off in the woods. Have 250 volt D. C. from a 250 K. W. generator, No. 4 copper lead wires, with No. 6 from switchboard to machine, taking current through a 40 ampere grid rheostat, 1914 model Simplex. Use ¾ inch soft cored Bio top, and ⅝ soft cored Bio bottom carbons; condensers which came with the machine; 4¾ M. P. lens; 60 foot throw; 9x11 picture; No. 22 stereo lens; 12 foot muslin screen, stretched tightly, and covered with two coats of pearl-white alabastine. Give a four reel show six nights a week; Universal service. My machine runs like a greased pig, never gives a bit of trouble. Projection seems good—much better to me than that in some of the best houses in the larger cities. My operator is a genius, and my juice does not cost a penny. Question 1. Would the Laemmle meniscus system of condensers give me any better light? Question No. 2. Would a coat of aluminum of bronze paint on my curtain help out any? Which is the best, and what would be the cost?

You let that screen alone, Brother Hickey. Most emphatically no, it would not. Home-made aluminum screens are anything but desirable. Watch the department a little later. I am not prepared to answer the meniscus question right now, but hope to be able to give you authoritative dope within a few weeks.

Nitrogen Filled Lamps.

J. H. Hallberg, New York City, is here with the following:

I have read with much interest the reference to Nitrogen Filled Incandescent Lamps for projection under the heading "Reading is Cheap" on page 234 of the April 10th issue. Mr. Carpenter of Stark, Fla., has no doubt read some of the articles I also have read in electrical magazines. It is strange, but nevertheless it appears to be a fact that in some of the very best electrical publications articles go through without being censored. The one in question about nitrogen lamps stated that the lamp was developed and used for M. P. projection, and wonderful results were obtained. I believe it was someone out in Seattle, Wash., who wrote this letter, or a short article about the nitrogen lamp. There are so many electricians and others who believe that the statements by salesmen and engineers of our large electrical corporations can be taken as literally correct statements of fact. The sooner they wake up to their mistake the better. I agree fully with your comment on the nitrogen filled incandescent lamp. There are several reasons why this lamp cannot be used for projection of motion pictures:—(1) In a unit large enough to give proper illumination for modern moving picture projection the glass bulb surrounding the filament would have to be so large in diameter that it would be difficult to bring the filament close enough to the condensing lenses to secure the proper focus. (2) The concentration of light required for picture projection can never be realized in a filament lamp. The only way one could imagine a filament or glower lamp for projection would be to construct a lamp with a strip of filament maybe ⅜ in. wide by 5/16 in. high, or about that proportion, and then weld this strip at each end to a sufficiently large set of terminals, which may have to be artificially cooled to prevent destruction when the current is flowing. It is safe to assume that a lamp of this kind, even if it could be constructed, would require from 50 to 100% more energy to produce the same intensity of light or useful candle power as an arc. With the filament lamp, 50% of the illumination is lost by reason of the fact that the light is given off in all directions. For stereopticon work where the magnification is not so great, where small pictures may be used, and where, as a general rule, one-third of the intensity of light serves the purpose, the nitrogen filled or other glow lamp may be used, but not as a general proposition, for theatrical motion picture projection.

I have been associated with parties who have made quite some tests along these lines, and have come to the conclusion that the glow lamp is impractical for projector purposes, at least with the materials available at present. The intrinsic brilliancy of the crater of an arc on a carbon is so enormous, for the small space it occupies, and on account of it being round or oval lends itself particularly to be concentrated for the illumination of the aperture of a moving picture machine. Another matter which may not be out of place to mention at this time, is that the present demand for illumination may be more than doubled when the new Duplex or similar films are introduced, which will require double magnification and consequently more light.

I see no necessity in commenting on this, except to say that I am gratified to know that Brother Hallberg's opinion of this proposition coincides with my own. In making my former comment I simply applied horse sense, mixed with a knowledge of the action of the projection lens system. As to the duplex film—well, I'm from Missouri. I'll believe its being commercialized when I see it.

Pennsylvania inquires:

What is the reason that the carbons will not burn when set jack knife, whereas they do burn when they have the regular straight trim? The rheostat is three years old, and I thought maybe it was worn out. It is a Powers 38 ampere. What is your opinion of white enamel paint for a screen? Will it give satisfaction? How can I tell when a rheostat is burned out?

This letter comes from a small town, therefore, elementary as the questions are, the man deserves an answer. If I understand him right, he is unable to strike an arc when he sets the carbons jack knife, whereas he can strike an arc with the regular set. If this is correct, it can indicate but one thing, viz.: when he moves the carbon jaws he in some way breaks the electrical contact of one or both of the jaws. As to just how this can be done you can search me, but that is what evidently happens. Anyhow, Pennsylvania should not use the jack knife set. It is out of date, inefficient and a very poor set from any and every point of view. I would suggest that Pennsylvania send $2.50 to the Moving Picture World immediately and get a copy of the second edition of the Handbook. He evidently needs it badly, and it will prove the best investment he ever made. On pages 204 to 212 he will be able to study carbon setting and find out just why the jack knife set is inefficient, and why the other set is better. White enamel would not be satisfactory for a screen. If you wish to use white paint on your screen, a receipt for same will be found on page 338 of the Handbook. As to knowing when the rheostat is burned out, you will know that quickly enough for you won't get any current. I would suggest that Pennsylvania take his rheostat apart and clean all the contacts thoroughly, being very careful, however, to not disturb the insulation, and thus short circuit or ground some of the coils. If those coils have been in for three years it certainly is time they were taken out and their contacts thoroughly cleaned.

Light Unsatisfactory.

C. La Valle, Lansing, Michigan, says:

I have a Simplex machine, with rheostat, taking current from a 150 volt D.C. generator, using 24 amperes at the arc; No. 6 stranded wire throughout; condensers 5½ and 8. Can adjust forward and backward without result. Project a 13 foot 9 inch picture at 100 feet; ⅝ inch cored Electra carbons; no grounds. Set carbons as per Handbook. Spot round and yellow at edges; no ghost, but a shadow on the shutter as per sketch. Picture and light unsatisfactory. Crater 4½ inches from lens.

Success to the department! Keep up the good work.

This is rather a difficult proposition, Brother La Valle. I would suggest, however, that two ⅝ inch carbons are too large for 24 amperes. Try a ½ inch solid below—not a street arc carbon but a projection carbon. I think with 24 amperes I would go even further than that and try a ½ inch cored above and a 7/16 inch solid below, if I could get them, always provided you are sure you are not getting more than 24 amperes. As to your lenses, the spacing of the condenser lenses apart alters the E.F. of the combination. Now look here, I am not certain about this; we have not quite finished the checking up of our experiments yet, but I want you to try this. Use two 6½ condenser lenses and set your lamphouse away back so that with a spot about 1¼ or 1½ inches in diameter you are just inside the back focus, that is to say, get that condition, and then pull the lamphouse back until you are on the back focus, and then move it ahead until you are just barely out of the back focus, the idea being to get the crater in focus at the aperture. I want you to try this out and report results, although, frankly, I am not certain myself as to just what they would be. I hope within the next thirty days to be able to tell you with authority just what to do to get results under any given condition, that is to say, as far as the lenses be concerned. Your crater is too far from the lens.

100% Organized.

J. E. Hogan, business agent, Galveston, Texas, M. P. M. O., L. U. 305, and A. Avalos, secretary, Houston, Texas, L. U. 279, send the accompanying photograph to the editor with the compliments of locals 279 and 305 I. A. T. S. E., adding that they wish I were there (Galveston) where swimming is good all the year round, and the operators are 100 per cent. organized.

Well, boys, I would like to visit you, but I rode over that long bridge and strolled around your city at the time they were hoisting everything up in the air and pumping in about ten feet of sand. I also made Houston my place of residence for about a month, but that was before the days of moving pictures.

My compliments to the men of 279 and 305. I trust the 100% proposition will continue to obtain in both cities.

Something New.

The editor recently witnessed the demonstration of a new device at the Strand Theater, called the "Projecta Strama," protected by United States patent 1024734. The Projecta Strama is unique, and somewhat in the nature of a novelty, though I think it is one of the permanent kind. I believe it is a device the use of which will add distinct improvement to results on the screen. It is designed to be used at the beginning and end of each picture, or at the beginning and end of the show, and has the exact effect of a drop curtain. The operator threads his film in the usual way, but the aperture in his projector is entirely closed, while the slide representing a drop curtain is being projected to the screen through stereo lens G, Fig. 1. As the machine starts the operator moves lever 1, Fig. 3 slowly, which raises the curtain drop slide exactly in synchronism with the opening of the machine aperture, so that the effect is the same as though a real drop curtain were raised, revealing the title of the picture on the screen behind it. The effect is, in my opinion, good. At the end of the reel the process is reversed, and the curtain comes down, shutting off the picture. Now mind you the picture is not projected on the stereopticon projection The slide moves up, or, as a matter of fact, moves down exactly in synchronism with the opening of the machine aperture. The fire shutter of the projector is not in any way interfered with. Light is taken from the side of the lamphouse through a special condenser, E, Fig. 1, which projects on a mirror; this mirror in turn illuminates slide K, see diagram, Fig. 1. The regular stereo lens is, of course, in front of the slide. Light is from the projection arc, and, as a matter of fact, when the thing is operated without the film or the slide in, and so set that the clear, white light from both is on the screen, each carrying half the space, the stereo projection is the whiter of the two. There is no loss of light; that is to say the device utilizes light which would otherwise be wasted.

The method employed is illustrated in the diagram, Fig. 1, in which A is the projection arc; B, C, D the regular moving picture condenser combination (English and German style); I the machine aperture, and H the objective lens, this comprising the regular moving picture projection system; E is the side lens, taking light from and set at approximately a 45 degree angle to the projection arc. This lens projects to mirror L. Mirror L in turn projects the light through the second condensing lens, F, slide K and stereo lens G, whence it travels to the screen.

The method of attachment to the lamphouse is very plainly shown in Fig. 2, in which we are above, looking down on top of the lamphouse and the Projecta Strama, screw A being the adjustment screw by means of which the angle of mirror L, Fig. 1, may be changed to meet local conditions. B is an adjustment screw by means of which the angle of rear lens E, Fig. 1, is changed to meet local conditions.

In Fig. 3, slide C is held in slide carrier D. The action briefly is as follows: the portion of the mechanism opening and closing the machine aperture, not shown, is connected through bars E, F, rod G, and lever H, with vertical slide and title spacer H (in the photograph knob J on the end of lever I appears to be on the dowser handle, but it is not; in fact the knob does not come within 6 inches of the dowser handle) so that when the operator mover lever 1, vertical title spacer H moves downward, thus slowly uncovering slide C and, in exact synchronism therewith the aperture of the machine is opened by means of bars E, F, rod G, and lever H, and thus, by the synchronism of these two parts, we have the illusion of a curtain being raised or lowered.

It is a somewhat difficult proposition to explain in a way that will enable the operator or manager to fully grasp the idea. But you may take it from me that the effect on the screen is excellent, and the adjustment is such that I believe it can be readily accomplished by the average operator.

I have not as yet seen the device in actual operation with alternating current, but I am told the effect is very good, and with direct current I can myself vouch for the fact that it is excellent.

Out of Focus.

Oklahoma has trouble as follows:

Has a new semi-reflecting screen stretched on a frame and the screen sets square with the machine, but when the center of the picture is in focus one side is out, and when the side is in focus the center is out, but the other side remains in focus all right.

This is a decidedly queer proposition, and seemingly impossible. If your machine sets square with the lens and one side is out of focus and the other in, it would indicate (a) objective lens out of line with the aperture; (b) the whole mechanism out of line, or out of center with the screen—out of square on the machine table, I mean; (c) aperture worn on one side and not on the other, or (d) loose tension shoe on one side. But, however, if you can change the focus so as to sharpen one side without altering the other side, why—I give it up. Suppose you try another objective and make sure that your present one has not got a faint finger mark on it somewhere. The thing as you put it don't fit up with common sense. There must be something wrong with your statement.

Film Drying.

H. W. Griggs, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, says:

> In your recent criticism of film drying you suggest a cylinder with a reducing radius to compensate for the shrinkage of the film. There is such a machine used in the Appleton Paper Mills, Wisconsin, used for winding tissue paper and other material where a uniform circumferential speed and even cutting must be maintained. Possibly this could be adapted to a large drying cylinder, although, of course, it would come under the patent already secured on the invention. When you speak of a smooth board surface you probably don't mean more than interval strips, as otherwise there would be no circulation of air on both sides of the film.

No, I don't mean anything of the kind. I mean just what I said—a flat board surface. I do not know there would be any necessity for the circulation of air on the celluloid side. It might take a little longer for the film to dry without the air circulation, but the surface should be just as I said, viz: flat board and prefectly smooth, though it might be covered with small corrugations, if deemed advisable, but should not be more than one-half of an inch in width. As to the tension equalizer you speak of, it will be on the new machine, which ought to be on the market about the first of next year.

Sharpening Carbons.

Minneapolis, Minnesota, writes:

> I am sharpening carbons at the rate of a package a day. Is there any way of using a motor and emery wheel? If so, what kind of emery wheel should I use, and what speed ought the motor to run?

Certainly you can use an emery wheel and a motor. The wheel should be run at ordinary speed, should be 6 or more inches in diameter, at least 1 inch, and, preferably 1¼ inches thick. A holder made of iron pipe should be set at just the right angle to the face of the wheel to secure the desired point, the carbon to be shoved through the pipe holder, of course. This holder need not be more than 2 or 3 inches long, but one end should be right up close to the wheel so as to give the carbon plenty of support.

P. S. You will, of course, understand that the pipe holder should have an inside diameter just the least bit larger than the outside diameter of the carbon. There should be a small stop right up against the face of the wheel so that the carbon can only be shoved far enough to point it down until a ¼ inch flat space is left on its end.

A Queer Proposition.

J. B. Scully, Fullerton, Louisiana, says:

> Here is a nut that has captured my goat. Have spent half a day going over the old files of the World trying to find some other poor cuss in the same fix I am. Am projecting a 14 foot 6 inch picture on a 60 foot throw. Have what is supposed to be a 6½ — 7½ meniscus-bi-convex combination, using 45 to 60 amperes; 110 volts A.C.; ¾ inch upper cored Bio carbon and ⅝ lower one; setting as per Handbook. There is a red and blue light which appears around the edges of all white objects on the screen. I have read and re-read everything I can find on A.C. arcs, including Hallberg, the Handbook and everything in the department. Have tried various setting of carbons, spaced my condensers differently, put in a new objective lens and well—assistance, please; in other words, help! I have this consolation, though. Two weeks ago I managed to slip off for a couple of days and found this same trouble existing in both Alexandria and Shreveport. Have about reached the conclusion that the trouble lies in the way the crater forms on the carbons, since it hardly seems possible that all the optical equipments of the shows I visited can be out of gear in the same way. Now tell me what you make out of the matter?

I also began to yell for assistance, when the office door blew open and a chap by the name of W. S. James, the fellow with the red hair from Philadelphia, oozed through the orifice, and supplied the assistance. Frankly, I believe James is full of prunes on this particular proposition but here is what he says:

"The purpose of the front combination (This is James talking now.—Ed.) is to correct chromatic aberration, therefore there must be something wrong with the front combination of your objective lens. (This is James pulling this, not me.—Ed.) It is possible you have had the lenses apart and gotten the front combination of the two lenses mixed. This might produce such a result as you describe. (Remember this is James talking, not me.—Ed.) I had the same trouble down in Philadelphia not long ago and that was exactly what had happened, the front combination of two lenses had gotten transposed."

There, I have shut James off, though for fear he might possibly be right I have not put him out of the office. He is a pretty good chap, at that, and I don't like to take radical measures—and there you are! I agree with you that it is highly improbable, not to say impossible, that all these lens systems would have the same thing happen to them at the same time. If James is right it is just what has happened, however.

He Likes the Dutch.

Nova Scotia says:

> I would like to tell the boys how I made my machine almost as good as new after smoke, water and a little fire made it look like fifty cents worth of junk. Disassembled the machine and tried gasoline, but it was too slow, so I bought a can of Dutch Cleanser and a brush and by means of a little elbow grease the machine is about as good as ever, with the exception of the lenses, which were mostly broken. I use a simple little device to thread in frame.

Yes, that is all right, Nova Scotia, but peroxide of hydrogen is much better than Dutch Cleanser. It is a little more expensive, but it cuts the stuff off very quickly and very completely. Nova Scotia has described his method of threading in frame, but he does not make it clear enough so I can quite get all the details of the idea. He then says:

> I have had a worry ever since answer to question 72 was published. I do not understand Brother Spencer's curves. I shall not go into details but touch only on certain points wherein I disagree with Spencer's drawing. Let us assume parts of his curves above 0 to represent positive flow and those below negative. From my theory I should say that line B is part of the line voltage which is necessary to overcome the reactance E.M.F. The reactance E.M.F. would be the equal and opposite—that is, when one is plus 75 volts, the other is minus 75 volts, and when one is at maximum negative, the other is at maximum positive. In other words, they are 180 degrees apart. I believe Brother Bullock has the right idea, except when he says the collapsing field sets up an E.M.F. which opposes the line voltage; though maybe it does oppose the line voltage, but it is in the same direction as the voltage which the coil allows to pass through, according to my authority, the I.C.S. reference library. (I hardly dared say the I.C.S. after the beautiful roasting a certain party received this week).

Well, I am not very well posted on the highly technical matters Nova Scotia brings up, so I will just turn this proposition over to Bullock and Spencer, who will no doubt give it the necessary attention. As to the I.C.S. matter, no one was roasted because he was an I.C.S. man. The roast came about entirely through the fact that a couple of correspondents had an exaggerated case of swell-head, and a nice little hammer which they did not know how to use.

Luminosa Screen?

J. Williams, Chicago, asks:

> What is your opinion of the luminosa screen, manufactured by the Federal Screen Corporation, New York City?

No such projection surface has been brought to the notice of this department. Presumably if this company had something good they would have presented it for approval. The fact that they have not done so does not necessarily condemn their product, but we have noticed that those having articles of real merit seldom fail to present them for the approval of the department, and they don't stand on the order of doing it either.

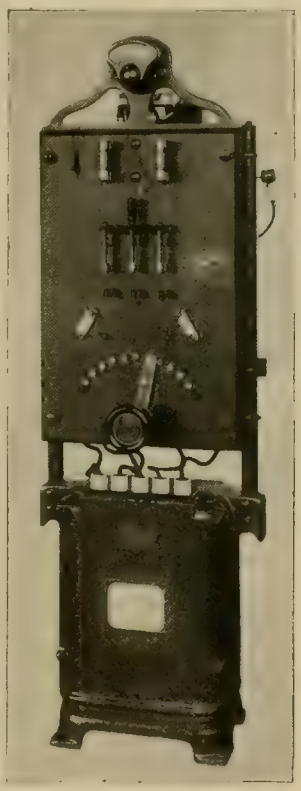
Eye Shield.

C. H. Hendricks, Nampo, Ida., writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: While I have not been operating for four months, I have not missed a single issue of the World. I met a brother operator at Atlantic, Ia., who gave me an eye shade he is distributing. It is the best I have ever seen. Price 25 cents, and they certainly are restful to the eyes. These shades do not touch the forehead at all. Brother Hein said he would send you one. Has he done so? I am going back home in about a month, and then it is back to the crank for me. Have been in nearly all the Minneapolis theaters and the projection, as shown in them, seems to be very good.

Glad to have your favorable report on Minneapolis projection. The Minneapolis boys are, I think, a little bit inclined to be of the "keep-it-to-yourself" type, but I am sure they are a good bunch of men, at that, and in due course of time will recover from the dog-in-a-manger idea. No, I have not received the eye shade. Personally, I believe in having the shade on the machine, instead of on the forehead, though one brother, some time ago, sent in a scheme that was pretty good. It consisted of a shade similar to the one illustrated, but worn in an inverted position.

New Rectifier.

It will be remembered that some time ago this department at the sugestion of Geo. F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., recommended to the General Electric Company that they add to their mercury arc rectifier a switch by means of which in case of tube failure the operator could immediately throw over to A. C., using the main reactance of the rectifier as an economizer (low voltage transformer) and proceed with the show with alternating current; also that a butterfly switch be added, by means of which the operator could instantly vary his amperage at will.



The accompanying illustration shows that this recommendation has been complied with, and that, too, in most excellent form. When the three-pole, double-throw switch is in position shown, the rectifier is working on the tube and producing D. C. at the arc, but should the tube fail, the operator has only to throw the three-pole switch over and re-strike his arc with alternating current, with between 60 and 70 amperes at the arc—sufficient to give him very good illumination.

By means of the butterfly switch shown, the operator is able to vary his amperage instantly at will, merely by moving the switch to the left. The two links shown on the face of the panel make the necessary change to fit the rectifier to 110 or 220 volt current. The machine, as it now is, is certainly a big improvement over the old type, and a very complete apparatus.

It is distinctly to the credit of the General Electric that when the advisability of a change of this kind was brought to their attention they immediately got busy and made the same, with commendable and cheerful alacrity.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE CANCELED MORTGAGE (Biograph), May 17.—The virtuous element in this one-reel drama is supplied by a pair of Western road agents, who rob a stage and use a portion of the money to pay off a widow's mortgage, and then add a touch of humor to the situation by re-stealing the money from the flinty-hearted mortgagee. It was W. S. Gilbert who observed "When the burglar isn't jumping on his mother," he is full of loving kindness and gentle thoughts. This photoplay furnishes abundant corroboration of the Gilbertian aphorism. Harry Carey and Barney Furey are the pair of engaging rascals, and Claire McDowell is human and appealing as the widow.

MANNERS AND THE MAN (Essanay), May 17.—"Love in Livery" has long been a favorite theme of the playwrights. It has been cleverly handled in this one-reel comedy. Joseph Byron Totten is the young gentleman who wins a wife by disguising himself as a butler, and Beverly Bayne is the young lady who becomes a maid in her own house. They both make the most of their opportunities. A bright little comedy.

INTO THE NIGHT ("Road o' Strife" Series, No. 7) (Lubin), May 17.—The death of Clara Jerome, also Doctor Duncan and his wife, occur in this instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial. To add to Alene's troubles, Robert Dane leaves her and goes to the city in search of employment. At the finish of the reel, Alene decides to follow him. New and important developments are thus promised for the future.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 39, 1915 (Selig), May 17.—The burning of the old wooden frigate Omaha, off San Francisco harbor, opens this instalment of items, and the arrival of the Atlantic fleet in New York harbor closes it. Other events pictured are: Cowboys and cowgirls reviving old sports at Los Angeles; students at Lafayette, Ind., college in a parade; New York school children in arbor exercises; Art. Smith, at San Francisco, looping the loop; New York Mail Marathon; Park Row during Lusitania excitement, and war pictures.

MR. JARR AND THE DACHSHUND (The Jarr Family Series, No. 7) (Vitagraph), May 17.—A string of sausage, although it is in no way related to the dachshund, plays an important part in this number of the Jarr jangles. Mr. Jarr again manages to start a row which involves his long-suffering neighborhood and furnishes much joy to the audience. Harry Davenport is certainly a great man in a comic fight.

THEIR OWN WAYS (Edison) May 18.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 741, issue of May 1.

THE LIBERTY PARTY (Kalem), May 18.—A "Ham" comedy that deserves to go to the head of its class. The fun starts when the film is set in motion, and rolls blithely along until the finish.

A LUCKY STRIKE (Lubin), May 18.—One more of those delightful bits of fiction that playwrights are so fond of concocting and audiences so thoroughly enjoy in spite of the fact that so few examples occur in real life. However, Arthur D. Hotaling has contrived his little comedy with a nice regard for the fairy tale ending; and Mae Hotely, Babe Hardy, Cora Walker and Frances NeMoyer see that no worthy point escapes.

ACROSS THE DESERT (Selig), May 18.—F. M. Willis' one-reel drama is a Western story painted in somber colors. Death and suffering play a large part in the unfolding of the plot, but the human appeal is equally strong. Robyn Adair, Leo Pierson and Eugenie Forde are all competent. The photography is of the best.

CHINKS AND CHICKENS (Edison), May 19.—Epes Winthrop Sargent has unearthed an absolutely new comic plot for his one-reel farce. Chickens and Chinamen are an unusual stage combination. With the assistance of an Irish cook, in the person of Jessie Stevens, and Waddy and Arty as farmhands, however, the film furnishes ample amusement. T. Tamamoto and William Ruge are the two chinks, and William Fables proves the equal of Maude Adams as a lordly chanticleer.

THE FABLE OF "THE TWO SENSATIONAL FAILURES" (Essanay), May 19.—"If luck breaks right, any liability may become an asset" is the practical lesson taught by this George Ade one-reel comedy. It also takes a quiet shot at the present dance craze among the aged and the heavyweights, and is provocative of much laughter. Lloyd Holton and Ruth Stonehouse are the two failures who become assets at the finish.

LOVE FINDS A WAY (Selig), May 19.—Maud Durbin Skinner is the author of this one-reel drama, which is laid back in the days when George Washington was fighting the Britishers. A pretty little romance is unfolded, with the help of the excellent acting of Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi, Joe Hazelton and Helen Castle.

ALMOST A HERO (Vitagraph), May 19.—A one-reel farce by W. R. Cox, the cast containing the names of several new Vitagraph actors, who acquit themselves with credit. The film is good for more than the average quantity of laughs.

FOR HER HAPPINESS (Biograph), May 20.—A drab little drama, the sacrifice of an invalid in order to secure his wife's happiness, furnishing the theme. Charles Bennett is impressive as the sick man. Augusta Anderson, Charles Perley and Jack Drumeir round out a competent cast.

SWEEDIE'S HERO (Essanay), May 20.—Wallace Beery and Ben Turpin come very near to acting this one-reeler by themselves. Their expansive comedy methods are nicely adapted to the requirements of the film, the scenes introducing Sweedie as a hotel scrubwoman.

WHERE'S OLIVER? (MinA), May 20.—A satire upon the new humanitarian mode of treating criminals may not have been aimed at in this one-reel comedy, but it's there, nevertheless. Harry La Pearl's efforts to break into jail because it is such a nice place to go, are sources of considerable good fun.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 40, 1915 (Selig), May 20.—Giant rifle at Sandy Hook, leads the list of news items. Rhode Island troops at Boston; Horse Show at Washington; bark Ruth Stark leaving Boston; Admiral Benson at Washington; Harvard-Cornell Athletic Meet; harbor protection work at Galveston; Vanderbilt coach "Liberty" starting on trip; Cymric sailing for England; Cadet Corps at Washington, and scenes on the battleship Texas, fill out the film.

DIMPLES, THE AUTO SALESGIRL (Vitagraph), May 20.—The plot for this one-reel comedy was supplied by William Addison Lathrop, the producing by Wilfrid North, and the acting by Lillian Walker, Billy Quirk, Joseph Weber and Bobby Huggins. Result: All that could be desired. It is entirely superfluous to add that Miss Walker also supplied the dimples called for by the plot.

BOBBY'S BARGAIN (Biograph), May 21.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1091, issue of May 15.

JUST RETRIBUTION (Lubin), May 21.—A one-reel George W. Terwilliger drama, with an interesting plot and a fire scene that is realistic to the last degree. Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley and Kempton Greene give the film the benefit of thoroughly capable impersonations.

CUPID PUTS ONE OVER ON THE SHATCHEN (Vitagraph), May 21.—Anna Karfunkle is responsible for this one-reel comedy, which overflows with humor born of an intimate knowledge of the Hebrew character and customs. Nitra Frazer, Wally Van, Anna Brody, Albert Roccardi, Edward Elkas, Lillian Burns and Mrs. Beck play their roles with artistic naturalness.

THE REVENUE AGENT (Essanay), May 21.—A moonshiner story with an original plot and an entirely unexpected denouement makes this one-reel drama doubly interesting. G. M. Anderson, Marguerite Clayton and Lee Willard bring out the situations with marked effect.

THE FIRST PIANO IN CAMP (Biograph), May 22.—A Western comedy in one reel that suggests the work of Bret Harte. The story is delightfully humorous, and is adequately acted by Joseph McDermott, Walter Coyle and Ivan Christy.

A HAZARDOUS COURTSHIP (Edison), May 22.—An amusing one-reel farce which affords Dallas Welford and Julian Reed an opportunity to contribute laughable impersonations of a pair of eccentric old bachelors. The comedy complications are skilfully handled by Director Will Louis.

THE BROKEN TRAIN (Episode No. 28 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 22.—The chain of thrills remains coupled together during the action of this one-reel "hazard," even if the freight train does break apart and is boarded by Helen, in a flying leap from a pursuing auto. The phrase, "a charmed life," should be copyrighted and presented to Miss Holmes.

THE CLUBMAN (Lubin), May 22.—The expression "pantomime farce" exactly fits the most of Billy Reeves' work in this one-reel offering. After a night at the club, Billy takes his familiar jag home with him and meets a surprising number of comic adventures. The fun gathers speed from the start and ends in a whirlwind of merriment and flying feathers, as the clubman battles with the contents of his pillow.

THE JAGUAR TRAP (Selig), May 22.—A Jungle-Zoo drama for which Emma Bell has supplied a meritorious story. Thomas Santschi has produced the offering with his customary care and praiseworthy result. Thomas Bates, Marian Warner, C. B. Murphy, Edith Johnson and Lefayette McKee acquit themselves admirably.

General Film Company Specials.

THE JEST OF JEALOUSY (Selig), May 17.—There is good red blood in this one-reel drama, and the action progresses steadily up to the climax. Frances Marion, Frank Mayo, Bruce Smith, Frank Erlanger and Philo McCullough make the performance a spirited one.

THE LURE OF MAMMON (Kalem), May 17.—This "Broadway Favorites" Feature Drama, with Fania Marinoff in the leading part, has been given an elaborate production. The introduction of the heroine is startling, and the scenes on the yacht and in the home of the millionaire are reproduced with convincing fidelity. The story is melodramatic, and crowded with thrills. Miss Marinoff plays Dorinda Ladue with much emotional power, and is well supported by John E. Mackin, Robert D. Walker, James B. Ross and Ellen Farrin.

THE AWAKENING (Vitagraph), May 18.—This two-reel drama, although quite entertaining, is scarcely up to the mark which James Oliver Curwood generally sets for himself. It tells a pleasantly conventional love story, and has been produced in Ralph Ince's usual thoroughly artistic manner. Earle Williams and Anita Stewart have no difficulty in realizing their respective roles. William Dangman and Dorothy Leeds also deserve honorable mention.

FELIX HOLT (Biograph), May 18.—A two-part version of George Eliot's forceful novel of English life, the salient points of the story have been skillfully retained, and the atmosphere reproduced with commendable fidelity. Charles H. Mailes is an earnest and mentally adequate Felix Holt. Jack Drumeir makes a lovable and convincing Rev. Rufus Lyon, and Vola Smith is a winsome Esther.

A LESSON IN ROMANCE (Essanay), May 18.—H. S. Sheldon has departed from his usual realistic dramas in this three-reel photoplay, and related a very romantic tale with the disguised hero, rescued heroine, and all the proper adjuncts of such diverting fiction. The play is an excellent example of its class, and has been intrusted to the skilled acting of E. H. Calvert, Lillian Drew, Eugene Acker, Marion Skinner and Jack Meredith.

IN THE DARK (Lubin), May 19.—This three-reel drama, by Adrian Gil-Spear, is of the highly-colored, ultra-romantic school, in which a brilliant young artist, his wife, a wealthy roue, and a beautiful French actress who repays the artist's scorn by blinding him with etching fluid, are given wide scope for their emotional powers. Joseph Kaufman, as the artist, rather overdoes several of his strong scenes, and a little less "acting" on the part of other members of the cast would improve the performance. The play is finely mounted and will please most moving picture patrons.

A DECISION OF THE COURT (Lubin), May 20.—Revenge is the theme of this two-reel drama by Paul M. Powell. The author has written a story which compels attention, and produced it with his usual care and skill. Velma Whitman makes a strong figure of the woman who seeks to be revenged upon the judge who sent her son to prison. Melvin Mayo and L. W. Shumway are prominent members of the cast.

THE TWO NATURES WITHIN HIM (Selig), May 20.—Jules Eckert Goodman has utilized the "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" psychologic contrast as the theme for his two-reel drama. A clergyman, wounded in the head during an encounter with a thief, becomes a criminal himself, until restored to his former self by an operation. The play keeps a tight hold upon the interest. Thomas Santschi brings out the dual natures of the Rev. William Morris very effectively, and Lafayette McKee, Franklin Hall and Bessie Eyton lend strength to the cast.

THE WRONG WOMAN (Edison), May 21.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 917, issue of May 8.

THE CLOSED DOOR (Episode No. 17 of "The Girl Detective" Series) (Kalem), May 19.—Interest is kept at white heat in this two-reel drama through the efforts of an unscrupulous doctor to place his wife in an insane asylum. The situation when the Girl Detective takes hold of the case is worked up with skill, and the climax meets the entire approbation of an audience. Marin Sais, Thomas Lingham and Ollie Kirkby are the leading members of an excellent cast.

OTHERWISE BILL HARRISON (Essanay), May 22.—The dramatic portion of this two-reel photoplay is so good that it is difficult to accept it as the day dream of a newsboy. At any rate, the youngster is advised to give up selling papers and devote his entire time to day dreams; they will find a ready market as scenarios. Joseph Byron Totten, the author of the drama, is capital in the leading male role, and Ruth Stonehouse plays opposite to him with her accustomed reliability.

Mutual Film Corporation.

GUSSLE TIED TO TROUBLE (Keystone), May 6.—Syd Chaplin and company do some amazing mountain climbing stunts in this number. The snow scenes are good and the humor abundant. Well photographed and contains a lot of good, clean fun.

MISS FATTY'S SEASIDE LOVERS (Keystone), May 15.—Roscoe Arbuckle stars in this number, dressed up as the portly daughter of a mothball magnate. The comedy situations are extremely laughable. A good low comedy number.

THREE ROSES (Thanhouser), May 16.—This picture might have been more impressive had the costuming been more carefully attended to. It is hard to understand how a Thanhouser production could be allowed to face the public with the attire of the Colonial period and that of the present day mingled so promiscuously. The story of the production is not unusual. It is the old story of a Southern girl eloping with a Northerner and being disowned by her father, who repents in after years. Apart from the carelessness in costuming the picture has been nicely produced. In the cast are Morgan Jones, Inda Palmer, Lorraine Huling, Helen Badgley and Riley Chamberlin.

HE WOULDN'T STAY DOWN (Keystone), May 20.—Ford Sterling is featured in this typical Keystone offering. He insures his life and a false friend tries to drown him. The insurance money is collected, but Ford turns up and saves his wife and money from the friend. There are numerous rough spots in this, but it is very funny.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 20, 1915 (Mutual), May 20.—Interesting items of this issue are Harry Lauder's Band at Stockton; digging for souvenirs of the raid on the Kentish coast; a review of the 2d battalion of the London Welsh; East Indian soldiers off for the fighting line; the May Day fete in Central Park, New York; a glimpse of Von Bernstorff, German Ambassador to America, and Elbert Hubbard as he appeared in this life.

FOR BETTER—BUT WORSE (Keystone), May 22.—The story of a flirtatious married man whose wife sends him out with the dog to give it an airing in the park. He meets a girl, arranges to have her kidnapped, and the film winds up with a wild finish. This is all passable and very hilarious.

THE RIVALS (Komic), May 23.—An unusually amusing children's comedy-drama. It has been especially well produced, and the clever youngsters who make the fun are George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, and one other little boy whose work is also worthy of mention but whose name we do not know.

THE CLIFF GIRL (Reliance), May 24.—The story of a young geologist who meets a girl of the woods. Her father meets with a fatal fall and when the fiancee arrives she becomes jealous of the young girl. The geologist learns to love the latter after saving her from his fiancee's brother. The story is not exceptional, but is well pictured and entertaining; the settings are attractive.

THE STAY-AT-HOMES (Beauty), May 25.—This film tells in an interesting and comic manner how two young people of similar tastes accidentally run across one another in the most unheard-of manner. Later they surprise their respective relatives by acting just like other people. The picture is one that is evidently warranted to please.

THE RIGHTFUL THEFT (Majestic), May 25.—An original story, which did not seem developed to its most satisfying conclusion. It concerns an old coin taken from a contribution plate; it proves sufficiently valuable to raise the church debt, but it seemed the children who found it should have some share in the reward. This is new and different, though not strongly worked out.

THE REPRISAL (American), May 26.—Edward Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood, John Steppling, George Field and Lizette Thorn, comprise the cast of this excellent one-reel picture. The story has something original about it and holds the interest well. It is the story of how an unscrupulous politician tries to buy up the newspaper belonging to the man whom he enjoins his daughter not to associate with. A maid in the politician's household is bribed to call on the young man late at night, for the purpose of establishing a scandal which he is to be forced to sell his paper in order to hush up. The arrangements, overheard by the daughter, are frustrated by her locking the maid in her closet, and impersonating her herself. The result is comical and satisfying.

THE DEADLY FOCUS (Reliance), May 26.—The villain in this fixes a revolver in a vice, to be exploded by a magnifying glass at a certain time. He fails to allow for the change in sun time and himself becomes the victim of the device. This is well constructed and makes an interesting, though not very pleasant, production. Raymond Wells, Alfred Paget and Claire Anderson are in the cast.

IT'S AN ILL WIND——" (Falstaff), May 28.—A good novelty, in which two mischievous children cut loose a line full of clothes. It is blown across the river and all over New York City, double exposure being used to accomplish this. The photography contains shadows in places, but on the whole this little offering makes good.

LITTLE DICK'S FIRST CASE (Majestic), May 28.—Three children become interested in detective stories and start out to find some sort of crime to work upon. They think they have discovered a murder, but it turns out to be an Italian celebration of a new baby. This is slight in plot and only fairly entertaining.

GASOLINE GUS (Komic), May 30.—A very amusing eccentric number, concerning a purloined automobile, converted into a jitney bus by the hero. There are numerous laughable incidents brought out in this, particularly in the wild ride of the lovers. Elmer Booth and Fay Tincher are in the cast.

THE ANGEL IN THE MASK (Thanhouser), May 30.—This starts out as a sort of boarding house comedy, but later introduces a murder case. The development is entertaining throughout and the mystery is cleared up in an effective way. Boyd Marshal and Marguerite Snow play the leads. The number proves quite strong as it is worked out.

HIS TWIN (Royal), June 5.—This is a clever little comedy in which a husband gets into serious trouble with his wife over a letter from his twin brother who signs himself "Your other half." In the closing scenes some double exposure work is used effectively. The comedy of the picture is founded on a genuine situation and is good.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

GOD'S WITNESS (Mutual Masterpicture—Thanhouser), May.—A four-reel production based on the novel of Augusta Evans Wilson, "At the Mercy of Tiberius." The story is one particularly well adapted to pictures and it is too late in the day to accuse the well-known writer of making use of a far-fetched idea in the phenomenon of the photograph of the scene taking place in the room within, being stamped on the window pane by the flash of lightning that killed the old man. The production has been well made and contains a great deal of realism. Flo La Badie, Arthur Bauer, Mary Elizabeth Forbes, A. O'Connor, Sidney Bracy, Morris Foster, J. Williams and Harris Gordon are among the cast. This is one of the Mutual Masterpictures.

GHOSTS (Mutual Masterpicture—Majestic), May.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1439, issue of May 29.

THE FAILURE (Reliance), May.—This is a four-reel number of the Masterpicture program. The first two reels of the production give fine promise, and it is keenly disappointing to find that a hackneyed development of what started out to be a good story, has been resorted to in dragging it into a four-reel production. John Emerson is featured in the picture, doing excellent work, with some opportunity. Supporting him is an exceptionally fine cast among whom are Wahneta Hanson, S. D. Sears, Olga Gray, and Augustus Carney. The production is based on a quarrel of morals and responsibilities between a young newspaper reporter, and a theatrical manager. The reporter afterwards writes a play which the manager steals. In his attempt to expose the manager the reporter is made the victim of a frame-up. Here it is that old ideas commence to throng into the development, with the result already mentioned.

THE DARKENING TRAIL (Mutual Masterpicture—New York Motion), May.—A four-part film version of a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and produced by Thomas H. Ince. Too much praise could not be given the remarkably realistic, and human manner in which this picture has been fashioned, and one of the most notable things about it is the psychological effect of mind upon mind which happens in the play in so perfectly natural a manner, without effort on the part of the director or players, that only the discriminating mind may catch its significance as it passes. This is most noticeable in the changed attitude of the father toward his daughter after the father of the "cad" who has stolen the girl's virtue has set him an example by using kindness, justice and cool-headed reason in dealing with the matter. The production is one to be proud of, William S. Hart is featured in the picture as Yukon Ed, portraying in excellent style a splendid type of man.

THE SIGN OF THE ROSE (Kay-Bee), May. —Reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 740, issue of May 1.

ELEVEN-THIRTY P. M. (Majestic), May 23. This production has many of the qualities of the moving picture masterpieces. It has been developed in a human and highly realistic manner. The story itself is brief, but contains a good situation. It has been worked out in a manner that misses no necessary detail. Often these details are added by a series of short flashes that acquaint us with various angles of the situation. The story, whose secret is not divulged until the end, is based on the result of wife stealing. In the present instance the gardener proves to be the wronged man, who watches over his daughter unknown to her, helps her to meet the lover that her foster father denounces, and in the end accidentally kills the man that wronged him, and dies while he confesses. Loretta Blake, Eric von Rifzau, Al. W. Filson, George Walsh, Sam De Grasse and Curt Rehfeld are talented members of the cast.

IN THE PURPLE HILLS (American), May 24.—The chief fault with this production is that it contains an example of crime that could be easily put in practice, and in fact has been put in practice before, from the viewing of such a picture, ending with deadly and horrible results. We refer to the placing of a gun in a vice with the trigger and the closed door of the house conected by a string in such a way that the first one to open the door is confronted with the awful realization of having discharged the gun, killing the victim of the crime, who has previously been tied to a chair not far from the muzzle of the gun. Otherwise the production is intensely interesting and well produced.

FAIRY FERN SEED (Thanhouser), May 25.—A pleasing two-reel offering, with a touch of fairy story in it. The rich girl takes her poor girl chum home to visit her. The poor girl is secretly jealous of her friend, whom she induces to elope with her lover without her mother's knowledge. She then supplants the daughter in the mother's heart. Later the Fairbanks twins are brought into the story, as the grandchildren. They find their grandmother and the wicked girl is turned away. This is attractively pictured and contains some good double exposure photography. It should please women and children particularly.

OUT OF BONDAGE (Majestic), May 30.—Rather a thrilling incident in the life of the daughter of a crook brings this two-reel production to a climax. The girl being forced by her father to marry his partner in crime, they are later obliged to go West, taking up their residence on the edge of an orange ranch. When the two crooks in a quarrel shoot one another the young owner of the ranch marries the girl. The production is a fairly acceptable one, but is not at all out of the ordinary in quality.

THE GIRL OF THE SEA (Thanhouser), June 1.—A film story running about a reel and a half, featuring Mignon Anderson and Harry Benham. The young reporter meets a girl while on a fishing trip and learns the story of how she was found as a baby on a wrecked vessel. He afterward discovers that she is the daughter of a millionaire. The fore part of this is very good and, while it could have been made into a much stronger offering, it is fairly strong as it stands.

THE BABY BENEFACTOR (Thanhouser), June 1.—Finishing out the above. A bright little story of The Kidlet's philanthropy. This is good.

THE CONVERSION OF FROSTY BLAKE (Broncho), June 2.—Another strong western subject in two reels, with Wm. S. Hart, Charles Ray and Louise Glaum in the leads. The story of the young minister who attempts to save the mining camp gets a strong hold on the observer. He slaps the big gambler in the face at the risk of his life, and at last does sacrifice his life in the cause of religion. His heroism for the work finally converts the gambler and the girl, who are married by the dying minister. This is a fine western number.

THE SCALES OF JUSTICE (Domino), June 3.—A two-reel dramatic offering, with Walter Edwards, Clara Williams, J. Barney Sherry and Frank Borzage in the cast. The plot concerns the wife of a judge who feels herself neglected. A young man becomes infatuated with her, calls at the house and is observed by both the judge and the burglar. He escapes down the fire escapes and finds himself accused of the murder committed by the burglar. The trial scenes are full of interest. This is better constructed than the usual story of this type and makes a good offering of the semi-melodramatic sort.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY, NOS. 4 AND 5, May 17 and 24.—Reviewed by James S. MacQuade on page 1441, issue of May 29.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE'S NEWS, NO. 38, 1915, May 10.—Among the most interesting incidents here recorded is the Harvard-Cornell marathon and also the athletic contest which includes obstacle races, etc., between the same colleges. Some zoological specimens are exhibitod indulging in a game of baseball, Harry Payne Whitney's Regret winning the Derby at Louisville, and a review of troops of Caston Ticine. The series of events in this issue closes with a comic cartoon entitled "Another Fallen Idol," in which Bacchus gets "his," and with huge tears of anguish streaming from his eyes, is kicked bodily from various countries of the world.

WHIFFLES HAS THE GOUT, May 1.—This is an acceptable comedy in which Whiffles suffers extremely from the gout as well as from a preponderance of female admirers There is a great deal of good comedy in the picture which is founded on a good situation.

MADURA AND ITS PAGODAS, May.—An interesting colored scenic showing places of historic import, and the marvellous architectural feats accomplished there in earlier days. On the same reel with the following.

STOCK FARMING IN SOUTH AMERICA, May.—This is an attractive picture which shows the breaking to the saddle of the wild horse of the pampas. The picture has evidently been taken in Paraguay or possibly the Argentine and is on the same reel with the above.

FALLS AND RAPIDS OF SIVASAMUDRAM, May.—A delightful scenic on the same reel with the above two. The photography exhibited in this picture is especially fine.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials.

TRICKS OF FATE (Balboa), May.—A two-part film of fairly interesting character. The development of the story is not always natural, although the story itself is in many ways attractive. It treats of the life of a young woman who, as an infant, was left on a doorstep by her colored nurse. One day a tramp, who, on the morning the child was left, was kicked from the doorstep by the man who became the foster father of the girl, enters the house and tells the foster parents, with the girl listening behind the portieres, that she has colored blood in her. Later, when the girl has left the house in her distress at the news, taking up the study of music, she employs her old nurse unwittingly, and discovers the perfidy of the tramp.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 7), May.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1442, issue of May 29.

United Film Service.

THE LAW OF NATURE (Pyramid), May 29.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1276, issue of May 22.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS (Ideal), May 30.—A rather good semi-western comedy, and a go-between legitimate comedy and farce comedy. A Jew sells out his men's clothing store and goes West. While he attempts to manipulate all situations with the Jew business instinct, he gets in serious trouble with the cowboys.

MAN AND THE LAW (Ideal) May 31.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1443, issue of May 29.

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Empress), June 2.—A worthy two-reel offering produced by Joseph Levering. Levering also plays the lead with Marion Swayne playing opposite him. The story is of a young author who, in order to better understand the psychological subject which he is converting into novel form, places his wife on the rack of jealousy, bringing about disastrous results. The production has been well made and is a thoroughly enjoyable one.

AUNT MATILDA OUT-WITTED (Luna), June 3.—A rather amusing western comedy with Dot Farley in the lead. Aunt Matilda appointed guardian over her two pretty nieces has her troubles keeping them away from their cowboy lovers, who, to overcome the difficulty, dress as girls and hire out with Aunt Matilda. They manage to get to the parson's with the girls and the ceremony is performed before the desperate relative catches up with them.

AMATEUR NIGHT (Starlight), June 3.—Aubrey and Hendig make acceptable comedy in this instance. Getting mixed up in a prize fight, they advance some queer ideas on the subject, putting same into practice.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 167 (Universal), May 19.—The fleet review in New York is admirably pictured in this number, giving good views of President Wilson as well. Also many scenes of general interest in this country and abroad.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING (Laemmle), May 30.—A very appealing photoplay, from a story by John Fleming Wilson. Charles Manley, affectionately known as "Daddy," plays the part of doorkeeper at a theater. His wife, portrayed by Mrs. Benson, thinks he is leading actor. The star is hurt and Daddy substitutes. This is exceptionally good and has a fine touch of pathos toward the close.

THE ALIBI (Imp), May 31.—A unique photplay, written by Clem Easton. The main incident has been used before, we believe, in fiction and pictures; the ashes on a lighted cigar proving that the hero was not assaulting the woman blackmailer. This is worked out in an entertaining way, with Wm. Gerwood and Violet Mersereau in the leads.

HEARTS AND CLUBS (Joker), May 31.—A comedy number, with Tom Walsh, Ernie Shield, Eddie Boland and Dolly Ohnet in the cast. The young husband starts home, but drops in for a game with friends, accumulates a jag and trouble follows. The humor of this is not strong and it makes only a fair offering.

TOO MANY CROOKS (Nestor), June 1.—A brick comedy number, by Al E. Christie, with Billie Rhodes, Jack Dillon and Lee Moran in the cast. The eloping couple are mistaken for a pair of crooks and made the victim of a wild chase over roof tops. A well-photographed number, with a number of amusing incidents in it.

THE FORCE OF EXAMPLE (Rex), June 1.—A combination of drama and humor, featuring Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips. The lover reads in a paper of a murder committed by a jealous dope fiend; he then dreams and goes through a similar experience. This is well-pictured, but the horrors of the nightmare are too strong and the humor accordingly suffers.

WHEN THEY WERE CO-EDS (Nestor), June 4.—An Al E Christie number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran in college environment. The former are students and the latter plays the snooping janitor. The action is full of youthful zest and the incidents are very amusing, even though most of them have been pictured before. The photography is very good.

THE JUDGMENT OF MEN (Victor), June 4.—This pitiful story, written by Wm. Addison Lathrop, strikes a poignant note. Mary Fuller is featured as a woman convict, sent to prison after trying to drown herself and baby, succeeding only in killing the child. She escapes, meets a little girl, and is recaptured while playing with her. Not a very pleasant subject, but admirably put on and contains considerable truth.

THE LOVER'S LUCKY PREDICAMENT (Joker), June 5.—A characteristic number, written by Clarence G. Badger, with Max Asher, Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and others in the cast. The grocery clerk lover captures Alfalfa Bill and wins a big reward, thereby winning the hand of the sheriff's daughter. This is fairly pleasing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

SHATTERED MEMORIES (Gold Seal), May 25.—A three-reel story of Civil War days, featuring Robert Leonard, Ella Hall and Harry Carter. A large cast participates and scenes are depicted before, during and after the war. The battle scenes are finally pictured, but occupy only a part of the second reel. The story itself is full of human sympathy; the hero is injured during the war, loses his memory, and does not meet his waiting sweetheart until late in life. Some of the makeups are overdone in the latter scenes. The story itself is tenderly sympathetic and has a note of real pathos in it.

A MODERN ENOCH ARDEN (Big "U"), May 30.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 919 of issue of May 8.

TONGUES OF FLAME (Universal Special), May 30.—No. 13 of "The Black Box" series. This continues the adventures of Quest and his party in New Mexico and Mexico, whither they went in search of Craig. All of the scenes are interesting, though some of the action is padded and does not greatly forward the plot. They are interesting chiefly as stirring incidents in themselves. Craig is finally made captive again but released on his promise to return to New York and confess everything. The two following instalments of this serial should prove very interesting.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND RELATIONS (Victor), May 31.—A two-reel comedy number, with Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby in the leads. The young married couple try boarding house life. These scenes are characteristic, but the dirty interior of the kitchen detracts from the humor. The later experiences in housekeeping when relatives of both descend upon them, are very amusing. This makes an excellent comedy number except for the kitchen scenes, in which some eliminations may be made.

UNDER THE CRESCENT, ADVENTURE NO. 1, "THE PURPLE IRIS" (Universal Gold Seal), June 1.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1271 issue of May 22.

THE SILENT COMMAND (Laemmle), June 2.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElvray on page 743 issue of May 1.

THE HEART OF CERISE (Rex), June 3.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1272 issue of May 22.

A LIFE IN THE BALANCE (Imp), June 4.—A two-reel number, written by Anthony Kelly, with King Baggot and Arline Pretty in the leading roles. The young widow is the daughter of the only physician in the village. Then comes the young doctor, whom she snubs. Later her father dies and her little girl becomes very ill. The young doctor insists on treating the child, bringing it safely through the crisis. The usual love ending results. This is naturally worked out and contains numerous sympathetic touches. It is not powerful, but makes an entertaining production.

THE SMUGGLER'S LASS (Bison), June 5.—A two-reel story, featuring Gene Gauntier and Jack J. Clark. The scenes are laid on the Irish coast and are extremely picturesque and attractive. The story itself is conventional and reiterates the familiar Irish romance, with the hero, the girl, the English soldiers and the informer as principal characters. The girl saves the hero and they set sail for America and freedom. This is not in any way new, but it is pictorially above the average and the plot is well constructed.

George DeCarlton

THAT George DeCarlton, the well known character actor and co-director, would become an actor became evident when he ran away from home at the age of thirteen with a travelling minstrel show. He became known throughout the country as "The Wonderful Boy Soprano." Mr. DeCarlton began his real stage career in Boston, Mass., where he joined a stock company and met with such success that he organized his own stock company under the name of DeCarlton Players. The popularity of this company was evidenced by its continued appearance at one theater in Boston for over eight years. Mr. DeCarlton next turned his attention to vaudeville and was one of the pioneers in presenting the legitimate drama on the vaudeville stage.

George DeCarlton.

About four years ago Mr. DeCarlton joined the Reliance Company under Director Edgar Lewis to play characters and in a short time was made his assistant. Since that time he has assisted Mr. Lewis in all his feature productions with the Fox Company, and has also supported such well known stars as William Farnum in "The Gilded Fool," "The Nigger," and "Samson," Dorothy Donnelly in "The Thief" and Davis Wall in "Captain Swift."

Edwina Robbins

EDWINA ROBBINS, a popular Vitagraph player of character parts, formerly known as Edwina Mercier, the auto girl of vaudeville, was born in Hoboken, N. J., January 18, 1886. Her father, Edmond Louis Karrer, is a descendant of one of seven brothers of one of the oldest families of Detroit, Mich., where he was born. His ancestors spelled their name Carr.

At the age of seven Miss Robbins practically began earning her own living, receiving $5 a week playing the summer resorts. Her first real professional appearance was with Weber and Fields in a performance given in aid of a well known charity. After, she appeared with her mother in vaudeville playing in old time sketches. This led to a continuous engagement extending over a period of fifteen years on the Keith Circuit, as the Auto Girl.

Edwina Robbins.

During the summer of 1914 Miss Robbins became interested in motion pictures and after a try out at the Vitagraph Studios entered into negotiations with the heads of the company for a position in the stock company. It is needless to state that she was successful, as her appearance in such popular Vitagraph photodramas as "The Win(k)some Widow," "Sonny Jim and the Valentine," "C. O. D.," "Postponed," "Crooky Scruggs," "Spades are Trumps," "The Turn of the Road" and many others, will attest. In the majority of the pictures for which Miss Robbins has posed, she has been cast for eccentric comedy parts, while as a matter of fact she prefers character parts of any description.

Doings at Los Angeles

THIS WEEK, after the siege of rain and clouds, the filmers rejoiced, not only in their work, but in their play, and there have been many little parties during the week. The Press Club here has been playing the host to the mainstays of the film industry, and between receptions and dinners for the men who make the pictures and the players, the life on the illuminated way has been quite strenuous.

Harry Leonardt, special western representative of the Fox Film Co., has departed for the middle west after establishing the Los Angeles office in temporary and then luxurious permanent headquarters. He will be gone for about thirty days, taking in Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle, and the other coast cities before returning here.

Fred C. Aitken, western agent for the General Film Co., has departed for Denver, after spending a few weeks at the capital.

Robert Henley, who was with the Imp Co. in the east, is in town and working at the Universal studios under the direction of Charles Giblyn. He was transferred here by Carl Laemmle, his change being made on account of eye trouble caused by overwork under the powerful electric lights in the eastern studio.

Douglas Gerrard gave a dinner last week at the Athletic Club in honor of many of his playmates and friends. He has become well known in local society, and he certainly entertained in fine style.

It seems that every week a new motorist is added to the long list of picture people who drive automobiles. It was found that Bob Daly was the only director at Universal City who did not own a car; so it was up to him to come across, which he did, much to the satisfaction of his fellow workers, and incidentally to himself.

Oscar A. C. Lund, who recently started work directing at the Big U city, and his company of players have started for the desert on a two weeks' mystery trip to get scenes for the picture they are doing, the name and nature of which is not known. They will go on to the Exposition City and then return to do the interiors.

Instead of investing in the conventional automobile, Miss Irene Hunt, of the Mutual, has bought a horse and named him after her director, Mr. Kelsey. She believes in outdoor life and takes this manner of enjoying the countryside.

Jane Bernoudy, champion horsewoman and fancy ropist, one of the best riders in the field, has bought a glistening new car and is now riding around the southland, talking to the machine, but it does not answer like a horse.

Going the old stunt of tying the Deadwood Dick detective to the flywheel in the mill one better, Jack McGowan ties Helen Holmes, Kalem's railroad girl, to the piston rod, and when the engine starts it will be good night for her, but fortunately and just at the right moment the hero comes along and cuts her bonds. The stunt is rather hazardous and ought to make even a railroader sit up and gasp.

J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes.

Eugene H. Allen, business manager for the Inceville studios, left hurriedly for New York this week to meet Messrs. Kessel and Bauman on business, the nature of which was not disclosed.

Many real Japanese players are being used at the Mutual this week in a picture being put on by Director Lloyd Ingraham. It is called "The Fox Woman" and is a tale of old Nippon. There are about fifteen well-known players who were formerly with Ince's Japanese company at the canyon studios where they appeared in Domino pictures. Teddy Samson and Elmer Clifton are the regular Mutual leading players in this piece.

At the annual rodeo held this year at Inceville some particularly exciting and thrilling stunts were staged, much to the amusement and satisfaction of several thousand people who treked out to the mountain studio to witness the wild west show. William S. Hart was the star of the day, doing his unusual western acting, supported by the entire outfit of the Inceville ranch. Three men who participated were injured, but fortunately not fatally. One man was trampled and at first it was thought that he was dead, but he had only a bumped head. Another cowpuncher was kicked, and still another suffered internal injuries when, riding three horses at once, he fell between them. George Blaisdell and Harry Leonardt were visitors and incidentally were given up for dead by Jay Hunt after the stage coach in which they had been riding turned turtle over a grade—at least until we saw them walking up the road. Mr. Leonhardt said he had a hunch to keep out of the picture, and after being ridden in the coach for a hundred feet or so he jumped out, telling the World man to follow. Shortly after the big coach turned over and rolled down an embankment.

J. Warren Kerrigan, who has been sick for the past three weeks, recovering from a minor operation, has returned to his mother's home in Hollywood where he will remain until he is able to go back to work at the Universal studios.

Carlyle Blackwell, who has been away for several days at a spring where bubbling mud takes out that tired feeling, will be back to work again soon at the Lasky studios.

Harold Lockwood drove down from Santa Barbara this week to participate in many social affairs among film folk. Since the opening of the summer season, many functions have been held at which photoplayers were present in the majority. He reports everything lively up at the Winged A studios.

Syd Chaplin, of the Keystone powerhouse, has been on the sick list for the past half week, suffering from an attack of nerves. Director Frank Griffin has also been under the weather, but is now back on the job, in the editorial rooms writing scripts for the films. Dave Morris also was named as a sufferer of spring fever, but only slightly.

Bud Chase, a Big U assistant director, working with W. C. Dowlan, was painfully injured in an automobile smashup on the Cahunga grade, near Universal city, this week. He will be back at work in a week or so.

Lillian Gish has returned to work at the Mutual after a short vacation in the east. As one player goes on a trip to the hills or the east, another comes back, and everyone gets their little diversion and all are happy.

Going down in old Mexico with his players, Henry Woodruff, Tsura Aoki and Rhea Mitchell, Director Charles Swickard will film scenes for some parts of the big feature, "The Beckoning Flame," which is an Oriental story. They are going to Tia Juana, where they used to stage all those bloody bull fights, and where there is a house exactly suited to the call of the script.

John Emerson, of Charles Frohman fame, who has joined the Mutual, is to start directing immediately, his first picture to be "Old Heidelberg." Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid will be featured stars. Karl Formes, Jr., will also be in the cast, as will another draft of Mutual Teutons.

Wallace MacDonald, who was blinded for several days by overwork under the glare of the flaming arcs at the American studios, is off for San Francisco on a two weeks' vacation trip, necessitated by the eye trouble. He postals us that while the scenery is fine, the train rocks horribly, but that he expects to see the exposition in full.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

Those Instructive Topicals.

THE TIME has surely come when any moving picture exhibition is lacking in completeness, and the exhibitor deficient in progressive ideas which does not consistently and regularly use the various topicals now at hand. Indeed a sense of justice to all patrons of picture houses demands that they be given the valuable help found in these interesting and instructive films; it seems that to fail to use them is a dereliction of a plain and simple duty. To young people especially these pictures are a part of their very educational existence, the deprivation of which is closely allied to a crime.

In spite of all this, there are sadly too many picture houses that have not yet risen from the low ruts of five years ago; the topical film to them is unattractive because of its superiority; such places do not deserve encouraging, they are lacking in that true spirit which belongs to those to whom the moving picture is in every sense valuable. From the time that Pathe's weekly was first introduced until today there has never been a moment when they lacked interest or instruction. Now that we have several additional makes including the Hearst-Selig there is no shadow of reason for their omission from any program that is to be classed as good. The crowding of daily events is always in its natural course a sufficient assurance of compelling interest; how much more therefore these days when the whole world is moving at a pace which even the film cannot keep up with. If in a city there is room for a dozen different newspapers, the topical "two-a-week" is little enough to expect. Never was the whole world vibrating with interest as it is today. In the Far East national events and wars, and in the Far West great expositions revealing the triumphs of peace and commerce. Wherever the moving picture goes these topicals should follow as a necessary component part, the absence of which means not only incompleteness but a loss. One of the hardest things read of in the daily press during these times of stress is the narrow mindedness of many people. It would seem that if twenty years ago the enlightening powers of the topical pictures could have been used, the educational results might have made many a present day disaster impossible. It is no exaggeration to say that the topical films is the "liberty enlightening the world" by such a general diffusion of knowledge.

Now that it is a conceded fact that children universally see the pictures, it should also be a fact that whatever other pictures they see the topicals should be first—indeed it will do no harm but rather good to have them as common and general as the daily newspapers. These impressions have been deepened upon the writer's mind during the last week by the recent films shown in New York which were illustrative of the great American fleet; the President and government officials, the great parades on land and sea, the greater review and mightly illuminations.

Pictures of the expositions in the West with its myriad attractions and their own attractiveness. Views from various parts of Europe in peace, commerce and war. Events at home of every kind, from news events, fun and frolic to accident and disaster. Schools observing May Day festivals, college sports, boy scouts, campfire girls, anything and everything from everywhere with interest, instruction and intelligent profit in great abundance. Poor indeed are they who are deprived of the scenes which can be brought to their very doors. He who can provide them and does not robs his neighbors of privileges and opportunities which are his just due.

Enlightenment on current events is acknowledged as one of the greatest aids to every day education. Among children this is important. They cannot be consistent newspaper readers, yet too often they are improperly fed by the too prominent sensationalism which captivates and misleads them. The topical picture is true, its news-power marvelously condensed, the knowledge conveyed is wide and being all picture is indelibly impressed on the memory. That which is not gathered up by this new news agency is of little worth—that which is gathered grows in importance. One of the greatest gains yet to come to the success of educational kinematography is the daily topical, under authoritative control and perhaps free in the schools. The postal service made world communication possible, the telegraph annihilated distance, the telephone brought instant results; the picture uses them all and places before the eye in its larger measure that which suffered from the limitations of the ear. Push the topicals.

Moving Pictures, Magistrates and Children.

Times were when, clothed with judicial power, magistrates used their authority to denounce moving pictures in general because of occasional evils resulting therefrom in their misuse. Today, however, because educationalism in the pictures has prevailed, magistrates are lauding them as deterrents of juvenile and even adult crime, in addition to their providing other opportunities for the better use of the proclivities of a vast number of people.

This change in magisterial language is notable when recently a New York City magistrate said: "The moving pictures are causing a decrease in crime, not especially because they expose crime and its evils, but because as the chief amusement of the working classes they provide a superior attraction and amusement which counteracts the possibilities of frequent evils."

From Memphis, Tenn., comes the welcome news that the school authorities gave a half holiday to allow their thousands of children to see special and useful pictures.

This is an official act many districts may profitably follow. The long troublesome question of the pictures and the children has been solved by the educational features which have removed all debatable questions and difficulties. The way is now everywhere cleared for the pictures and the children to become mutually profitable. Already certain results are evident, not only the uplift from evil tendencies which the pictures have driven away, but education itself is feeling the helpful force, the class-room notices the improvements, the sum total of school work is improved, the morale of the scholars finer and the range of their knowledge widened to surprisingly larger proportions.

A COPYRIGHT DECISION.

The protection afforded by a copyright on a drama or moving picture play does not prevent others from basing a production on the same theme the United States Circuit Court of Appeals has just decided in exonerating David Belasco of the charge of plagiarism in producing "The Case of Becky."

The drama, which was written by William J. Locke, was based on the subject of dual personality as depicted in scientific books, including Dr. Morton Prince's writings. Miss Aurelia Bachman wrote a play about the same time, which she styled "Estelle," treating with the same subject. She submitted the manuscript of her play to Belasco, but meanwhile Locke was writing a play along similar lines.

"The copyright statutes do not deprive other persons to whom the same situation naturally presents itself from presenting it in a play provided the idea is not taken from the copyrighted play," concluded the court.

The decision is of interest to moving picture producers and playwrights, as it is, of course, applicable to photoplays.

DIRECTOR CAPELLANI'S FAMILY ARRIVE FROM FRANCE.

The news of the Lusitania tragedy brought a wave of personal horror to the many folks engaged at the World Film studios, as the wife and family of Albert Capellani, the new French director now with the World Film, were en route to America. They were on the Rochambeau, which left France only a day or so before the Lusitania sank, and everyone was wondering if the French liner had met with any submarines. The family arrived safely on Tuesday.

Motion Picture Laws*

MICHIGAN.

Whatever regulations exist in the state of Michigan may be found in the Fire Marshal Law of 1913. The text of this law is as follows:

Provided, however, that a motor-driven machine of a type expressly designed for driving by electric motor and approved by the state fire marshal, may be installed;

(d) No films shall be exposed in the booth at the same time, other than the one film in process of transfer to or from the machine or from the upper to lower magazine, or in process of rewinding. A separate metal case, made without solder, shall be provided for each film when the same is not in the magazine or in process of rewinding, said film to be kept in these cases. No material of a combustible nature shall be stored within any booth except the films needed for one day's operation;

(e) Arc lamp must be controlled by double pole switch and enclosed fuse cut-out within easy reach of operator;

Where balconies or galleries are used by the audience, one exit from this point to the street or alley must be provided for each two hundred seats or fractional part thereof installed. For rooms one hundred feet or less in length, the main entrance may be considered as one exit and a second exit must be provided at the opposite end of the room and open upon a public street, alley or other open, unoccupied space having unobstructed access to a street or alley.

Exit doors must open outward and shall not be locked when the building is open to the public, and where only one exit in addition the main entrance, is provided, said exit shall be not less than six feet wide and seven feet high, and in any case must not be less than three feet wide and seven feet high. Section 6. Each exit must be marked by means of an illuminated red sign, containing the word "Exit" in four inch white letters easily discernible by the audience at any time during the performance. Lights used in marking exit or lighting passageways, stairways or inclines leading from them, shall not depend upon or be controlled by switches or fuses located in room, compartment or booth containing moving picture machines, but shall be placed in easy access in front of house.

Section 7. All seats occupied by the audience shall be fixed and immovable except in logies and boxes. Not more than seven seats shall be in any one row opening upon but one main aisle, and not more than fourteen seats shall be in any one row opening upon two main aisles: Provided, however, That any auditoriums or buildings seating two thousand or more and having satisfactory exits on two sides, permission may be given by the state fire marshal for temporary or removable seating on the first or ground floor only.

Section 8. No moving picture show or theater showing moving pictures shall hereafter be installed in any building which has any roomers or families living directly over the theater or auditorium proper.

Section 9. All aisles and space in rear of seats and exits must at all times be kept clear and unobstructed during performances.

Section 10. Neither smoking nor the keep nor use of matches shall be permitted in any booth, room, compartment or enclosure where a motion picture machine is installed.

Section 11. No person shall operate any motion picture machine in this state unless he shall not be less than eighteen years of age and the state fire marshal whenever he shall deem it necessary may examine any operator of a moving picture machine as to his fitness to operate such machine and if he shall find any such operator incompetent, then such operator shall not be permitted to operate any such machine in this state until such incompetency shall have been removed.

Section 12. Whenever the state fire marshal or his deputies or assistants shall find upon an investigation or examination, that any of the provisions of this act have been violated after due notice given, then he shall communicate the fact of such violation together with any evidence he may have to the prosecuting attorney of the county in which such violation has occurred, and it shall thereupon be the duty of such prosecuting attorney to cause the arrest and prosecution of the person or persons so violating.

Section 15. Every motion picture show, theater, or any other amusement place in the state of Michigan showing motion pictures using celluloid films shall be inspected by the state marshal, his deputy or assistant state fire marshal not less than twice each year. The owner of a moving picture show, theater or other amusement place showing motion pictures using celluloid films shall pay to the state treasurer for each inspection the sum of ten dollars and all the money so paid shall be credited to the state fire marshal fund for use of fire marshal department.

Section 16. Whenever the state fire marshal by himself or deputies shall find by an inspection that any motion picture show is being conducted in accordance with the provisions of this law he shall issue the owner thereof his official receipt or license to continue such operations until such motion picture show shall be next inspected: Provided, however, that such license shall not be issued until said owner shall have paid the inspection fee herein provided to the state treasurer.

Section 17. Said official inspection receipt shall be posted in a conspicuous place where it can be readily seen by the public.

Section 18. Any owner or manager of any moving picture show or theater showing moving pictures violating any of the provisions of this act and who shall be convicted thereof, or who shall plead guilty to any complaint for the violation thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars and costs of prosecution, or if such fine be not paid then by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding ten days; for the second offense, he shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and cost of prosecution, for each subsequent offense he shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and cost of prosecution, or by imprisonment in the county jail or in the Detroit house of correction for a period not exceeding thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Pictures in Costa Rica

By R. Mitchell Paw.

HERE I AM at San Jose and have a twelve-day wait in front of me. The Pacific Mail steamer "Newport" does not call at Punta Arenas, Pacific port of Costa Rica. Personally unacquainted with Punta Arenas, having only "heard" of its fierce heat, I decided to spend the intervening days at the capital, a city of thirty odd thousand inhabitants, and one which, if at present decidedly inactive commercially, has a wonderful climate.

One of Costa Rica's chief industries, the growth and export of coffee, has been seriously crippled by the great conflict, Europe being the market; and it was not until a few days ago that the United Fruit Co. gave notice of a continuation of haulage of the bean.

It is practically impossible to secure gold currency, and those doing a foreign business cannot, save at a ruinous rate of exchange, secure gold with which to meet their outstanding accounts. As Senor Julio Marquez, of the Variety theater, aptly remarked, "What use are colones when one cannot exchange them for gold?"

The first two days after arrival the writer spent in seeing the various places of interest: the different parks where three times a week there is music from 8 to 9:30 p. m., the National Museum with its excellent collection of reptiles and birds, an auto drive through the outskirts, and last, but decidedly not least, the National theater.

The National Theater.

This is a magnificent edifice, unfortunately closed the greater part of the year as the theatergoing public itself cannot support it. Formerly the government secured good companies by giving a liberal guarantee; but for some years now the depleted condition of the treasury has rendered this impossible, with the consequence that only at long intervals are the "Josefinas," as are termed the people of San Jose, favored with opera. The National cost about three million colones at a time when exchange was 2.15 colones for an American dollar, which made this about $1,400,000; and, though not overly large nor unusually imposing as to exterior, the interior arrangement and decorations are in the first instance excellent and the latter in marvellous good taste, no artistic detail being overlooked in the effort for refined luxury.

The Variety.

An interview with Senor Julio Marquez, of the Variety, "combined vaudeville and pictures," showed the moving picture industry of this town to be in a sad plight, the Variety, and it may be assumed the other houses also, barely paying expenses.

The now usual cry of hard times, "la guerra," etc., is put forth; and, though with no desire to condemn, in the humble opinion of the writer other causes capable of rectification are largely responsible for the scant box office receipts. Witnessing several screen portrayals at the Variety, the films were only fairly good and not new, and, generally speaking, there was a lack of "punch" in the entire performance. Projection nothing to speak of and long waits of a blank screen between acts found an audience noticeably without enthusiasm.

This building seats about seven hundred and fifty persons; film is mostly Pathe product, and program is changed daily, with matinees on Sundays and feast days, of which there are many throughout the year; prices per "tanda" or show: gallery, 20 cents—chairs, 55 cents; boxes of three seats, $2.15—of four, $2.70, and of six, $3.80, Costa Rican money, with exchange just now at nearly three colones for our American dollar. This building and equipment originally cost seventy-five thousand colones, $25,000.

Teatro Roig.

My next visit was to the Teatro Roig, a new theater, as yet unfinished to the extent of no paint and scaffolding still standing in many parts of the interior. Doors were open, however, for business, with the laudable intention, I presume, of making box office receipts pay for its completion. The picture, an eight-part Pasquali drama, "The Terrible Effects of Morphine," showed to a fair house; but here again there were the long waits between acts. In this film of rather quiet action the interest more or less reaches a climax at the end of each reel, and these waits were provoking, not to put it stronger.

Half a Show for Your Money.

There were two performances, the first from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., and the second from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m.; and a scheme, which might or might not be a money-getter, was put into practice, namely, that of showing a little more than half of the picture during first "tanda" with a "To be continued in the Second Show" thrown on screen at close, necessitating a second visit to the ticket office of those unwise ones, including the writer, who had not originally purchased coupons for both "tandas."

There was plenty of time, however, to purchase coupons and refreshments also next door ere again the gong rang, lights were out, the second part on the screen. This scheme is typical of Latin-American exhibition, and I am afraid an exhibitor would have a hard time putting it over in the States. A weak and ancient comedy picture concluded the entertainment at the Roig, and one accustomed to the modern American screen portrayal experienced a decided sense of dissatisfaction.

The Actualidades.

At the Actualidades, also a new and clean, though small, picture house, there was the best picture so far seen in San Jose by the writer, titled "La Novia del Muerte," or "The Sweetheart of Death," a well-acted drama and well put on the screen. The remaining picture house, El Moderno, I have yet to visit.

In summing up this city in so far as the picture business is concerned, there, "under existing conditions any way," seem to be too many houses for the picture-going population, the percentage of the total city population thereof being far smaller than would be the case in the States, though, as I stated above, other causes are more than likely responsible that the percentage of screen enthusiasts has not been doubled. Clever advertising of up-to-date film, good projection and an elimination of waits between acts would go far towards filling the houses, even in these hard times. At present, those who attend make all preparations as if for a theatrical performance, instead of feeling as though they could drop into a picture house at any hour and in any attire to pass a pleasant and sometimes highly educational hour. Moving pictures, the most democratic of amusements, are rather spoiled by so much formality, and here's hoping that some enterprising exhibitor will come in and liven things up a bit.

Adele Lane

ADELE LANE, the very popular emotional leading woman, who is being featured at the Universal under the direction of Burton King, was born in New York and started to carve her own way in life, when at six years of age she played Edith in "Edith's Burglar." From that time to this she has gone steadily upwards. "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Eva" and other child parts followed until at the age of fifteen she made her appearance as a leading lady, a position she never relinquished afterwards. A long course of repertoire and stock led to New York again and she appeared in various plays under Sullivan, Harrison and Woods, Brady and other managers. She was featured in "Eben Holden" and was the Jonquil in "Sky Farm."

Adele Lane.

Vaudeville claimed her for many months and she appeared with Mamie Seligman, Aubrey Boucicault, Cecelia Loftus and Joe Welch. For a long time Miss Lane was the Countess Dagmar in the Western Graustark Company and when a wire came from Lubin with a good offer for motion picture work, she took it gladly in order to settle down for awhile. For nearly two years she was identified with the Lubin pictures and then joined Seligs where she remained for more than a year and a half.

Adele Lane is petite, but her work is very powerful, she is retiring and modest and a terrifically hard worker and puts her whole being into her presentation.

E. R. Pearson

E. R. PEARSON, manager of the Kansas City branch of the V.-L.-S.-E., is a veteran film man who, through four years' experience with the General Film Company, is thoroughly acquainted with the past performances of "The Big Four."

Mr. Pearson joined the General Film Company at Omaha as assistant manager, in February, 1911. In 1912 he was appointed manager, remaining there until June, 1914, at which time he resigned and accepted the management of the Omaha branch of the Eclectic, later called Pathe. Just previous to accepting his present position Mr. Pearson devoted his time to the booking of special features.

E. R. Pearson.

"In this business there is certain to be a 'to-morrow,'" says Mr. Pearson, "and he who looks into that to-morrow will find practically certain proof of the success of the V.-L.-S.-E."

"No industry can stand still. It must either advance or retreat. V.-L.-S.-E. represents the greatest advance that has been taken since the inception of the business. The recognized four best equipped, most progressive manufacturers, have seen fit to endow an institution with their most cherished asset, namely their respective firm names, indicating a guarantee of their best efforts and individual attention.

"This institution is the culmination of the experiences varied and many that they have severally had in the past. The V.-L.-S.-E. is a market place where the 'business man' exhibitor will be proud to say he secures his film."

Josephine Earle

JOSEPHINE EARLE is the latest recruit from the legitimate stage to the Vitagraph Company. Miss Earle is remembered for her work in the romantic role of "Beauty" in H. W. Savage's "Everywoman" company and as prima donna in her own act in vaudeville. She had been doing light comedy roles when her director, Wm. J. Humphreys, asked her to create the part of "Jennie the Gangster," a "vampire" role in the "Return of Maurice Donnelly," a Broadway Star Feature. Miss Earle was horrified and insisted that she could not play a part so foreign to her nature, but Mr Humphreys claimed she could, and, as she had great faith in her clever director, she at last consented to try it. When made up her associates hardly recognized her. Mr. Humphreys had a strenuous time trying to make Miss Earle act real "tough," but the ultimate result was that she scored tremendously in the part.

Josephine Earle.

Miss Earle is quite modest and insists that most of the credit should go to her director, for she says: "I never thought I could do those 'vampire' roles. Now I would rather do them; only I hope they will be more refined in the future. It is indeed interesting to sit in the audience and listen to the horrified comments of those around me, for it is a pleasure to be able to lose one's identity in a role of that kind.

Miss Earle is a lover of outdoor sports, a finished dancer and has won many cups. She drives her own car, and if it wasn't for her winning smile she would be arrested many times for speeding.

Famous Players Secure Pauline Frederick

Star of "The Eternal City" Will Be Presented in Elaborate Photoproductions of "Zaza," "Sold" and "Bella Donna."

FOLLOWING her personal triumph in her first screen characterization as Donna Roma in "The Eternal City," now completing its engagement at the Astor Theater, New York, the Famous Players Film Co. has secured the exclusive film services of Pauline Frederick for a number of years. Under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who directed "The Eternal City," Miss Frederick will shortly go to Egypt for a mammoth photoproduction, in its original environment, of Robert Hichen's famous novel and play, "Bella Donna," in which Nazimova won her first great American triumph. She will also shortly be presented in a detailed film version of Henri Bernstein's emotional drama, "Sold," to be followed by a comprehensive picturization of the international stage triumph, "Zaza."

Pauline Frederick.

In the fascinating role of "Bella Donna," Pauline Frederick should find ideal screen expression of her emotional talents. With the thrilling story itself, the exotic atmosphere of Egypt and the desert, the magic of the mysterious and sinuous Nile so strangely like the dangerously beautiful and alluring heroine, "Bella Donna," promises much that is valuable as a photoplay, and should even surpass the pictorial and dramatic qualities of "The Eternal City."

Through her interpretations of "Bella Donna," "Zaza," and the central character of "Sold," together with the future subjects to be selected for her by the Famous Players, Pauline Frederick will unquestionably maintain the distinction she has won through her portrayal of "Donna Roma" in "The Eternal City" as one of the foremost emotional artistes of the screen.

"THE ORDEAL" WINS.

WILL LECTURE ON "PROHIBITION."

Arthur Maitland, long identified with the legitimate stage, has entered the booking branch of the feature film business. His initial enterprise will be the exploitation and exhibition of "Prohibition," the six-reel subject being sold by the Prohibition Film Corporation at 220 West 42d street, New York City. Mr. Maitland closed the deal for the state rights of Michigan on the picture with Robt. T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corporation, at the Lambs' Club last week. Assisting Mr. Maitland will be Henry E. Weaver, a widely known theatrical manager.

In addition to booking the picture in Michigan theaters, Mr. Maitland expects to make arrangements with the Ford Motor Company, the Reo Automobile Company, and other Michigan industrial organizations to lecture on the picture before the employees of the respective plants.

The Art of Exhibition

What Rothapfel Says on the Scheme of Decoration—Splendid Theories Translated into Practice—"Musical Travelogues."

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHEN RECENTLY the curtain went up for the first big night performance in the Strand, the stage seemed to be in semi-darkness, the color effect reminding one of the "embrowned shadows of the earth, when the day is departing." Gradually the light grew stronger and at last it blazed upon the setting like the sun at noon. Gasps of delight and wonder broke from every part of the audience in the house, for there was revealed to them a setting of supreme beauty and splendor. The setting suggested the interior of a Greek temple, marble-like pillars supported an airy graceful roof while, to the right and to the left, one looked out from the sides of the temple upon hazy landscapes which made one think of woodland and of meadows. The green garlands wound about the top of the pillars, the profusion of flowers in front of the temple, the harmony which the Greek type of architecture suggests even in its ruins—all combined to make a noble and striking habitation for the screen. The tribute of the audience was entirely spontaneous. It was the expression of a child at the sight of a picture which takes the eye by storm. The incident suggested to me the next topic of my talk with the creator of this marvel, General Director Rothapfel. No man I knew anything about seemed more competent to speak on the theme of "Decoration."

The Importance of Decoration.

"We have not the time to exhaust the theme of 'Decoration'," said Rothapfel, when he was asked to give his views and his experience on the subject. "Even if I could give a day and more than a day to it I could not do it justice in all its various details. It oftens happens that the people who have the best ideas of stage decoration are utterly without any knowledge of the peculiar needs of the exhibitor. The scheme of decoration, whether it is to be applied to a small or to a large theater, must proceed from one harmonious idea; I mean the decorator must have one uniform design in mind. So many theaters or rather moving picture houses are decorated just with a vague desire to make things look pretty. I design all my decorations with the utmost care. There are two guiding motives in choosing and designing my decorations: In the first place I want to add to the atmosphere, of which decoration is an essential part and in the second place I want the decoration generally and the decoration of the stage or screen especially to bring out the photographic values of the projected picture. Obviously I cannot lay down any hard and fast rules in this respect, but it is safe and advisable to make your decorations harmoniously neutral so that nothing in your setting or in your auditorium will take away from the focus upon which all attention must be centered: The center of the screen. I object to brackets and side-lights, the light should always come from overhead, where its true source is to be found. In connection with this let me say there is no need of a dark theater. The subject of lighting is correlated to decoration and these few words on lighting are, I feel, quite in their place here. The dark theater is really a hindrance to projection. I helped to abolish the completely dark house. The house with the proper amount of light is far less trying to the eyes, the right diffusion of light in the theater makes the theater itself seem much larger, cleaner and more restful.

In Decorating Follow Nature.

A safe rule to follow in the setting for the decoration of your screen which is really the altar of our art is an imitation of Nature. One cannot go wrong in following this rule. We speak of the flowered fields and meadows as the rich carpet of Nature, let the floor of your setting be such a variegated carpet; one can do marvels with plants and flowers. Your ceiling had best be in the natural color of the sky, but care must be taken not to have it too light as it might easily appear too cold and thus lose its influence in the general scheme of decoration. Here I must again allude to lighting as an aid to decoration. Light in its varying moods and degrees of intensity will follow the drama or whatever you have on the screen and greatly enhance the effect if you know how to apply and handle it. It will do much the same for your music. Take a tense moment in a drama. As the climax is approaching let your light come up slowly and when the tenseness is relieved and you know your audience is satisfied with the solution increase your light and wind up with all the light you can muster. In music great brilliancy of light at the finale is often wonderfully effective with your audience. I decorate my stage with such colors as will best lend themselves to light effects; it is impossible to narrowly define color values in this connection; much must always depend on individual taste. No one should ever be entrusted with the decoration of a motion picture theater unless he or she is a person of artistic temperament with a thorough knowledge of the value of colors. I know theaters have been decorated, say, in red and gold or in ivory or gold just because somebody else decorated his theater that way but that it is a haphazard way of doing things. Each theater must be decorated in the light of its own particular needs. Say, for instance, there is one theater surrounded by buildings on all sides and there is another theater with plenty of vacant space around it. The scheme of decoration for the one must be entirely unsuitable to the other."

A Musical Travelogue.

Speaking of the setting which I attempted to describe in the introduction of this article, Mr. Rothapfel called attention to the fact that it afforded great scope for changes without entailing much effort. The two backdrops, now showing landscapes, may easily be varied, they might be used in a musical travelogue.

"A musical travelogue?" I queried somewhat surprised.

"Exactly what I said," repeated Rothapfel. "Imagine the orchestra playing a Swiss melody or an Italian medley or some Oriental strain. Scenes representing the countries from which the music comes may be shown in the backdrops to the surprise and delight of the audience. I may change these drops into a huge snowcapped mountain or into a lighthouse or a pastoral scene. I filter the light into my Greek temple through transparencies and the source of the light is from outside of the set as it should be. I am now speaking of the screen while it is covered. It ought in this condition to represent a window. The two side openings may be used to create atmosphere. When the picture is thrown on the screen or if you want me to continue my comparison when the window is opened the side-openings may be slowly darkened which greatly heightens the illusion of a huge window being opened, through which the audience may gaze upon the everlasting human procession and all the wonders of the world. At the same time, it is possible upon occasion, and in order to secure a special effect, to use the screen and the two side openings simultaneously, but unless the exhibitor is very sure of his ground and has thoroughly tried out the effect he wishes to produce, I would advise him to keep away from such experiments. Here the line which divides the sublime from the ridiculous is especially thin and dangerous. A false step might ruin his whole program.

What enters into the Scheme of Decoration.

"And let me, in connection with this important topic, say to you that everything in and about your theater, animate and inanimate, contributes directly or indirectly to your scheme of decoration. The uniforms of the attaches and every bit of color in the theater must be considered as bearing upon your general scheme. Nothing is more important than the decorative plan of your lobby. Here I feel I am entering upon a subject which deserves to be dealt with in a chapter by itself. Let us make it the topic of our next talk on the science of exhibition."

Since writing these lines, the writer has been in most of the principal motion picture houses of the East. I will not say that they imitate the Strand but there is no question that the inspiration for improved methods of presentation has come from the example of the managing director of the Strand. This refers to everything, from the balancing of the program to the minutest details of projection.

PHOTOPLAYERS DINE.

On the evening of Thursday, May 13, many of the men who were of the membership of the late Photoplayers' Club assembled at one of the downtown restaurants for dinner. The coming of the actors had been announced, and as a result there was a crush and a great many were turned away. Later there was an impromptu entertainment, at which Henry Walthall acted as master of ceremonies. Charles Chaplin led the orchestra for two numbers. There was laughter as he began, but very shortly it was discovered he really was leading; there was hearty applause for him. The other entertainers were Charles Murray, Truly Shattuck, Roscoe Arbuckle, Martha Golding, Porter Strong, Ruth Roland, Julian Eltinge, Victor Moore, Harry Gribon, Leo White and Polly Moran. It was a great night.

Court Holds Up Picture

Sustains Allegation That the Rights Were Obtained from Wrong Source.

IT BEHOOVES motion picture producers to exercise greater care in obtaining rights to dramatized novels for the purpose of producing photo plays as the result of a decision just rendered by Judge Hunt of the United States District Court invalidating the Broadway Picture Producing Company's film rights to "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

The Broadway company secured the film rights to the play through a broker, Frank Henry Rice, who represented himself as the authorized agent of Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers of the novel written by John Fox, Jr., and dramatized by Klaw & Erlanger. It developed, however, from the testimony presented at the trial that Rice had conducted his negotiations with employees of the publishing house who were not vested with authority to dispose of the motion picture rights of any books

"My view is that the Broadway Picture Producing Company was dealing with Rice claiming to be an agent. It was bound, therefore, to ascertain what authority the assumed agent had and how far it extended. One dealing with another as an agent deals with him at his risk. It is incumbent upon the party so dealing to find out whether the agent has authority to bind his principal as he assumes to do in the contract upon which the parties enter," declared Judge Hunt. "As Scribner's Sons did nothing to mislead the Broadway Company it should not be held that there was a duty to inform the Broadway Company of facts which the Broadway Company should have ascertained for itself."

The defense contended that the assignment of the dramatic rights to the novel by the publishers and author of the work to Klaw & Erlanger was limited to the production of a play on the stage with living and speaking performers and did not cover film rights, but Judge Hunt did not comment specificially on this point in the decision.

Judge Hunt concluded the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree enjoining the defendants from manufacturing or selling films of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and an accounting.

New Players for MinA

FOUR important additions to the West Coast producing force of MinA Films were made last week by the engagement of Miss Goldie Colwell, Louis Fitzroy, George Ovey and Jefferson Osbourne to appear in forthcoming MinA releases.

Miss Colwell has been with Selig's Western company at Glendale, Cal., for many months and comes to MinA Films with a record of some exceptionally fine picture work, particularly in the serial "The Adventures of Kathlyn." She will play feminine leads in MinA productions.

Goldie Colwell.

Louis Fitzroy served with the Nestor-Universal for many years and is very well known. He is a member of one of the early Nestor companies, as was Jefferson Osbourne who, besides, has appeared in features of the Bosworth company and other organizations. George Ovey headed his own company in the hey-dey of melodrama, but for the past three years has been engaged in picture work with different Coast companies.

The release in which these new players make their debut under the MinA banner is "Life's Mysteries." It is directed by Milton Fahrney and will be released June 3 on the licensed program.

GOLDSTEIN BROS. BUILDING BIG THEATER.

The Strand, a modern 1,400-seat theater, is being erected at Hampton Beach, N. H., by the Goldstein Bros., of Springfield, Mass., owners of the Broadway theater in that city. This concern has controlled the amusements at Hampton Beach for the past number of years.

Mexican Film Conditions

Taxes Almost Confiscatory—Only the Hope of Peace Encourages Exhibitors to Continue Business.

By M. M. Lindheim.

"WHATEVER taxes can be collected are assessed; were it not for our expectations of political change and a long period of peace we would not continue to maintain our cinematograph establishment."

The manager of the largest exclusive motion picture theater on the Mexican Northern border thus plainly and forcefully expressed his opinion and the view of his colleagues in the film trade on May 12 in the lobby of his theater in Piedras Negras, Coahuila, Mexico. Our talk embraced many subjects, among them being the development of the film industry. We spoke of the former great Mexican exchanges, Martinez, Pathe, et al, and the film service they had furnished, varying in length from fifty to several hundred meters. I finally inquired concerning the present relations between government and industry. "Sr. C——," I asked, "how much is the Villista municipal tax on your theater? On what is it based?"

The impresario added to his former reply: "Two hundred and fifty dollars a week is our present tax, yet the officials are not satisfied. They are greedy for anything that looks good; they come here and see the people, then go away and raise our tax."

"The current rate of exchange on the Villa peso (dollar)," he continued, "is about four and one-half cents and present prospects indicate an even greater decrease in value. Our price of admission is seventy-five cents for adults and twenty-five cents for children. Think of it! The entrance cost in gold (American money) is only a trifle more than three cents and for the little ones about one cent."

Before the revolution, theaters frequently used from two to four thousand meters of film each night; now they exhibit about thirteen hundred, four reels.

"Consider, my friend, what it cost us for film service. We must pay the tolls of the bridge, express charges, drayage and, of course, the rental for film. Our film supply costs us about three thousand, five hundred dollars (Villa money) per month."

I inquired concerning another large theater and was informed that its losses were too great to be sustained. In Juarez, Piedras Negras and Matamoras shows are given each night, but at best the other towns have only spasmodic exhibitions. In Northern Mexico—everywhere—the hands of progress struggle and strive feebly. From Tamaulipas to Sonora men are engaged in the work of destruction. Life has no value save its earthly possessions—the rule of political despotism and military confiscation prevails.

Soldiers are to be seen everywhere, some loitering, others slouching about with their guns conspicuously in evidence. Many civilians, too, go armed; automatics are suspended from their waists and long knives are thrust in their boot-tops or leggins.

A "tanda," or intermission, was in progress, so we strolled through the theater to the operating booth and there compared the old Pathe projectors with the lately installed Simplex models.

LADY MACKENZIE PICTURES AT LYCEUM.

Lady Grace Mackenzie, hailed at a recent dinner of leading American followers of big game at Delmonico's as "The foremost woman hunter of the world," has taken the Lyceum theater for the purpose of giving her first public showing of her thrilling lion, rhinoceros and elephant hunts in the form of moving pictures, with which she has just returned after a long and successful expedition in East Africa. The modern Diana is the first person to invade the jungle and return with at least one specimen of every known species of big game in the district. In addition to those she brought down with her own rifle, she captured numerous cubs and transported them to this country and brought back with her four miles of moving picture film. These were obtained at a cost of more than $400,000.

It is Lady Mackenzie's boast that her pictures, unlike all other so-called big game motography, are not only educational pictures of the wild beasts of the jungle in their native state, but that they show in most exciting manner the real action of some of the most desperate hunts after ferocious animals. The performances will consist of a two-hour-and-a-half entertainment, accompanied by a lecture, and will be introduced in a novel manner, which will be in the nature of a surprise. The pictures will be shown twice daily, at 2:30 and 8:30, beginning with the evening performance on Monday, June 7.

New Player With Metro

THE recent engagement of the Metro Pictures Corporation, through its central officers and the various producers, consist of five stellar actors and actresses whose appearance under the Metro banner will be the first in important screen productions.

Emmet Corrigan, last seen in "The Money Makers" at the Booth Theater, will be seen in the Popular Plays and Players production of "Greater Love Hath No Man" to be picturized from the novel by Frank L. Packard and released through Metro early in June. A special cast of players who have been associated with Mr. Corrigan in his various stage successes will be used in screen work in his support.

Emmet Corrigan.

Jane Grey.

Martha Hedman, who is now working in the production of another well known feature producer, becomes a permanent Metro star following the completion of the work now going forward. Just what production Metro will offer Miss Hedman in, first, is not yet known, but General Manager Rowland stated that she would, in all probability, be seen in several of the Charles Frohman plays of which Metro controls many.

Edward Connelly, formerly seen in "Marsa Covington" on the spoken stage, will be seen in a screenization of that play under the B. A. Rolfe trade mark. Work is now proceeding at the new Rolfe studio, West 35th Street and when the interiors are completed, the company will journey to St. Louis where the river scenes will be made.

Ethel Barrymore is to be seen in the production she last appeared in at the Empire Theater, "The Shadow," in which she is now appearing at the Illinois Theater, Chicago. Miss Barrymore will appear, also, under the Rolfe banner.

Work on "The Right of Way," Sir Gilbert Parker's famous dramatic success, is rapidly going on at the Rolfe studios, 61st Street and Broadway, with William Faversham in the principal role, supported by Jane Grey, the prominent stage star.

Olga Petrova in one of her former stage successes, will be one of the forthcoming Metro releases during the next six weeks.

CONCENTRATES IN COLUMBUS.

The Columbus Theater Equipment Co. has withdrawn its branch store from Cincinnati and has combined it with the store at Columbus, Ohio. Leo E. Dwyer, general manager of the company, states that in the future all of their time and attention will be concentrated on their home office at Columbus, where the company is enjoying a prosperous business through Ohio and the central states.

FOX TO HAVE COAST PLANT.

Before leaving Los Angeles on May 26, Winfield R. Sheehan of the Fox Film Company announced that plans were under way to establish the producing forces of his company on the coast by next fall. A number of directors and players have been secured, including Allan Dwan, Oscar Apfel and Raoul A. Walsh, who will shortly come east for the summer.

Morosco-Bosworth Secures Victory Bateman

VICTORY BATEMAN, leading woman for Edwin Booth, the two Salvinis, Louis James and other celebrated Shakespeareans, and one of the most finished actresses of the American stage, has been secured to appear before the motion picture camera at the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

Miss Bateman has played hundreds of different types of women in her illustrious career and will portray the part of a gypsy seeress in "Kilmeny," the photoplay selected as the initial starring screen vehicle for Lenore Ulrich, of "Bird of Paradise" fame. Pretty little seven-year-old Doris Baker, known in vaudeville as "the youngest cornetist in the world," will also play an important part in the new Morosco-Bosworth release.

Victory Bateman.

In order to accommodate the increased activities at the Morosco-Bosworth studios the stage has been extended west so that it gains an additional area of over 2,500 sq. ft. Another 25,000 sq. ft. has been added to the facilities of the Council Street stage, devoted to big exterior sets, by fencing a solid 75-ft. strip straight through the block from Council to First.

Among others in the "Kilmeny" cast are "Bill" Desmond, who has supported Lenore Ulrich for two seasons in "The Bird of Paradise," and Herbert Standing, the well known Morosco-Bosworth player.

Alma Hanlon

A WELCOME newcomer in the film world is Mrs. Walter J. Kingsley, head of the publicity department of the United Booking Offices, who, under her maiden name, Alma Hanlon, is at work at the Pathe studios as leading woman in the Tad series of comic cartoons.

Mrs. Kingsley is of the famous Hanlon family, long known on the American stage as superb pantomimists and stars in their own production of "Hanlon's Superbas," which, years ago, delighted playgoers throughout the country.

Mrs. Kingsley and Mrs. Harry Reichenbach are close friends, and it was because of Mrs. Reichenbach's insistence that Mr. and Mrs. Kingsley became interested in screen work and later took the position at the Pathe studio.

Alma Hanlon.

Within a few months Miss Hanlon will make her appearance in one of the feature productions of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

When four years of age, Mrs. Kingsley was carried on and off in the productions of the famous Hanlons, and the traditions of her family alone promise to aid her considerably in her new work. Last year Mrs. Kingsley was selected by the National Photographers' Association as the supreme beauty of the day and awarded a parchment diploma carrying with it the honor conferred.

Marion Leonard's Activities.

WHILE "Mrs. Dane's Defense" is not quite ready for release as yet, Miss Leonard has completed the actual production and is already working on "Zira." There was given a private showing of "Mrs. Dane's Defense" in the studio, and the picture looked good to those who saw it, the audience being composed of the studio forces and those of the players who were in town.

Marion Leonard.

Naturally there was considerable interest in the work of Charles Dalton as this was his first experience as a photoplay actor, but his performance was fully up to if not above any acting he ever did on the speaking stage, and this is saying a great deal when his work in the "Sign of the Cross" and other well known legitimate productions is taken into account.

Miss Leonard was—well, you know without any retelling what kind of work Miss Leonard did — Miss Leonard was "Marion Leonard as Mrs. Dane," leaving little else to be said. Miss Mabel Montgomery did some good work while Mr. Jarrett played well opposite Miss Leonard.

From now on, interest in the studio centers on "Zira" and while no definite information has been forthcoming as to the actual construction of the cast it is more than probable that many of the players who helped to make "Mrs. Dane's Defense" a success will be seen again in "Zira."

Clara Horton.

THERE are not many little girls of eleven years of age who were born in Amity street, Brooklyn, who can boast the possession of ten trunks full of clothes, a trip round the world and a bungalow in California—all earned by themselves. There are not many little girls in all the world who can make that boast. And yet that is what little Clara Horton, a Brooklyn child, who is now "the littlest star" for the Ideal Motion Picture Company, in Hollywood, Cal., has to her credit, an besides that (she is not too grown up to acknowledge it) one of the most wonderful collections of dolls which ever delighted the heart of a little girl since the world began.

Clara Horton.

Clara Horton, it may be remembered by Brooklynites, made her first appearance as a toe dancer in a school pantomime during the holiday season, several years ago. Her dancing so delighted a theatrical manager who was present that he gave her further training, and she soon appeared in the pantomime, "Jack and the Bean Stalk." Then came the most delightful experiences of all—a trip around the world, playing in every leading city and, what really interested the child more, learning how little girls in every country play dolls, and how they dance. On her return from abroad, Clara played in the children's production of "Cinderella," and then she became a little actress for the moving pictures.

Clara has been with the Ideal Company, which, until just recently, has been located at Tucson, Arizona, for two years. She and her mother are now at Hollywood, where Clara will head a newly-formed company of juvenile artists. She is called the "Ideal Kiddie of the United Program," and her picture is seen daily in every city of the United States.

Something About Pictures.

Eugene Nowland of the Edison Studios Addresses New York Library Club on Educational Subjects.

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

AN interesting address was given by Eugene Nowland, stage director of the educational department of the Edison studios, before the New York Library Club, in the auditorium of the Washington Irving High School, on the afternoon of Thursday, May 13. Mr. Nowland chose as his subject "The Possibilities of the Educational Moving Picture," demonstrating the truth of his remarks with filmed subjects of a high order, namely, "The Manufacture of U. S. Coin," "Microscopic Pond Life," and "The Boston Tea Party."

These illustrations as well as Mr. Nowland's intelligent and enthusiastic handling of his subject were received by his audience in the heartiest manner. Apart from impressing upon his hearers in glowing terms the unparalleled possibilities of the moving picture as an educator, relating something of its history dating from the first exhibition which took place in Chickering Hall in 1891, drawing attention to the fact that in more than one college throughout the country where technological subjects are taught, preparations are being made, and in some instances have been completed, for the use of the moving picture in connection with the college curriculum, he let drop some remarks that are worth repeating in the language used by the speaker, and which will go far toward convincing the reader of his sincerity in his work as an art. 'It is for instance a new thought to many of us that "while the poet finds expression in words, the artist in oils or water colors, the sculptor in marble, the moving picture director uses souls. With the souls of men and women who have lived, and are able to truly feel what they are called upon to portray, he paints his pictures." Then we were glad indeed to hear him make the assertion, "I will not make a picture having anything suggestive whatsoever in it, nor a picture that shows any means of committing crime," whereupon he gave his reasons for not doing so, one of which centered about a horrible crime which was committed some time ago in Los Angeles, and which was an exact parallel of one exhibited shortly before in a moving picture, and which to his own personal knowledge was inspired by the viewing of that picture. He further drew attention to the fact that the more pretentious production should be guarded in this respect just as carefully as the smaller product, for the reason that although exhibited at first only in large picture houses such as the Strand, when this same film begins to wear out and become "rainy," it is passed along the line down to the nickel houses "where meagre intelligence views it, and where the animal instinct is largely uppermost." Mr. Nowland also stated that while he believes that the National Censor Board had done a good work in the cleansing of the moving picture, he is at the same time of the opinion that the directors and the manufacturers should be their own censors.

Another thought worth while considering, although not an altogether new one, and with regard to which Mr. Nowland was particularly forceful, is in connection with the danger of the motion picture as an educator. This danger is that which lies more especially in the filming of literary works, the danger of placing the story so completely and realistically upon the screen that the mind of the spectator is satisfied to the extent of failing to become inspired with a desire to read the book or know more about the subject. This may also be the danger in attempting to teach history by means of the film, and to illustrate his idea of how a subject of this kind should be presented, telling enough but not too much, and thereby inciting a curiosity to look up the incident for further information, a two-reel version of "The Boston Tea Party," the scenario as well as the picture of which was fashioned by Mr. Nowland himself, was presented. The illustration is a worthy one and was received with much enthusiasm by the audience.

Director Nowland's address before the New York Library Club is significant, not alone of the growing interest in the moving picture, its apparent mission, and its possibilities as an educator, but of the higher human intelligence which is finding its way to the producing end of the business.

Bernstein's Plans for New Program.

Former Manager of Universal City Hopes to Erect Large Studio in La Mesa, Cal.—To Engage Twenty-two Directors.

AS ANNOUNCED in the Moving Picture World, under date of May 15, Isadore Bernstein, late manager of Universal City, is making plans for the production of another program, including single reel and feature subjects. Mr. Bernstein came to New York recently and a few days ago spoke optimistically of the prospects for his new enterprise, atlhough he is not ready to announce the organization as an assured fact. He made it clear that he did not wish to promise anything of which he was not certain.

Most of the money has been raised for a corporation capitalized at between two and three million dollars, the studios to be located at La Mesa, Cal., a town near San Diego. It is not unlikely that work on these studios, constructed along improved lines, originated by Mr. Bernstein, will be started within the next few weeks. The program calls for seven one-reel comedies and seven three-reel subjects a week and supplementing these regular releases will be six big features a year. Twenty-two directors will be engaged at the La Mesa studio and it is probable that the product of several outside producers will be used.

At present Mr. Bernstein has organized a company for the feature productions and much of his time in New York is being spent in engaging the best directors and players available for the other companies. He wants actors who have proved their worth on the screen, rather than the stage, and is fighting shy of contracts with independent producers whose pictures have not attained a high average in the past. Subjects for features will be selected from the most successful plays and novels of each year, and all scenario material, whether handled by one of his own directors, or an outside alliance, will be passed upon by Mr. Bernstein personally.

A new idea is to be tried in the scenario department. Figuring that short story writers frequently have good photoplay material, but do not know how to present it, Mr. Bernstein is prepared to place authors of repute under contract for a certain number of stories a month, written precisely as though they were to be printed in a magazine. These will be turned over to expert scenario writers and made ready for production. An arrangement by which the proofs of novels may be obtained in advance of publication, also is contemplated.

The new company—a name has not been selected—will open thirty exchanges in the United States, according to the plan, and to avoid any possibility of a premature start, the program will not be launched until the reels for three months in advance are on the shelves of each exchange.

Mr. Bernstein's record in the moving picture business is well known. He has a personal knowledge of every branch of the industry, from the building of a scenario, through the production of a photoplay and its marketing. He is credited with having designed Universal City and for the past two years has successfully managed the large organization without an assistant.

MORE V. L. S. E. OFFICES.

General Manager Walter W. Irwin of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., announces the establishment of three new V. L. S. E. booking offices, and the appointment of E. O. Childs as permanent representative in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The new offices are located in Cleveland, Minneapolis and Portland, Ore. A. W. Goff is in charge of the Cleveland office; C. W. Sawin will represent the Minneapolis office, and Tom North will represent the "Big Four" in Portland, Ore. Arrangements for permanent offices in these cities have not, as yet, been completed. The territory to be covered by each office is as follows:

The Cleveland office will cover Ohio and Kentucky towns adjacent to Cincinnati, the eastern section of the southern part of Michigan. The Portland office will cover Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Montana west of Billings. The Minneapolis office will cover Wisconsin north of La Crosse and Oshkosh, the northern part of Michigan, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana east of Billings.

GOODWIN FILM CO. CHARGES INFRINGEMENT.

The Goodwin Film and Camera Co., originally formed to exploit Dr. Goodwin's patents, is suing the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Patrick A. Powers, charging infringement of the Goodwin patents covering the use of pellicles. It is alleged the defendant film company is using similar pellicles without license from the plaintiff which claims to own exclusive rights to the use of same.

"An Economic Question"

Feature Films in Regular Service vs. Regular Service Plus Feature Films?

This is the economic question being debated. Kalem announces an innovation in regular service beginning Monday, July 12, with the release of a four-reel feature (Broadway Favorites) every alternate Monday, also intervening Mondays a three-reel feature, also Broadway Favorites.

It is a well known fact that many exhibitors are paying out the major portion of their profits in rentals for features outside of their regular service. Kalem proposes to help correct this uneconomic situation by releasing four-reel and three-reel features in regular service. This means the exhibitor will get his feature with his regular program without having to go down in his pocket for additional money.

The first four-reel release announced is the big spectacular cabaret picture now being made at the Kalem Cliffside, New Jersey, studio. This will be followed, Kalem promises, by a series of novelties that will make the trade sit up and take notice, and when Kalem promises you novelties you can pretty well depend upon getting them.

Harris Gordon.

"SIX TO SIXTY" is simply another way of expressing versatility, for in "The Four Seasons," a Thanhouser four reel Mutual Master Picture, which will be released very shortly, Harris Gordon plays the leading role throughout, his age running from that of a young juvenile to that of a decrepit old man; the six year old "bit" being portrayed by Leland Benham.

Harris Gordon.

Mr. Gordon was born in Glenside, Pa., in the early 90's and after graduating from the Cheltenham Preparatory School, entered the "Miss Bob White" company, where he gained his first dramatic experience. Later he appeared with Louis Mann, and subsequently played under the direction of John Cort and Klaw and Erlanger. His first picture experience was with the Reliance Company.

After severing his connections with the Reliance people he appeared in Eclair films. He has also appeared in the Famous Players, Royal, Victor, Solax, and now he is with Thanhouser in New Rochelle, N. Y.

Mr. Gordon has blue eyes and light brown hair. He is five feet eleven and a half, and is considered one of the best looking juveniles in the silent drama. He is a hard worker, and is always seeking to improve his work. During his connection with the Thanhouser studio he has appeared under the direction of W. Eugene Moore, Thanhouser's premier director.

LUBIN TO PRODUCE "THE GREAT RUBY."

"The Great Ruby," the famous Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, which is now being made into a feature production by the Lubin Company, under the direction of Barry O'Neil, promises to be one of the most remarkable photoplays ever filmed by the Lubin Company. The play is an ideal one for the screen, and the director has a wide latitude for the many big scenes. Mr. O'Neil is taking full advantage of this fact and is sparing neither money nor time in getting the desired results.

The company that is putting on "The Great Ruby" is an unusually strong one and includes Beatrice Morgan, Octavia Handworth, Eleanor Barry, Frankie Mann, Jeannette Hackett, George Soule Spencer, Peter Lang, Chauncey Keim, Walter Hitchcock, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, Howard M. Mitchell, Charles Brandt, James Farrell, Douglas Sibole, Richard Wangemann, William H. Turner, George S. Trimble, Bernard Siegel, Alan Quinn, Clarence Jay Elmer, James Cassady, Walter Law, Ruth Bryan, George Clark and Edith Ritchie.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Program for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

The Vitagraph Theater.

THE Broadway Star Feature, "Love, Snow and Ice," a three-part comedy with scenes laid in the Adirondacks, is a prominent picture on this week's program at the Vitagraph Theater. "Love, Snow and Ice" was written and produced by Wally Van, and introduces a number of beautiful winter scenes. Mr. Van, Nitra Frazer, Albert Roccardi and Donald MacBride play the leading parts. Chapter Four of "The Goddess" shows this popular serial is growing steadily in interest, Celestia being brought to New York City by Tommy Barclay. A two-part dramatic feature, "Four Grains of Rice," a tense story of Chinese cunning and American wit, and two comedies, "Fair, Fat and Saucy," an amusing tale in which a Persian Prince, in search of a fat American wife for his harem, meets a determined American husband, and Number 11 of Roy L. McCardell's Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr and the Ladies' Cup," complete the program.

Marguerite Clark at the Strand.

Marguerite Clark, in a clever photo-production of Frances Hodgson Burnett's romance, "The Pretty Sister of Jose," a Famous Players Film Company release, is the principal attraction this week at the Strand Theater. The story deals with Pepita, a young Spanish country girl who comes to Madrid with her brother, and Sebastiano, a handsome bullfighter. Miss Clark's characterization of the capricious Pepita is one of her most notable achievements for the screen. A new Keystone comedy, interesting travel subjects, the Strand Topical Review, and another high class musical program are also found on the bill.

The Hippodrome Bill.

Walker Whiteside in Israel Zangwill's celebrated play, "The Melting Pot," is the star feature this week at the Hippodrome. This powerful play lends itself to the making of an equally moving photodrama, and is being received with every mark of approbation. Mr. Whiteside gives a remarkably impressive portrayal of the leading character. A scenic feature by the Pharos Film Co., consists of Bruges, Belgium, and bee farming; new Living Pictures by the Hippodrome Classic Models; the Weekly Events in Motion Pictures; Miller & Vincent in a popular song specialty; The Kentucky Derby, 1915 (World Film Corp.); picture comedy, "Two for a Quarter," and an impressive tableau, "Liberty," are also on the program.

"Wild Goose Chase" at Broadway Theater.

Ina Claire made her moving picture debut in Jesse L. Lasky's picturization of Wm. C. DeMille's dramatic comedy, "Wild Goose Chase," at the Broadway theater this week. The comedy is full of life and amusing situations, and Miss Claire is a charming heroine. A new instalment of the Paramount South American Travel Series, and a number of comedies are also shown.

ERBOGRAPH COMPANY STARTS BUSINESS.

The Erbograph Company, of which Ludwig G. B. Erb is president, and Ben Goetz, treasurer, has just completed a fully equipped plant at 203 and 211 West 146th street, New York, for the printing and developing of motion pictures. This plant has been in course of construction since last November and is completely appointed. The reputation of Mr. Erb as a photographic expert is so well known in the trade that no comment regarding his ability to handle the laboratory work is necessary.

HARRY MAINHALL, UNITED SCENARIO EDITOR.

Perhaps much of the artistic and poetical quality of the scenarios written by Harry Mainhall, recently engaged to write scenarios for Edwin August and the Pyramid Picture players for the United Program is due to the gift of imagination and the artistic sense handed down to him by a long line of talented artists. Jeffrys Lewis, the famous actress of the days when Ellen Terry and Sarah Bernhardt were in their hey dey, who reigned, the undisputed queen of Broadway drama for many seasons, is Mr. Mainhall's mother.

Mr. Mainhall was with Essanay three years before coming to New York to write scenarios for the United Program. He is a pen and ink artist with a style of his own, and many of his allegorical drawings have been accepted by the newspapers.

Myrtle Tannehill

THE American actress, who attempts to establish a following abroad, faces a task that is almost superhuman. This is a fact admitted by every performer who has endeavored to break down the barrier of prejudice which exists against American players. The individuals who have succeeded in leveling this barrier can be numbered upon the fingers of both hands.

Myrtle Tannehill.

Myrtle Tannehill, the talented artiste who is featured in Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" production, "When the Mind Sleeps," is one of the few American players who has established a following in Great Britain which can be said to be as great as it is in this country. Miss Tannehill, by the way, came to Kalem direct from her success in "A Pair of Sixes," which recently left the Longacre theater after a long run.

This charming actress is well known to Broadway theatergoers. Her delightful work opposite George M. Cohan, in "Broadway Jones," when that production was presented at the Cohan theater, is still remembered. "Snobs," which scored at the Hudson theater, is another of the productions in which Miss Tannehill appeared on Broadway.

Miss Tannehill's first appearance upon the stage was with William Gillette, in "The Admirable Crichton." Then came a season in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Her next appearance was opposite Mag Figman, in "Just Out of College." Shortly afterwards, Miss Tannehill was engaged to play one of the principal roles in "The Girl of the Golden West," and "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford."

In the role of Wenda, the victim of cretinism, or arrested mentality, Miss Tannehill gives a truly touching portrayal. "When the Mind Sleeps," will be issued Monday, June 14, and, like the "Broadway Favorites" features which precede it, will be released in regular service.

ELAINE COMPANY GOES TO ITHACA.

The Whartons, Pathe producers, and the "Romance of Elaine" company left for Ithaca recently with two carloads of scenery and "props."

Among those at the Lackawanna station in Hoboken were Lionel Barrymore, Pearl White, Creighton Hale, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Wharton, Theodore Wharton, J. Whitworth Buck and Leroy F. Baker. All were looking forward to their work in Ithaca.

The picture will be made at the fine new property which the Whartons have acquired in Ithaca, and where extensive improvements have been made during the last three or four months. Every facility for making pictures has been provided for, and in the future Ithaca will be the permanent address of the Whartons.

"THE FIGHTING CHANCE" TO BE SHOWN.

When the first performance of the Lincoln Players, "The Fighting Chance," will be shown in a few weeks to a select gathering of literary folk, the Rev. Stickney Grant will be among those present. The minister of the P. E. Church of the Ascension will be remembered as having used Chambers' novel for the text of his most brilliant sermons against drink and its hereditary effect on the growing youth.

Rev. Grant is looking forward to the showing with a great deal of interest and pleasure. He is very anxious to see Ed. Lincoln, the former Vitagraph star, portray the young man who had but "The Fighting Chance" against Old Demon Barleycorn and the sins of the father.

Maud Allan With Bosworth-Morosco

ANOTHER capture of unusual importance for the screen has been announced by Bosworth, Inc., in association with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in the person of Maud Allan, the internationally famous dancer.

Miss Allan, who shares with her bosom friend, Pavlowa, the leadership in modern classical dancing, is an immense favorite in London, both because of her natural genius and also because of her popularity with the late King and the present Queen Mother. Her hold upon the royal favor largely came about through a little act of graciousness of her own.

Maud Allan.

Miss Allan has already reached the Morosco-Bosworth studios and is now at work on her initial motion picture subject, "The Rug Maker's Daughter," a stirring romance of the American-Turkish rug trade, which will include three of her most beautiful dances. It was solely through a lucky circumstance that the Morosco-Bosworth interest were able to secure this star. On returning from an eighteen months' tour of Australasia, India and the Far East, Miss Allan stopped off in Los Angeles for a short visit with her mother, where when negotiations for her appearance on the screen followed her inspection of the Morosco-Bosworth Studios. The fact that she has repeatedly turned down offers to be screened and only recently refused $5,000 to give one of her dances before the camera, will readily dispel any idea that securing this star for motion pictures was a simple business transaction.

Reina Valdez Attains Ambition

REINA VALDEZ has at last attained her ambition. She is a motion picture directress, a full fledged directress, and now her weeks of hard labor and self sacrifice and constant devotion to the producing end of the profession at the Ideal Studio at Hollywood, California, where she is the leading lady at the same time, have been rewarded by the promise that she shall assist direct and star in a short society drama, "The Road Home," which she herself has written, which will be produced in a few weeks. Miss Valdez has been acclaimed "the most beautiful girl in the world" by popular vote of many motion picture theaters, and although she has been much sought after by artists and by theatrical managers, and although she has played the leading parts in many plays, both on the screen and behind the footlights, she has never, for the past few years since she first appeared in motion pictures, lost sight of the fact that she wanted some day to become a directress. Even before she was in any way associated with the drama which is made possible through the lens of the camera, she was quite an expert photographer, and modestly acknowledges that many of her photographs took prizes for excellence in amateur contests.

Reina Valdez.

"The Road Home" is bound to attract much attention when it appears.

Eugenia Forde

TO MISS EUGENIA FORDE, playing the role of Hagar in "The Diamond from the Sky," has fallen one of the most difficult characterizations thus far presented on the screen. It is a gypsy mother whose infant son is sold for gold. To portray all that the gypsy Hagar endures, always fighting, struggling, battling, requires a dramatic investment that few players in motion pictures possess. When "The Diamond from the Sky" was in its productive inception, the character of Hagar caused some apprehension, for it was felt the person selected to play it must be a most unusually gifted player.

Eugenia Forde.

That her selection was a happy one is proven by the recent showing of the first chapters of the North American Film Corporation's big offering. We find Miss Forde, as the gypsy Hagar, her heart torn by the anguish that only the mother of a first-born can know, but with a spirit undaunted and a courage unlimited, except by the demands of her aching heart's cry for revenge.

It is a high tribute to Miss Forde's dramatic effectiveness to record her work in "The Diamond from the Sky" as dramatically equal to anything the screen has thus far offered. She possesses, along with her general stage knowledge of values, the artistry of the screen—a something which many big dramatic stars recruited to the screen fail to gain—enabling her to register the most subtle points and drive them home convincingly.

Janet Beecher

WITH a long list of Broadway successes in the "regular" theaters to her credit, Janet Beecher of course finds her way to the screen by the World Film route. She is the star of the five-part feature, "Fine Feathers," based on Eugene Walters' play of the same name which had a great vogue on the legitimate stage a few years ago.

In this photodrama Miss Beecher impersonates a young married woman who is discontented with suburban existence on "$25 per," so she aids and abets her husband in some polite nefariousness, which succeeds pro. tem. Then comes the usual discovery and the poor bird is stripped of her fine feathers and taught a useful lesson in contentment.

Janet Beecher.

Miss Beecher, who plays this fine part in the World Film photodrama, graduated in stage artistry under Mr. Belasco. She appeared in "The Great Adventure," "The Intruder," "The Woman of It," "The Regeneration," "The Concert," "The Man Higher Up," "The Love Thought," and many others.

Personal popularity is not the least of Janet Beecher's many assets. Also besides being an accomplished actress she is a painter of merit and proficient in many sports.

"A Strange Disappearance."

King Baggot Featured in Three-Reel Imp Production, Based on Narrative Written by Anna Katherine Green.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElvray.

THIS is not a detective story, such as readers of Anna Katherine Green might expect, and the action does not center about the unraveling of a murder mystery. There is, however, a decided air of mystery about the narrative and the characterizations are peculiarly of the type drawn by this gifted writer. There is more strength in the atmosphere, construction and character work than in the plot itself, which promises a little more than is realized in development.

King Baggot is appealing in the part of Andrew Blake, about whose tangled love affairs the story is woven; Edna Hunter is charming as Evelyn, and Frank Smith does a remarkably fine bit of work in the part of the father, palsied in everything but his stubborn will. Jane Gail is pleasing as Luthia, but as hers is really the leading feminine part it would have strengthened the plot development to have introduced her earlier in the narrative and allowed the observer to get more in sympathy with her.

At the opening of the piece Andrew is seen deeply in love with Evelyn. The father bitterly opposes this match and wishes him to wed Katherine. The young man takes a month's trip into the country and stops one night at a cabin in the woods. Here he meets Luthia, the daughter of a scoundrel. She saves Andrew from robbery and perhaps death. He then takes her with him and places her in a convent. Later, when his father threatens him with disinheritance if he weds Evelyn, he compromises by marrying Luthia. The latter soon learns that Andrew has married her while still loving another. She goes into the woods and is threatening to drown herself when she is made captive by her scoundrel of a father and her brother.

Andrew's own father dies and he thinks Luthia dead. Later he accidentally learns of her abduction and goes alone to recover her. He visits the cabin, is overpowered and the place set on fire. Rescuers come in the nick of time. Both are saved and Andrew learns to love the girl who bears his name.

The scene of the production is in England and the period some time in the days of quill pens and stage coaches. In costuming and settings the piece is pleasing.

Lottie Briscoe Leaves Lubin.

This popular and talented leading lady brought her association with the Lubin firm to a close last Saturday, May 15. This ends probably the most famous partnership in moving pictures, that of Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe. Whether the most famous or not, it is undeniably the longest, these two having worked together without break for the last three and a half years. During that time, in conjunction they have produced some of the biggest successes with which the name of Lubin have been associated, notably "The District Attorney's Conscience," "The Power of the Cross," "The Parasite," "Kiss Me Good Night" and last week's Lubin feature, "Who Violates the Law." Miss Briscoe has not yet announced her plans for the future, and is at present taking a much needed rest in that Mecca of the New Yorkers, Atlantic City.

"Wife for Wife"

Kalem "Broadway Favorites" Three-Reel Offering, Featuring Wilmuth Merkyl and Regina Richards—Terrific Climax of the Play Is Effective.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS play by John A. Stephens, "Wife for Wife," with its terrible climax and its telling, dramatic situations, is full of good material for picturization and the Kalem producer, Kenean Buel, has done very commendable work in putting it on the screen. His use of backgrounds is admirable. The story is of life in the South in the old slave-holding days and in the picture the dignified old southern mansions, the front yards and back yards, negro quarters and fields are absolutely convincing—for interiors and exteriors he has used the real thing and his camera man has ably done the mechanical part. Mr. Buel has accomplished even more than this; for he has made us believe that the hero of the tale really did make a trip abroad by skillfully interpolating actual glimpses of buildings and mountains that are not in America. Of course, we are speaking now only of general effects—those who have seen many pictures of foreign places will know that Genoa and Naples can not be seen on the same day unless one travels. But the effect is undeniable.

The story's string of situations is gripping and in the acting and general deportment of the players there is a naturalness and pleasing humanity that bridges as well as possible the few in number but somewhat artificial spots in the action that, in the stage play, are in the more obscure background. It is the old difficulty of picturing plays—the whole story has to be told, bald places and effective situations, the one as clearly pictured as the other. The screen shows up the average play mercilessly. Unless the script has been made not of the play but of the story after the play has been wholly forgotten. It is a mighty interesting picture as it is, but it has several plainly artificial and one or two wholly arbitary bridging situations. The story is well known.

Educators Visit Lubin Plant.

Headed by Dr. Wm. C. Jacobs, superintendent of the public schools of Philadelphia, thirty-five prominent educationalists were the guests of Siegmund Lubin at the latter's ranch at Betzwood, Pa., this week and had a most interesting and thrilling experience. The Philadelphia educational authorities have been taking a deep interest in moving pictures recently. A few weeks ago they spent a day at the Lubin studio in Philadelphia and saw all the inner workings of the big plant there. So interested were they that they decided to spend a day at the Lubin ranch.

The educators had an opportunity to "work" in a Western picture, and, following luncheon, made a tour of the ranch, inspected the studios, laboratories, factories; and, as a finale, saw a number of pictures that had been filmed on the ranch.

"Four Feathers."

A. E. W. Mason's Dramatic Story Is Used in Five-Part Dyreda Picture, Released on Metro Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHOEVER selected A. E. W. Mason's "Four Feathers" for a photo-play subject showed wise judgment. In book form it was thoroughly dramatic, colorful and replete with the sort of adventure desirable in a picture. Produced in five reels by the Dyreda Art Film Company, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, it makes an offering that no doubt will find favor on the Metro program, largely because of the inherent worth of the plot, essentially one of action and excitement. Also, there is an advantageous romantic quality in the career of a man who goes to all lengths to rid himself of the stigma of cowardice.

Just how completely Mr. Dawley succeeded in reproducing the atmosphere of Arabia cannot be fairly estimated from the rather imperfect sample print shown at a private exhibition. In this print there was room for improvement in the tinting that unquestionably will be accomplished in subsequent copies. Some harsh lighting that reveals the faces of the actors in a garish illumination may be toned down and the editor may decide to eliminate one or two scenes in which the artificiality of the settings is ever apparent. This does not apply to many well constructed interiors. With a few betterments of the kind noted, "Four Feathers" will be considerably more pleasing to the eye.

That he might get stretches of sand, not unlike those of a desert, Mr. Dawley took his company to a southern beach. He was careful about the costuming of the many Arabs used in the scenes and seemingly allowed no points for dramatic action to slip by unrealized. There is battle, murder and a proportionate amount of sudden death in the story of the English officers and the one who gives up his commission because of a morbid fear, carried to maturity from sensitive youth when he was frightened by tales of horror told by survivors of atrocities in the Crimea. Three brother officers send him white feathers and the fourth comes from his sweetheart. Disguised as an Arab musician, he determines to prove his valor, and this he does by saving the lives of the men who misjudged him. The love interest is dominated by the adventure running through the story.

Howard Estabrook gives a strong and varied performance as Captain Faversham, Arthur Evers is convincing as the officer blinded by the glare of the sun on the sand, and Irene Warfield is passable as the heroine loved by both.

"The Plunderer."

William Farnum in a Five-Reel Melodrama of Pronounced Merit Released by the Fox Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

VIGOROUS and clean-minded melodrama, built on a firm foundation of reasonable incident and consistant character-drawing, will always keep its place in the regard of lovers of the screenplay. "The Plunderer" is an uncommonly fine specimen of such a melodrama. Taken from Roy Norton's novel of life in a Western mining camp, Edgar Lewis, who made the film version and directed its production, has accomplished both tasks in a highly creditable manner. The choice of locations, photography and general ensemble have resulted in a number of strikingly beautiful scenes, and the freedom and breadth of view of the mountains lend an additional charm to many of the views. The human beings in the play are also worth becoming acquainted with. The author understands the supreme value of character, and has relieved the tense moments of his story by unforced laughter or smiles that spring from the inborn promptings of his men and women, and are not evoked by the comic capers of extraneous comedians who could better be spared from the cast.

The story deals with a mine robbery, has an appropriate love interest, and the element of suspense is maintained from start to finish. The acting is on the same high level with the other features of the production. William Farnum comes into his own as Bill Mathews, the part fitting his personality and fine histrionic powers to perfection. And his knock-out of the bullies in the dance-hall fight is a beautiful thing to see. Harry Springler is a manly and engaging Harry Townsend, and William Gross does a richly humorous piece of character work as Bells Park. Wm. Riley Hatch contributes another of his sterling performances as grim old "Bully" Presby. Clair Whitney, as Joan Presby, and Flavia Arcara, as "The Lily," also offer impersonations of decided worth.

"The Working of a Miracle."

Three-Reel Edison Photodrama of Unusual Merit by Ashley Miller.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

RARELY does an author succeed as a director, and as rarely does a director produce a play of his own as high in quality as that of "The Working of a Miracle," but Mr. Miller has not only shown a nice sense of construction in planning the story, but he has treated it with a convincing psychology. He has made it count both ways. There is no divided honor in structure and treatment, but Carlton King, Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette deserve almost equal praise for interpretation that is far beyond the ordinary. The whole effect is satisfying. There is a completness and lack of crudity which will eventually mark all screen products to be included in the worth-while class.

Mr. Miller is perfectly justified in presenting, for the sake of his theme, sensational features that belong in the melodrama class. Situations, after all, are of minor consequence —it is the push, the purpose, that carries a play over to success, and the author-director has seized upon one which might be developed in a hundred ways. It is known that human beings can accomplish the seemingly miraculous under high mental excitement, and Mr. Miller has added very delicately the inspiration of spiritual faith. In not obtruding the current of thought behind the main action of his story, he has shown a finer conception of photoplay needs than most authors do under similar circumstances.

Earle, as a wealthy young man, falls in love with a modest and highly intelligent little school teacher, impersonated by Gladys Hulette. Her guardian, a member of the school board and a religious fanatic, impersonated by Carlton King, also goes mad over the girl. In a clash between the two men, the young lover is thrown over a precipice, and paralysis of the lower limbs ensues. He is thereafter moved about in a wheel-chair, and he uses field-glasses to follow the movements of the little school teacher. She is forbidden the house and loses her position, through the influence of her guardian. His half-crazed infatuation knows no bounds; his attentions assume a form of persecution and he eventually attacks the girl, causing her to fall into a railroad cutting. This is seen by the helpless lover through his field-glass. Hitherto a sceptic, almost an atheist, he prays for help. He makes a mighty effort, and his strength is restored. He saves the girl from genuine peril—she is lying on a track when a train actually does pass—and the maddened guardian meets with a tragic end.

The story is very strong in interest, in characterization, in structure and in psychology. Perhaps Miss Hulette should be given first place in mental revelation, though the role of Carlton King is more intense. The fact that her opportunities are limited, raises the value of her fine interpretation. She has surpassed her performance in any previous role.

"Under Two Flags."

Biograph's Coming Three-Reel Production of Famous Play Recalls Interesting History.

WITH the possible exception of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the most notable of all dramas adapted from famous novels is "Under Two Flags," the masterpiece of the great Ouida. Every stage manager in the country has his own version of the book; and every actress in stock aspires to win new laurels in the role of Cigarette, the daughter of the regiment. The romantic story is dear to playgoers old and young alike.

Consequently, it is rather astonishing, on reading the announcement of the forthcoming three reel Biograph production of "Under Two Flags," to recall that just fifteen years have elapsed since first it was presented on any stage by Charles Frohman at the Garden Theater, New York. The cast was a notable one, comprising at least three of the most popular present-day stars. Blanche Bates created the role of Cigarette; Macklyn Arbuckle leaped into popular esteem as the Earl of Rockingham. Edward Abeles stepped out of the ranks to stardom on the strength of his magnificent performance as Rake.

The version of the story was written by Paul M. Potter, now one of America's most distinguished playwrights. Like most of the acting versions used today, it followed closely the lines of the story, save in the one particular which, while it provides the keenest pleasure to the reader of the novel, could not be included in any stage version. Biograph has produced many a magnificent spectacle, and on the strength of past records we may expect, in the forthcoming production of "Under Two Flags," a really notable union of vivid drama and superb scenic effects—for the opportunity is a rare one.

The cast selected comprises some of the most popular of the Biograph players. Louise Vale, who in her own stock company has played the role on many occasions, is the Cigarette of the Biograph production. Franklin Ritchie has the role of Bertie Cecil, the English peer who, driven from his country on a false charge, enlisted in the Chasseurs d'Afrique to wage war on the Arabs. Charles Mill Mailes plays the veteran Arab chieftain who learned to love his noble foe. Kenneth Davenport has the role of Rake, the common soldier who shared the perils of his master in a strange land. The Black Hawk, as the chasseurs called their leader, who persecuted the English nobleman and finally caused the death of Cigarette, is played by Herbert Barrington.

"Under Two Flags" is the first subject to be released in a series of three reel Biographs scheduled for every other Wednesday, beginning July 21.

Edna Mayo in Essanay Feature.

Edna Mayo, Essanay's clever leading woman, will take the leading part in Essanay's great five-reel feature, which now is being prepared, "The Blindness of Virtue." This masterpiece, written by Cosmo Hamilton is now being filmed at the Chicago studios. Miss Mayo is peculiarly fitted through her simplicity and natural grace and beauty, and her thorough comprehension of character to play the part of the minister's daughter, who is brought up in absolute ignorance and innocence of sex. Bryant Washburn takes the part of the young man who falls in love with her and arouses the ire of the minister because of the girl's unconventionality. The two play with exceptional harmony. The play itself is strong in emotions and gives full play to the clever acting of both leads.

Early Release for "The White Sister."

The Essanay five-part production, featuring Viola Allen, the world famous star, in her greatest stage success, "The White Sister," has been moved forward on the V. L. S. E. program. "The White Sister" is now scheduled for release on June 21, and exhibitors will be enabled to put on this wonderfully clever actress a full month ahead of the anticipated time.

"Betty in Search of a Thrill."

A Five-Part Bosworth Picture Starring Elsie Janis—Pleasing Acting Compensates for Slight Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN "Betty in Search of a Thrill," Bosworth, Inc., has a five-part picture which is nearly all Elsie Janis. She wrote the scenario herself and as might be expected the incidents devised for Betty's career are thoroughly in harmony with the personality of the young stage star, who undergoes various changes while in search of experience. First we find her to be a perfectly innocent Miss, fresh from a convent, but more than willing to learn the ways of the world. Arrayed in an evening gown, borrowed from her cousin, she slides down the banisters and into the arms of Jim Denning, her first admirer. He thinks it wise to discourage Betty's craving for worldly knowledge, but she won't listen to his advice.

Curled up in a big arm chair, Betty falls asleep and in her dreams she runs away to New York where adventures come in rapid succession, for the men in the big city are all too alive to the charms of the innocent girl from the convent. The floorwalker in a department store is over friendly in his advances, likewise the stage manager of a musical comedy and as a dancer in a cabaret, Betty is saved from insults by the ever faithful Jim, who follows her from place to place. Presently Miss Janis cuts off her curls, steals a suit of man's clothes and thinks to end her troubles with admiring men by becoming one of them, but here again her plan fails and the chapter of misfortunes is continued to the end—her awakening with Jim gently placing his coat around her shoulders. The dream has been enough; her desire for thrills is satisfied.

Being a gifted comedienne, on the screen quite as much as on the stage, Miss Janis makes "Betty in Search of a Thrill" a very enjoyable entertainment. Her dancing is charming and the variations in her characterization prevent monotony in a story that is not particularly strong on its own account.

Owen Moore makes a likable young man of Jim Denning and other parts are satisfactorily handled by Juanita Hanson, Harry Ham and Roberta Hickman. Artistic settings are a notably fine feature of the production.

Sidney Mason with United.

Sidney Mason, who will be remembered for his excellent work with Blanche Walsh in "The Resurrection," and also in the role in "The Count of Monte Cristo," in which he played opposite James O'Neil, has joined the United program, and is appearing in Empress photodramas with Joseph Levering and Marian Swayne. Mr. Mason appears to good advantage in the role of the artist in "The Vivisectionist," a photoplay written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, which will be released June 2 on the United program. Sidney Mason makes the second "Mason" on the program. Dan Mason, the producer of the original "Peck's Bad Boy," and a score of other old-timers is a United comedian of some week's standing, and while they are not related, both players are doing their names proud.

"Too Realistic," Says Starkey.

Buckley Starkey, the photo actor with the Peerless Feature Film Service Company, thinks that he is handled with impunity. Starkey is slightly under five feet four, and weighs only a hundred and twenty, wearing comedy shoes. In "The Face in the Moonigiht," Robert Warwick is called upon to bind and gag Starkey, who plays the part of the innkeeper.

"The action was too realistic," says Starkey, "as Mr. Warwick is a six-foot, two-hundred pounder. The audience may see his muscles train to the task, everything went well except for me; but I, bound and gagged securely, shot ten feet through the air from Warwick's arms and landed in a miserable heap on a very hard floor. We little fellows cannot always stand up for our rights."

"The Millionaire Baby"

An Adaptation of Anna Katherine Green's Novel, by Gilson Willetts, Filmed in Six Parts by Selig, with Tense Interest and Finished Production Throughout.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IT HAS not been very frequent, after viewing a big subject on the screen, that I have been filled with such satisfaction and pleasure with its general excellence as in the case of "The Millionaire Baby." That word, "general," is used with its full significance in this instance.

Often it occurs, through hurried production, that the settings are sacrificed; or through lack of good judgment in the selection of the cast the photodramatic quality is deficient; or through faulty work in the technical departments a fine subject in other respects is marred for the spectator; or through lack of keen discernment on the part of the director or the scenario writer, or in the editing of the films, the story is disjointed, and the pleasure of the spectator becomes bewilderment and disappointment.

I would draw special attention, first of all, to the artistic care displayed in the settings of "The Millionaire Baby," and next to the clearness of the story. No setting, however small, fails to convince that it is just what it should be—thoroughly enrapport with the atmosphere of the story. There is no attempt to save a few dollars at the expense of artistic taste. The plot of the story is quite involved; but the exacting observer cannot fail to note that the screen reveals to him all the aids necessary to a full understanding.

Take, for example, the case of Valerie on the eve of the restoration of her child by the crafty Dr. Pool. How do we learn that she has already suspected that the baby of the millionaire next door is her own child. To me that is made clear by a combination of scenes, subtly used by the director; viz, that showing Valerie and the baby discussing the cabalistic "March 10," written in chalk in various places in the Ocumpaugh mansion, when the child explains that her birthday falls on that date; the one in which Mrs. Ocumpaugh explains that a madman is trying to terrorize her, and that other scene in Valerie's home when she takes up a photograph and looks at it tenderly, and then the look of rapture, produced like a lightning flash by the recollection that the villain, Dr. Pool, has promised to restore her child on the same date.

The photography of these six reels can best be described in one word, "excellent." The light and shade values are well brought out, and the pictures have fine depth.

The acting, except in the first reel, on the part of one or two in the cast, is equal to the demands of the story. Harry Mestayer, as Justin Carewe, the author; Grace Darmond, as Valerie Carew, the actress—Justin's wife and mother of the millionaire baby; Mrs. C. A. Marston, as Mrs. Ocumpaugh; John Charles, as the villainous Dr. Pool; Frederick Hand, as Philo Ocumpaugh, the millionaire, and last, but not least in ability, little Charlotte Stevens, as Gwendolyn, the millionaire baby, take the principal characters.

It was pleasing to notice that every one in the cast was careful to show in makeup that lapse of ten years which occurs between parts two and three.

Scene from "The Millionaire Baby" (Selig).

Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond make a strong appeal in the parts of the husband and wife, who become estranged and are happily reunited when the fade-away comes. Miss Darmond will be remembered as the lead in "Your Girl and Mine," the big suffrage subject that has become so popular. Mrs. Marston simulates well the heart pangs of the childless wife, who vainly sought to make herself and husband happy. A very well acted part is that of Dr. Pool, by John Charles, and Frederick Hand gives a capable impersonation of the millionaire, Philo Ocumpaugh. Charlotte Stevens is a winsome child in the titular role. She is a graceful little dancer and a clever child actress.

"A Millionaire Baby" is a Red Seal photoplay, and will be released May 31, through V. L. S. E., Inc.

"Eleven-Thirty P. M."

Two-Reel Majestic Story of Mystery.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SOME of the most fascinating detective stories have depended entirely upon the grave crime of murder and expert solution of the mystery surrounding its commission, but there is always peril in belittling the deed for the sake of an enthralling plot. "Eleven-thirty P. M." escapes the danger by admirable construction and treatment, for which credit must be given the director, supposedly, in this case, Mr. George Walsh. The story is logical and contains a human interest that raises it above the cold mathematical problem. If it has a serious fault, it is due to that unusual quality, "modesty," in a director who also plays a vital role. As the gardener, Mr. Walsh was satisfying, according to ordinary standards, but he did not show himself enough, extraordinary thing for an actor-director to fail in, the more that the role is that of an interesting central figure.

Scene from "Eleven-Thirty P. M." (Majestic).

The gardener, an old and trusted servant of a banker, is strangely affectionate toward his employer's daughter, encouraging her secret meetings with the young man of her natural choice and opposing the father's choice. The gardener, old, plain, and unassuming, plays Cupid, carrying secret messages when the young lovers are about to elope. That night the banker is murdered. A clue is immediately found, a button from the butler's livery in the dead man's hand. The butler is arrested by a detective, but the sleuth is far from satisfied. He finds that the banker had a quarrel with the young lover, during which the two men nearly came to blows. The lover is arrested. Both of these men are arraigned before a coroner's jury assembled at the banker's house.

Both men earnestly declare their innocence. The detective finally discovers a clue, the finger prints of a deformed hand that puts the old gardener under suspicion, and an examination unfolds a secret he had hidden most of his life. The girl is not the banker's daughter, but his own, taken from him when the banker robbed him of the child's mother. The gardener confesses to killing the banker in self-defense and unveils his own story to save those unjustly accused.

These plays appeal to the intellect alone. The audience is engaged in watching the gradual unfolding of a mystery plot, and it is a matter of acute reasoning on the part of the detective in this case rather than accident that solves the mystery. Mr. Walsh handles his subject with skill and plays his role satisfactorily, though he does not play it enough. He is well supported by Sam de Grasse and other gentlemen, and by Loretta Blake, a young girl of great promise and good sense. As a visualized detective story, "Eleven-thirty P. M." ranks far above the average.

THIS feature, by the Lasky Company, is rich in startling incidents, so rich in fact that the action becomes at times kaleidoscopic in its variety. Part, indeed a considerable part of the play, occurs in the French-German warzone, while the rest takes place in California. The complications of the story arise from the fact that Margery Huntley, the heroine, is falsely arrested and imprisoned on a charge of having stolen some lace, which was really stolen by a rich kleptomaniac and by her put into Margaret's bag when detection seemed imminent. After this Margery becomes a trained nurse, but her prison record hampers her work and she decides to go to Belgium to do good if she can. In one of the emergency hospitals near the battle front she finds Helen, the kleptomaniac whom she recognizes. Helen is apparently killed and Margery with the strange logic of the feminine mind argues to herself that she will do no more than get even by impersonating the dead girl. She takes the dead woman's clothes and her tickets to America, which she reaches with a letter of introduction to a wealthy woman in California who had known the kleptomaniac's father. We are kept guessing constantly as to what is going to happen next. The climax is abrupt, some of the scenes are realistic portrayals of war's horrors, others are not quite so realistic.

As in most of the Lasky pictures I have seen, there is a delightful striving after art and beauty. Keeping this evidence of care and inspiration company are some crudities and improbabilities. They are of the sort to obtrude themselves not only upon the critic by profession but upon the motion picture audiences generally. The acting of Blanche Sweet is of a kind very peculiar to herself; her sweet and attractive personality makes one forget the limited register of emotions. House Peters did the best he could with a part which certainly has its difficulties and limitations. Theodore Roberts gave his usual superb character portrayal, in the part of the German army surgeon he again demonstrated his versatility.

War Scenes From Germany.

The Eiko Film Company Releases Seem Remarkable Pictures Photographed on the Battle Line.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

GENUINE war pictures of any kind are rare enough and up to the present time those showing the activities of the German and Austrian armies have been almost non-existent in this country. The Allies have had all the better of the argument in the screen showings, but from now on the picture theaters will have a different story to tell, judging from a thousand-foot example of the 75,000 feet of film received recently by W. H. Rudolph, general manager of the Eiko Film Company. Here, for the first time, we have a vivid depiction of Germany's part in the European conflict.

It is stated that upwards of 100 Eiko cameramen have been distributed along the two great battle fronts, and they are working under the supervision of the German general staff with the understanding that the film photographed shall be contributed to the archives of the German government as an historical record. Prints of the pictures are being sent to this country via Holland and Mr. Rudolph has prepared a weekly service for exhibitors. In dealing with state rights' buyers the company sells the franchise, which includes not less than five reels, and supplies the purchaser with a reel a week.

One of the first installments to be released—this one, by the way, was pronounced by Manager S. L. Rothapfel, of the Strand, to be "the most wonderful" picture of war he had ever seen—gives close views of the discharge of cannon in an actual battle and many other scenes of almost equal interest. There are, for example, the crumbling buildings of Lille after they had been battered by shells, the German soldiers preparing for an attack, the army occupying Brussels, an intimate picture of Von Hindenburg and his staff and the Sultan of Turkey being driven through the streets of Constantinople while the way is lined by soldiers and cheering men and women.

Practically all of the film was sharply photographed to bring out the details of the subjects to the full. These pictures are so exceptional and of such real importance that they deserve a showing in every theater catering to thinking people.

THIS reviewer has no doubt at all about advising exhibitors to book this five-reel offering, "Vengeance of the Wild," from the United Booking Offices. It is quite true that the "critic-spectator" (I don't mean the professional who knows his business) will hold it in contempt—it has plenty of failings in direction, acting and photography. But with all its faults, it is not hindered from entertaining its audience and thrilling it with unexpected, fresh and sensational things and it remains a very good exhibitor's offering.

The quality in it that I like best is that under the hero's, let us term it emotional, acting and the heroine's lack of experience, the plight into which the villain's actions get these two breaks down our first impression that the picture is going to be merely trash and, though gawkishly dressed, convinces us that the body under it is truly human in spite of the awkward way it moves and that it has a heart to sympathize with. I believe hat among the audience the people who seemed to be laughing at it liked it and I feel sure that, like some seated close to me, the majority were held spellbound by it at its best. Of course, it is a picture for the simple minded and any exhibitor can make a dead failure of it by wrong publicity. It is no work of art. What its offering is, is a pretty heroine's plight and lions jumping on a couple of men and clawing (so it really seems). It is merely a picture to please people.

Edwin Arden Tells Why Pictures Help Him.

Edwin Arden, the famous star of the "legitimate" now being featured by Pathe, relates how he happened to get into motion pictures. He was a number of years ago playing under the management of the late Charles Frohman in the big Drury Lane melodrama "Hearts Are Trumps," in which occurred a scene where he was taken by a motion picture camera. Curious to know how his acting appeared in his own eyes, he had the strip of film projected on a screen. The result was valuable to him; for the first time he became conscious of certain little ways in which he could better his interpretation of the part. He then decided that motion pictures were most valuable as a means of education to the actor determined to improve, and that at the first good chance he would take up the new profession.

Later he was discussing the matter with Clyde Fitch, in one of whose plays he was appearing with Doris Kean. Mr. Fitch stated that here was an invaluable aid to any actor,—that pictures could show more in a few minutes than a stage director could ever hope to explain verbally.

Thus when the opportunity was given Mr. Arden to go with Pathe, he was very easy to persuade into signing a contract.

nounced success, in fact, that one is almost inclined to overlook the generally high tone of the production and think only of the part the leading actor plays in making the five reels interesting.

There is nothing of the conventional picture hero in the personality of Mr. Smith. He is every inch a gentleman in his portrayal of Thursfield, a man of dignity and poise and a fund of reserve force that does not need to be released in theatrical outbursts. During the early reels the opportunities for dramatic effects are not particularly numerous; but as the story advances and the middle-aged builder of bridges falls in love with the sister of the youth who steals money to dabble in stocks, the emotional crises become tense and the more interesting in that they are logically developed. Mr. Smith acts with authority at all times and displays true emotional feeling without once losing sight of the innate reserve of the character he is playing.

Another important figure in the story is Arnold Faringay, the youth who is led astray by the hope of an easy fortune, and in this characterization Jack B. Sherrill is impressive, save when his semblance of fear and regret tends to become overmelodramatic. Edith Wells makes an extremely pretty heroine, if a somewhat deficient one, in suggesting changes of mood by varying facial expressions. Other players were selected with a keen regard for the requirements of the author's characters. The plot concerns Dorothy's winning of Thursfield that she may save her brother from the penalty of theft. The builder of bridges and the girl are engaged before he discovers that he has been ensnared for a purpose. But all turns out well, for the girl finds that she really loves him and an unexpected reverse in the stock market makes it possible for the youth to pay off his indebtedness.

"Who Pays?"

"Blue Blood and Yellow," the 7th of the Series Contains a Profitable Lesson for Young Women.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH the seventh of the twelve separate dramas belonging to the Pathe-Balboa series of "Who Pays?" we come to a point of excellence on the producing end of the series where the handing out of a synopsis of the story to the reviewer, subsequent to the viewing of the production, becomes superfluous. The picture with its moral intent sinks in with more force than the ordinary slip-shod drama, and has been produced against unusually attractive backgrounds, the majority of which are exteriors in the mountain country.

Ruth Roland is attractive as the young woman of wealth, who on the spur of the moment is lured into a marriage with a "ne'er-do-well" of aristocratic birth. An hour after she has, unknown to any of her friends, taken this step, she discovers that her father has left a codicil to his will, which stipulates that in case of the marriage of either of his daughters before their twenty-fifth birthday, the fortune left to them shall be given to charity. As two weeks only are to elapse before she shall have reached the alloted age which will allow her to marry, she decides to keep her marriage a secret until that time.

Some fine work is done during the period when she, her sister and her husband go to the mountains for a vacation. Here the good-for-nothing makes love to the sister, proves himself a coward on the occasion of his wife taking a fall over an embankment, and in the end proves himself a still more despicable coward, when he threatens the good name of the sister, shou'd his wife divorce him.

Here the picture comes to a close leaving us to wonder who really did pay the price, but with at the same time a feeling of certainty that the woman who mistook the glitter for the gold paid the heaviest penalty.

Henry King in the role of the young astronomer, the discarded lover of the woman, does particularly good work. And in fact the entire cast, with a competent director, and a good story, have done exceedingly well.

"A Price For Folly."

A Powerfully Acted Vitagraph Blue-Ribbon Feature in Five Parts.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE for magnificent interpretation and exquisite settings, "A Price For Folly" does not aim at commonplace realism, but strikes deeper with an idealism that delves into the mysteries of character, and it is all done in a spiritual way, possibly the very best way it could be done. Written by George P. Dillenback, and produced by George D. Baker, the play has moments of fine structure and unqualified sincerity of treatment. The general plan is good, but there is a lack of suspense at times which could have been easily overcome by stimulating expectation at the different stages of transition. This is, however, partially covered by the interesting personality of five performers and their thoroughly artistic performance.

Edith Story and Louise Beaud surpass themselves, and there is not a flaw to be found in the splendid interpretations of Antonio Moreno, Charles Kent and Harry Morey. Moreno is a veritable star, of fine poise where poise is needed and capable of intensity when the role calls for it. Charles Kent rises to his opportunities in a way that makes one wish he had more of them. Even those who ordinarily suffer eclipse in minor parts seem to catch the author's spirit with a result that our sympathies are strongly held at acute moments.

The theme reveals a true picture of sex instinct dominating all the finer ideas and ideals man has acquired since he emerged from his primitive state, the persistent domination of a desire too strong for humanity unprepared by self-control during the formative period. The story is both strong and consistent.

DeCarlton a Minstrel Star.

The North Georgia Agricultural College is located at Dahlonega, Georgia and during the filming of "The Plunderer" at this town, it was decided by the college to install a motion picture projecting machine. Ways and means were discussed as to the raising of the finances necessary to purchase this machine and it finally was decided to give a minstrel show with the students as the talent. Rehearsals were started and George DeCarlton, assistant director of the Fox Company under Edgar Lewis offered his services to the boys which were gratefully accepted as Mr. Carlton had played with Honey Boy Evans and many others of note in the minstrel business. As this college is a military institution, it was a pretty sight to see the students in their military full dress uniforms on the eventful night and with Mr. DeCarlton as interlocutor, the affair was a huge success and enough money was procured to purchase one of the latest Power's projecting machines.

"Love's Strategy."

One-Reel United Comedy, Artistically Produced, and Altogether Laughworthy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH the atmosphere of the moving picture theater overladen with all sorts of horse play in the way of comedy films, farce comedy and burlesque, good and bad, one notes with pleasure the appearance of a comedy with anything approaching a legitimate situation.

"Love's Strategy" despite the fact that it is one of the "short and sweet" kind, covering only one reel of film, is an exceedingly worthy attempt at legitimate comedy. It is clean, and prettily produced. It was made at the American Gaumont studios, presumably by Joseph Levering, who has also played the role of the "suffering" lover, made miserable by two papas who are doggedly set against marriage between the only son of the one and the only daughter of the other.

Marian Swayne plays charmingly the role of the feminine side of the question, who, while she is sleeping the anxious sleep of the night before her intended elopement, is robbed of her spare cash by her papa.

It is apparently a sad situation that has been reached in the career of the lovers, when about to escape from persecution to liberty by means of the railway train, they discover that not one of them but both have been relieved of the wherewithal to make the journey. The gallant young lover is, however, equal to the situation, and a clever plan is formed whereby the primary obstacle to the marriage is lifted. The young man takes an office in the business district of the city, feigning to be a lawyer. He sends a letter to each of the parents, stating that a fortune has been left by relatives, on condition of the marriage of their respective son and daughter. The plan works favorably, and not until after the ceremony is performed do the parents discover the deception that has been practiced on them.

There are, in addition to the excellent comedy business utilized in the making of the picture, very fine photographic effects that aid materially in making the picture attractive.

"The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan."

First Release of the Gotham Film Company Features Willie Ritchie in a Four-part Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WILLIE RITCHIE, lightweight champion of America, and Betty Marshall, his partner in vaudeville, are the stars in this, the first production of the Gotham Film Company, a four-part adaptation of a popular story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

The reputation of Ritchie no doubt will be a good drawing card and if an audience waits for the final reel, it will be rewarded by seeing the young pugilist in a bona fide ring encounter. For the time being, Ritchie is in his element and worth watching. Earlier in the picture we see him in training and this, too, is entertaining for those interested in the ways of prize fighters. The lightweight champion looks capable of winning a title, and having said this much, the brightest side of "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan" has been set forth.

The first weakness of the picture lies in the development of the story, so naive, so free from subtlety that it may excite a smile. Ritchie dreams of a fight and lest the audience miss the meaning of his restless slumber, a close-up of a pair of boxing gloves fills the screen, not once, but two or three times; or he thinks of the mortgage threatening his sweetheart's home and the scene dissolves into "$500" printed in large lettering. The second weakness is the lack of that indefinable something that marks a dramatic photoplay from a series of connected incidents; the third is a mediocre company of actors in support of the featured players, and the fourth, which may be remedied, is an inexpert cutting and assembling of the scenes. A careful examination of the film would reveal at least a dozen awkward "jumps" that should be eliminated, and while the film editor is using the shears he might operate on a few of Ritchie's boxing glove visions.

But whatever the dramatic shortcomings of "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan," the picture at least offers something genuine in the career of Ritchie and the young man's admirers may be satisfied with that in lieu of more artistic fare. Under wise direction Miss Marshall should make a pleasing photoplay actress.

Noted Visitors at Universal City.

Lieutenant-General Nelson A. Miles visited Universal City last week. He was accompanied by John Shepard of Boston, who owns one of the largest breeding and racing stables in the country, and by Frank W. Wiborg, a millionaire ink manufacturer of Cincinnati. The party spent the afternoon at Universal City. Before leaving, General Miles said:

"The motion picture industry is here to stay. I have never seen any other business grow as it has done. Its possibilities are unlimited. The motion picture is doing a great service to the world, both as an entertainer and as an educator. Moreover, it is continually being developed and improved. I predict for it a still greater field of influence than it now enjoys."

Universal City has been visited in the last two weeks by the following nationally famous personages: Vice-president Marshall, Buffalo Bill, Irvin Cobb, Margaret Mayo, Archie Selwyn and Julian Eltinge. More than 200 tourists visit the city each day and two great hotel registers have been filled with visitors' names since the opening of the city on March 15.

Mrs. Marcus Daly, widow of the famous copper king of Montana, was entertained recently at Universal City by Mrs. J. Ross Clark of Los Angeles, wife of President Clark of the Salt Lake Railway Company.

"THE GREATER COURAGE"—Essanay.

The burning question of who is the braver, the man with great physical courage or the timid man, who in some great moral crisis, stands firm for the right, is strongly brought out in this three-act production. The characters of two brothers are strikingly contrasted. One is a man of unlimited self-confidence and physical daring, and the other diffident and retiring. One is ever looking for conflict, while the other shrinks from a fight. Yet when a great test comes the man of brute force fails utterly, while the brother faces ignominy and even death without flinching. One brother kills a man in a quarrel. Suspicion points to the other. Because he believes that the woman he loves cares for his brother, the innocent man takes the blame for the murder and is imprisoned. But the guilty man finally confesses on his death bed a few months later and his brother is set free, to find that the grl loved him all the time. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn in the leading roles bring out the strong emotional parts with exceptional clarity. Released June 12.

"PALS IN BLUE" (Selig).

"Pals in Blue," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, written and directed by Tom Mix, and released in the regular service, Thursday, June 10, is one of the most exciting and thrilling picture plays that has been presented to the public in many months.

It is the story of the loving comradeship of Tom and Jerry, two cowpunchers; how they join the United States Army; how they go to a western frontier, and of how one sacrifices his life, and of how the other saves the honor of a woman and the lives of fellow soldiers.

Captain Shiers becomes infatuated with Lieutenant Manning's wife. In order that Manning may be put out of the way, he plots with Indians, who surround Lieutenant Manning and a small army of troopers in a railroad station. The building is set afire by means of burning rags tied to the wheels of an overturned stage coach and rolled down hill. Tom and Jerry take their lives into their hands, break through the line of Indians and escape into the hills. Jerry is shot and killed and Tom is badly wounded. However, despite his wounds, he discovers Captain Shiers persecuting Mrs. Manning and kills him.

Troopers sent from the fort arrive on the scene of battle; the Indians are defeated and put to flight, and the troopers in the burning station are rescued. Tom Mix performs many daring feats of horsemanship; there is an attack upon a stage coach, and there is suspense in almost every inch of this wonderful story.

WEBER & FIELDS MAKE PICTURES REGARDLESS.

In filming "Two of the Finest," the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation's forthcoming release, the famous comedians, Weber and Fields, are at the pinnacle of their delivery of superb comedy. Inclement weather did not daunt them nor dampen the ardor of their comedy and they were able to use the streets of Chicago as a vast stage upon which they produced what has been said to be one of the most laughable productions in which they have ever appeared.

Dressed in the garb of two German policemen, they cut capers on the busiest thoroughfares of that city, causing gigantic crowds to collect. The thousands of people who daily watched their antics, sometimes standing to their ankles in slush and snow, went wild with enthusiasm at seeing their favorite comedians in close proximity acting before them.

"THE WORD" (Lariat).

For the production of an unusually touching western photo-drama entitled "The Word," which will be released on the United Program June 5, William V. Mong, scenario editor, assistant director and leading actor for the Lariat Company, whose two-reel photoplays are released through the United Film Service, gathered together an exceptionally strong cast, including Winnifred Greenwood, the well-known screen actress, made popular through the Mutual. The scene of the drama is set in a picturesque spot in the mountains, broad vistas of which may be seen as the rude stage coach labors up the side of the hill, and is finally attacked by bandits. The lonely little town, the homely "meeting house," where Billy Whiskers" is converted and "hits the sawdust trail," the disappointment of the evangelist's daughter, when her "Billy and the Boys" rob the bank, make up a drama of unusual heart interest. Supporting Mr. Mong and Miss Greenwood are F. D. Hahnankratt, Esther Hough, Grace Frigh, E. F. Power, J. F. Underwood, H. R. Sims, Phil Jossenberger, Jack Donahoo, Burt Rockie, Vic Frith, George Snurr and N. C. Cheney.

"THE IRON HAND OF LAW" (Lubin).

This is a very dramatic chapter of the serial. By the aid of Daisy, the show girl, Dane is brought back to the city and there discovers that Alene has been decoyed to Jerome's apartments. The two arrive just as Jerome drinks the draught from the silver cup which kills him. The officers are summoned and insist that Alene has a hand in the tragedy. She is helpless to explain and is arrested. Dane, realizing strong circumstantial evidence against Alene, is heartbroken, but the girl herself is only pathetically bewildered that she should be shut up in a prison cell. Mary Charleson and Crane Wilbur feature very strongly in this chapter which calls for intense acting.

DOLLY LARKIN WITH MINA.

Dolly Larkin and William Ryno are the latest acquisitions to the producing force of Mina films.

Miss Larkin (in private life the wife of George Larkin, also a well known photoplayer) has been in picture work for several years, during which time she appeared in productions made by the Universal companies, Frontier, Edison and others.

Mr. Ryno, too, has had wide experience before the camera. Six years ago he was a member of the Nestor Company, and has since that time been engaged with other organizations.

The two new players make their first appearance with Mina Films in "Father Forgot," a single reel comedy which is to be released on the licensed program, Thursday June 10th.

"THE SOUL OF THE VASE" (American).

A fanciful and well played drama is "The Soul of The Vase" a one part "Flying A" subject released June 9th. Robyn Adair, as Jason, the wildly ambitious potter, and Beatrice Van, as Rene, his wife, acquit themselves in a manner truly artful.

Scene from "The Soul of the Vase" (American).

The piece calls for exceptional ability, in that it is built about a visionary situation which is probably unique in moving pictures. The strong features of Robyn Adair are exceptionally well adapted for the clay and kiln crazy Jason while the striking blonde Miss Van, at once catches her audiences' sympathies in her role of the unloved wife. Joe Harris' acting in the role of Clark, the connoisseur, who seeks to steal the wife's affections, is commendable.

FINISHES KLEINE'S "THE SPENDTHRIFT."

George Kleine's "The Spendthrift," founded on Porter Emerson Browne's celebrated Broadway success, was finished by Director Edwin at the Kleine Studios last week, following a protracted period of diligent and conscientious work.

Irene Fenwick, the dainty star of "The Song of Songs," will be seen in a role exactly suited to her talents in "The Spendthrift," supported by two other well known Broadway thespians in Cyril Keightley who is appearing with Miss Fenwick in "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge theater, and Malcolm Duncan, long known to theater goers as a leading man for Harrison Grey Fiske.

"The Spendthrift" has been made in typical Kleine style with its characteristic thoroughness and minute attention to detail. In fact, the "retakes" have consumed almost as much time as the original negative, due to Mr. Kleine's desire that "The Spendthrift" reach as near the goal of artistic perfection as possible.

Most of the "retakes" have been made on Mr. Kleine's orders for reasons that would seem trivial to other manufacturers. For instance, one scene was remade because the property man had provided a stock ticker that was not of the latest pattern, while another was remade because an interior "set" was not sufficiently elaborate. It is these things, say critics who have witnessed advance showings of the subject, that will make "The Spendthrift" one of the most remarkable dramas in film. The subject is scheduled for early release through the Kleine Offices.

"PAYMENT IN FULL" (Reliance).

"Payment in Full," a Reliance drama produced at the Reliance-Majestic studios in Los Angeles by Giles Warren, has an especial appeal to any one who has ever had anything to do with a land-shark, and victims of land-sharks are numerous.

A young couple, Willard McCourtney and his wife, buy a supposedly glorious farm and find it a mere bit of rock. Their last and only $2,000 went for the "farm" and so they are reduced to want. The husband becomes a waiter.

In the restaurant he sees the land-shark. A little later he rescues the shark's daughter from a white slaver. He also picks up the pocketbook of the man who had swindled him, which had fallen to the floor. He takes out $2,000 and puts in place of the money a receipt signed by himself.

Frank Bennet and Anna May Walthall play the would-be farmer and his wife. They are precisely the types of western settlers with which people are familiar. Jack Cosgrave plays in a very effective manner, the land-shark. The action of the piece is very convincing.

UNIVERSAL TO BURN SHIP.

The Universal Film Mfg. Co. paid a large sum in cold, hard cash on Thursday, May 20, for the privilege of burning up the three-masted steel ship, "Aggie Nord" which was wrecked recently on a shoal off Santa Rosa, one of a group of islands in the Santa Barbara Channel, about sixty miles from the city of Santa Barbara.

Director McRae and his entire company have left already for Santa Rosa Island, which will be their headquarters while the play in which the burning scene occurs is filmed. The company will camp on the island and by means of launches will go to and from the Aggi Nord, around which the play will center.

Director McRae's company will consist of fifty persons with extra cameramen and equipment. The three-reel feature will be crowded with melodramatic features including the destruction by fire of the Aggi Nord in one of the final scenes.

"UNDER THE CRESCENT" (Universal).

The second adventure of the "Under the Crescent" series, featuring the Princess Hassan in the episode of "The Cage of Golden Bars," William Dowlan and Edna Maison supporting, will be released under the Gold Seal brand (Universal) on June 8.

Particularly elaborate Oriental sets were constructed for this episode of the six-installment serial. In one scene, reproduced on this page, a caravan of camels enters a street in Cairo constructed at no little expense. The set is nearly two hundred feet deep and more than 150 natives take part in the action.

Turkish bazaars line the roadway and the minaret of a mosque looms up in the middle of the background. Beyond the archways of the mosque the street continues in the distance.

The "Under the Crescent" series relates in modified form the startling adventures of the Princess Hassan as the wife of the nephew of the Khedive of Egypt, the Prince Ibrahim Hassan. Miss Ola Humphries, an American actress, married the Prince Hassan several years ago and during her stay in the harem took a number of photographs which will be utilized in forthcoming issues of the serial.

"DIRTY FACE DAN" (Reliance).

Replete with scenes of childhood interest to children is "Dirty Face Dan," one of the child detective stories which the brothers Franklin are making at the Reliance-Majestic studios.

Little Dick, the small would-be detective, is now seen endeavoring to aid Olive.

She has followed out the instructions of her fairy book and has planted money in the ground that it may grow into more money, but she finds the ground disturbed and the coin gone. "Dirty Face Dan" is suspected by little Dick, who is called into the case.

partments, and little Dick has heard of it. The third degree gives him the whole story of "Dirty Face Dan's" misdoing. Dan is tried in a court presided over by a small judge and is sentenced to have his face washed.

Violet Radcliffe, who regularly plays the villainess, is cast as "Dirty Face Dan." George Stone is little Dick, while Betty Marsh and Francis Carpenter are other principals.

No player in the Franklin company is older than ten years.

RALPH STUART IN "THE KICK-OUT,"

Ralph Stuart, as the star in "The Kick-Out," the first three-part feature drama of Knickerbocker Star Features, will be seen on the General Film program, in his first screen appearance. He is true to the characters he has often interpreted, and displays the physical prowess displayed in his great work "By Right of Sword." No less forcible and convincing was Mr. Stuart in "Strongheart," "The Rainbow's End," "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," and many of his other strong character leads.

In "The Kick-Out" Mr. Stuart is the mayor, suspected by a people who had been driven to desperation through the intrigue, graft and cunning wits of the party in lead, all of which centered in the boss. The mayor is to be neither bought nor pushed; he fears neither political threatenings, nor public complaints, but holds to a just and careful investigation of the entire political situation.

The Boss holds the city in his relentless grip; at his feet are the political masters while the railroad magnates, and other great trust heads find that his favor is essential to their own personal profit. But the Mayor wins out in his fight against the Boss through the assistance of his daughter and a newspaper man, only to have the people turn against him, believing him to be the real culprit, and when alone in his home he is attacked. Windows are smashed, and the crowd bursting into the room, prepare for murder.

Stuart, as the Mayor, faces the crowd; a realistic fight follows; with a piece of statuary for a weapon he makes his final stand, when the reporter enters, showing the people they have missed the mark,—that the Mayor is their friend. In the midst of the chaos of the place, the Mayor, torn, bleeding and trembling from his fight, smiles on the union of his daughter and the reporter, a reward for the valour of the young newspaper man.

THE HEROIC GARIBALDIS.

The Kaiser Film Company, of 110 W. 40th street, announces that it has recently received from Rome about six hundred feet of motion pictures which were taken by two expert cameramen of a big Roman film company on the occasion of the funeral of Bruno Garibaldi and the great popular demonstrations in the Eternal City. Among some of the most striking scenes are the demonstration of the people in the historic Piazza del Popolo, the appearance of the Ambassadors of France, England and Russia in the funeral procession; the company of veterans of the Garibaldi campaign carrying their old battle flags and cheered by the multitudes, Ricciotti Garibaldi, the father of Bruno Garibaldi, in the midst of a popular outburst of enthusiasm. The most impressive moment is the stoppage of the funeral cortege before the windows of the Belgian embassy near the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore. Here the procession comes to a halt, while the flags carried in the procession are massed together and lowered in friendly greeting. The titles are in English and Italian. While the length of the film is but a little more than half a reel it is very timely just now in view of Italy's entrance into the war. As a historical record it is of especial value.

A LUBIN TWO-PART WESTERN.

"From Champion to Tramp" is the title of a novel two-reel drama, recently completed by the Lubin Company at Phoenix, Ariz., under the direction of Romaine Fielding, and released on the regular program June 17. Fielding is featured in the play, and he plays the role of the world's champion mile runner, who, as a result of being falsely accused of being crooked, is banished from athletics and becomes a wanderer on the face of the earth.

Lasky's Summer Releases.

Producing Firm to Put Out Exceptional Feature Offerings for Paramount During Warm Weather.

THE Lasky Feature Play Company announces that it has made arrangements to increase rather than diminish the number of its releases through the warm weather of June, July and August—no less than eight of its strongest subjects will be released on the Paramount Program. The final revised list of summer releases includes the following:

On June 14th will be released Edgar Selwyn in the remarkably spectacular picturization of his own play "The Arab," which is the most elaborate and costly photodrama yet done by the Lasky Company. This will be followed on June 28th by the fourth picture in which Blanche Sweet has appeared under Lasky management, "The Clue," by Margaret Turnbull, a remarkably intricate and fascinating mystery and detective story.

On July 8th, Victor Moore, who scored such a notably laughable success in "Snobs" will make his second photodrama appearance in a screamingly funny picturization of that Irish classic, "Chimmie Fadden," the taking of which has just been completed at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, California. The next offering, on July 15th, will be the initial photodramatic stellar engagement of Charlotte Walker, who will play the star role in a remarkable picture version of the world-renowned American problem drama "Kindling" offered by the Lasky Company through an arrangement with E. J. Bowes.

On July 19th Laura Hope Crews, famous for her legitimate dramatic successes in Belasco and Frohman Broadway dramatic hits, will make her initial photoplay appearance in the Lasky-Belasco picturization of Belasco's famous production "The Fighting Hope." The "Puppet Crown," a picturization of Harold MacGrath's novel of the same name to be released on July 29th, will be notable both as the second Ina Claire picture and as the first Lasky production in which Carlyle Blackwell, the latest male star added to the Lasky forces, will be seen.

The two productions scheduled definitely for August up to the present moment are Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Orchard" on August 9th and Fannie Ward in "The Marriage of Kitty" on August 16th. Miss Ward is to leave New York for the Lasky studios within a few days. Practically all the other productions in this list are already well under way.

A moment of analysis will reveal the fact that this list makes practically a weekly release for the Lasky Feature Play Company for a period of two months. Though the Lasky Company has heretofore on occasions released productions in rapid succession, it has never before supplied any such list of offerings for a long-continued period of time.

ALL CELTIC START ON FOURTH COMEDY OF SERIES.

Director J. A. Fitzgerald and President C. C. O'Mara, of the All Celtic Films, Inc., took a large company of players down to Coney Island to enact some unusual exterior scenes for the next comedy of the Adventures Of Peaceful Rafferty series entitled "Rafferty Goes To Coney Island" which bids fair to be a great deal funnier than the last one.

"THE DARKNESS BEFORE DAWN" (Lubin).

This is probably one of Shannon Fife's most dramatic stories embracing love and villainy, virtue and unfortunate misunderstanding. All, however, is mended in the end of the story and a beautiful woman proves herself a noble creature. The cast is unusually strong, including Ethel Clayton, Joseph Kaufman, Earl Metcalfe, William H. Turner and Octavia Handworth. The story is too long to tell here, but the picture will doubtless be a pronounced success and espcially favored by the lady fans of the silent drama.

Will Play Leading Roles

Animal Actors Cast by David Horsley for Principal Parts in New Wild Animal Pictures.

WITH the construction of his new studios in Los Angeles well under way, David Horsley is now casting his charges in the Bostock Animal Players, the largest collection of wild animal performers in the world, for parts in the animal pictures he will produce.

In the accompanying picture are the three leading members of the animal troupe in a reposing attitude after a strenuous rehearsal under the direction of M. Gay, one of Mr. Horsley's trainers. These rehearsals have been going on for several days but even in this short length of time Mr. Gay declares his pets have developed symptoms of latent ability as motion picture actors.

The center of the group is held by Apollo. As his name implies, Apollo is handsome—in fact, he is the handsomest lion in the world, and because of this distinction he has been cast to play all "hero" parts. Judging from the photograph he is beginning early to assert his rights as leading man, for here he takes up his position in the center of the stage.

At the right is Nero. Nero lays no claim to beauty but he is distinguished by being the largest lion in captivity. However, bigness carries no special favors so Nero had to be content with an assignment to mere character roles.

Tiberius, at the left end of the group, seemingly oblivious of all surroundings, is the villain. Well may he play the part in pictures for in ordinary animal life he is known as the most ferocious, but withal the most intelligent, of the entire troupe.

Being gifted with unusual intelligence will enable him to contrive some interesting schemes to outwit his rivals, while his ferocity will stand him in good stead to carry out his plots. As a villain he ought to make matters interesting for Apollo. Tiberius does not seem to be particularly ferocious, judging from the picture, but like all "heavy" men he gives no outward sign of his machinations. Besides, the picture does not do him justice, since he has just rehearsed a difficult scene in which he was vanquished by Apollo, which accounts for his lazy attitude.

PATHE HAS TWO STRONG PLAYS.

Pathe has acquired two very strong plays in William J. Locke's "The Beloved Vagabond" and Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper."

"The Beloved Vagabond" is one of Locke's most successful novels and was presented on the London stage by Mr. Beerbohm Tree, England's most famous actor. The novel enjoyed a wide popularity in this country and had a large sale. It is a story that is delightfully fresh in plot, and has many tense and powerful situations relieved by unusually good comedy. Edwin Arden, who plays in it the part of "Parogot," considers it one of the best he has ever enacted. Mr. Arden and Bliss Milford are the nucleus of a very strong cast which has been assembled by Edward Jose, who will produce the picture for Pathe. It will be in five parts.

"The Galloper" was played by Raymond Hitchcock for a number of seasons, and was then made into a musical comedy. It is a highly amusing farce detailing the adventures of a young millionaire who finds himself compelled to take upon his shoulders the identity of a muchly married war correspondent, Kirke Warren. The story has a Graeco-Turkish atmosphere, and the millionaire while dodging bomb shells and divorced wives goes through many uproarious situations.

Donald MacKenzie, who is to produce the picture for Pathe, is assembling an excellent cast, the members of which will be announced in a few days.

"JUDITH," AS AN EDUCATIONAL.

Biograph's Masterpiece Enthusiastically Received by Members of Jewish Charity Organization.

At the annual meeting of the New York branch of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, an international philanthropic institution, held at the Strauss Auditorium of the Educational Alliance building on the East Side, Sunday afternoon, May 23, Biograph's "Judith of Bethulia" was exhibited, accompanied by a lecture by Secretary Behar, for the purpose of acquainting the members with the history of the Jewish people of that period.

"Judith" was first brought to the attention of Mr. Behar at a motion picture theater on the lower East Side where it was being exhibited, and after seeing the masterpiece at the theater, the secretary saw the wonderful good that could be derived from an exhibition of the film before the members of the Alliance; whereupon he asked permission of the Biograph Company to exhibit it, which permission was granted.

During the course of his lecture, Mr. Behar drew attention to the faithfulness of the costuming throughout the picture, the fitting characteristics of the people of that time, the wonderful detail for which the production is noted, the heroism of the beautiful Judith and the similarity of the scenes of the Holy Land as compared with the exteriors that were used for "Judith," taken in California. Although Mr. Behar had travelled extensively in the Holy Land, he was frank to confess that, were he told that the exteriors were taken in the Holy Land, he would not dispute it, so marked was the resemblance.

From both an entertaining and educational standpoint, the exhibition was as large a success as the secretary had looked forward to, a unanimous round of applause being the answer when the secretary moved to send the Biograph Company a word of thanks for their kind permission to exhibit "Judith."

THE PARAMOUNT TRAVEL SERIES.

Charles C. Burr, writing about the travel series of the Paramount Company, says: "As I see each succeeding release of the Paramount Travel Series, I am amazed at the quality, both in subject and photography that can be maintained by a weekly. I am also astonished that the idea of releasing a Series of Travel Pictures in one-reel subjects never occurred to any one before. The demand of the public for instructive—even educational subjects, in small doses particularly, has never been questioned. The pictures that draw the best class audiences, that fill the Lyceums and Opera Houses of the large cities to their utmost—the pictures that people gladly pay from 50 cents to $2.00 to see, are the travelogues of Elmendorf, Burton Holmes, Lyman Howe and others. These same pictures might not prove so attractive without the lecturer, because more than 5,000 feet are generally shown at one sitting. However, it was the consensus of opinion that pictures like these, but in installments, could be given to the people at large, and should be given them, not withheld from those not able to afford from 50 cents to $2.00.

"Not only are these pictures of inestimable value to the children studying geography—giving them an actual knowledge of the great countries to the South and stimulating interest in their studies, but they are of interest from the point of view of everybody. The business man gets some idea of the kind of a country and the people he would have to deal with should he branch out into South America. The layman is interested in the peculiar animals, sports, pleasures and occupations, all faithfully portrayed and beautifully photographed and colored. The traveler is taken back to the time he passed through the country shown and he lives again, what were very likely, the best days of his life."

ESSANAY CARTOON SERIES.

Essanay has now included in its regular release program a new feature that bids fair to be a tremendous success. This is a series of cartoons. The characters are brought to life and move across the screen just as real people. "Dreamy Dud" and "Joe Boko" originated by Wallace A. Carlson, are the funniest caricatures that have appeared for years. "Dreamy's" many adventures with his dog "Wag" would set a deacon to roaring with laughter. The first "Dreamy Dud" adventure is "A Visit to the Zoo." On the same reel, released May 26 he appears with "Wag" in "An Alley Romance." On June 9, you will see "Dreamy," "Lost in the Jungle," while old "Joe Boko" shows Ping Bodie a thing or two in "A Close Shave."

ENID MARKEY IN ORIENTAL PHOTOPLAY.

Enid Markey, the beautiful young star of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, heads the strong cast that will be presented soon in the third spectacular Oriental production made under the direction of Charles Swickard at the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino studios. Mr. Swickard's previous productions were "The Renegade" and "A Piece of Amber" and each was replete with splendor, both in point of costuming and settings. The third is entitled "The Soul of Phyra," a Domino released June 17, and is expected even to eclipse the others by its magnificence.

Supporting Miss Markey in the cast are Hersche Mayall as Captain Brenner and J. Frank Burke as the High Priest.

THANHOUSER MAKES "THE COUNTRY GIRL."

Edwin Thanhouser is beginning to make it evident that he will resume his policy of issuing at intervals a play taken from a book or stage production. The first announcement comes with "The Country Girl," a farce comedy which Director Sullivan is now engaged on at the Thanhouser studio. The old time theatrical folk will remember this charming little play, which was first given in America at Daly's theater, now a land mark of New York City. Miss Ada Rehan appeared in the part of Peggy when it was first presented here. The Thanhouser version is taken from the story by David Garrick, who rewrote it some time after it was first produced in 1675 in London. It is a pithy, fast moving story of an old English Squire, who is in love with a too vivacious country girl. She has a great many admirers, for which reason the old fellow announces that he will take her to London to marry her. But some of her beaux are not to be thus outwitted, and when the Squire arrives in London the simple little country girl becomes a vixen of the most distressing type. The situations which follow are very clever, and one of the novelties in the picture is that Miss Florence La Badie (who plays the title part), dresses in the clothes of a young English youth of that period. Carey Hastings, Harry Benham, Morgan Jones, Justus Barnes and Claude Cooper make up the fun-loving company, and the heartless little country girl finally marries a young man to her liking. A novelty in the production is the introduction of an epilogue; this is in the form a speech by the character Peggy, and while she speaks the words appear on the sheet. "The Country Girl" will be in two reels and will be released on the 15th of June.

INSIDE POLITICS IN "THE GOVERNOR'S BOSS."

Though the screen story back of "The Governor's Boss," which is starring ex-Governor Sulzer and Pauline Hall, does not follow the actual history of the impeachment, there is enough pre-election and after-election material in the picture to make it of tangible value as a recorder of facts. Interwoven among the fibres and strands that lead up to the impeachment, with its political intrigues, thrilling escapades, and surging election crowds, is as dainty a romance, as delicately handled, as any poet's imagination could conjure. Those clever little touches put the real heart-interest into the film, and make it of as much value as a human document, as it is a real account of political boss-ridden States.

Written around the novel and play of ex-State Senator James S. Barcus of Indiana, the picture visualizes "inside" politics as it is really played in big cities and states. It is the punches which Director Davenport has injected into the scenario, which give the audience an insight into affairs with which it never comes in contact, and has no means of knowing anything about. It depicts just how candidates are "nominated" and made to obey the will of the "power behind the throne," and how the "invisible government" puts across the "work."

FROHMAN STAGES A "FOOD SHOW."

With three hundred people, a military band of forty pieces, a specially constructed set and six merchandise booths which are exact replicas, Manager Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is to be commended on the similarity of his makeshift Food Exhibit, which plays so prominent a part in George Ade's "Just Out Of College" and the actual Food Exposition which ran last year at the Grand Central Palace.

Built as it is on a platform, 80x40, with two tiers of seats behind that, the entire effect is exceedingly real, and further detail which heightens the value of the scene, is the manufacturers' goods which are displayed. There are booths for many big manufacturers, and then come the "prop" exhibits necessary for the story, "The Bingo Pickle Company" and "The Pickling Pickle Company."

GREAT TEMPLE SCENE IN "THE MOONSTONE."

"The Moonstone," the five-part photoplay on Wilkie Collin's famous novel which World Film Corporation is releasing shortly, starts its action in India. The moonstone is a very valuable diamond placed in the eye of an image of Buddha, which stood in a great temple in Delhi. An adventurous Englishman, defying the priests who guarded the Temple; the Statue of Buddha; and, of course, the precious diamond, stole the latter, and, in modern parlance, "got away with it."

This incident starts the action of the photoplay; and in order to render it effectively on the screen, World Film spent money lavishly. An entire month was spent in erecting the temple interior at Fort Lee. All the wooden panels and fittings are hand carved. The statue of Buddha is ten feet high; the great diamond shines brilliantly in the forehead of the god. In the novel, Wilkie Collins writes very effectively about the weirdness of this scene. Its weirdness will be vividly suggested in the picture, which will include elephants and other accessorial aids to splendor of effects. The Temple scene will be one of the greatest successes of a great picture.

"WHAT HAPPENED TO FATHER" (Vitagraph).

Frank Daniels is now working on his second Vitagraph Picture, a three-part comedy entitled "What Happened To Father," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, in which the comic opera King has a role that fits him like the proverbial glove. "What Happened to Father," when released will be a Broadway Star Feature masterpiece.

A REFINED AND ELEGANT SOUVENIR.

The right kind of a souvenir, the kind that adds to the popularity of a motion picture theater without hurting its dignity in the least, is sure to be welcomed by many thousands of exhibitors. Such a souvenir has just been designed and put upon the market by the David J. Molloy Company, of 633 Plymouth street, Chicago. This company issues what is known as the Photoplay Stars Novelty Service. This service supplies the exhibitor with beautiful and finely made pictures of motion picture stars reproduced on leather and suitable for the making of home decorations and novelties. All the big organized groups of producers and their constituent parts are represented in this service, which thus includes every photoplayer of prominence. The souvenirs are extremely pretty and artistic and there can be no doubt that they will make a big hit with patrons wherever they will be offered. There is a variety of designs, some of the portraits coming in smooth and others in embossed borders, all borders showing great taste and originality.

Whoever starts collecting these charming leather souvenirs will want to complete at least one big set and many patrons will no doubt want them all. The company provides the exhibitor with a little booklet for distribution to his audience showing a large list of useful and ornamental articles which may be made out of these pretty souvenirs. Among such articles are pillows, piano scarfs, portieres, table covers, table mats, waste baskets and lamp shades. Even the smallest collection would make a most desirable addition to the den, clubroom, camp, nursery and the home. The booklet contains fifty beautiful home decorations that can be made from these leather pictures.

"LIFE'S MYSTERIES" (MinA).

Although MinA Films have attained a reputation for releasing rapid fire comedies, it is probable that no one of their previous productions has embodied such humorous situations and fast action as in "Life's Mysteries," a single reel comedy to be released Thursday, June 3, on the licensed program.

"Life's Mysteries" is the first MinA picture to come from the new studios on the coast, and is directed by Milton H. Fahrney. In the cast are Louis Fitzroy, Jane Colwell and Jefferson Osbourne.

The story evolves around Count Padinsky, who supplants young Billy in the affections of Flossie, a pretty girl who adores tall and handsome men—which Billy is not. Angered at the Count's intrusion Billy sets out to obtain revenge. His opportunity arrives when, on the night of a big reception given in honor of the nobleman, he learns that the Count's big frame is not the real thing but—mostly pads. With the help of some friends Bill decoys the Count from the ball. They take him to a secluded spot in the woods, where he is divested of his pads and forced into a ballet dancer's costume. Then he is brought back to the house, where his outrageous costume and his ludicrous appearance incite a near riot. The Count finally escapes, leaving Billy free with Flossie.

As is usual in all MinA Films the acting and photography, as well as the detail work, is carefully done in this picture.

BUY "PROHIBITION" FOR ILLINOIS.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago, have bought "Prohibition," for exhibition in that territory. The deal was consummated last week by Aaron J. Jones, representing the Chicago vaudeville magnates, and J. L. Kempner, associated with Robert T. Kane, representing the Prohibition Film Corporation at 220 West 42d street, Mr. Jones having made a special trip to New York for this purpose. This theatrical firm operates sixteen theaters in and about Chicago and is a big link in the Marcus Loew Vaudeville Circuit. "Prohibition" will be played in all of their houses and in other towns where they do not own theaters.

Mr. Jones believes in "Prohibition," the film, as a great working man's picture and says: "The strongest element in favor of 'Prohibition' as an entertainment is that it is an entertainment and not a sermon, and that it is a story, sufficiently strong to draw in its own merits, independent of the dynamic moral lessons contained. The patrons of my theaters are as varied as they are many. There are multitudes who would object to a feature film that was only a film tract, 5,000 feet of Sunday morning service. But I know that by investing considerable money in the state rights 'Prohobition,' I will please every man and woman who wants to see a great motion picture. It is possible that I will play the picture for a run of four or six weeks in the Studebaker or La Salle theater, which correspond in importance to the Broadway theaters in New York."

A LUBIN NAVY DRAMA.

A remarkable series of motion pictures of various branches of the United States navy in action forms the background of the three-reel Lubin drama, "The Insurrection," written and directed by George W. Terwilliger and released on the regular program June 16. The story centers about a navy lieutenant who is in love with a beautiful South American girl. The latter's father is the head of a band of revolutionists who do everything in their power to embroil the United States in their quarrel. They finally succeed in doing this and the navy goes into action and speedily blots out all traces of revolution.

PEARL WHITE FAVORITE OF "CHAMPION FAN."

Mrs. Barbara Guentert of St. Louis is called by the "Post Dispatch" of that city, "the world's champion picture fan," and with good reason. It seems that Mrs. Guentert has missed only two evenings in over five years in seeing the picture show at the Fairy Theater on Easton avenue.

Together they have spent 1,800 evenings at the theater, have paid $180 in admissions, and seen 9,000 different films.

Mrs. Guentert, it may be seen, can certainly lay claim to being a picture expert. When asked to name the players she thought the best, she mentioned only four, all of them famous, one of them being Pearl White, the Pathe star.

GOOD WORD FOR "THE GODDESS."

William Osborne, manager of the "Chester Theater," the Strand of Weehawken, N. J., wishes to compliment Vitagraph on their serial "The Goddess." On Monday night, a night when little or no business is done, as a rule, the first and second episodes were run with great success. The audience was more than satisfied, and the proprietor smiled when he summed up his receipts. It is the finest of its kind, and certainly is a money getter.

"THE TAVERN KEEPER'S SON."

"The Tavern Keeper's Son" is the title of a strong and picturesque Spanish story that has just been filmed for the Mutual Program by the Broncho-New York Motion Picture Corporation. It is to be released June 9th. Frank Borzagé plays the title role.

PROTECTING (?) EXHIBITORS.

By An Exhibitor.

To the Editor of the Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—We have all read, at times, articles in the moving picture trade journals advising exhibitors to raise the prices of admission on big features. And who has advocated such action? The heads of the various film concerns, naturally, and the big men in the game of motion picture exploitation. And why did they advocate such a step? Because they realized that it meant more money for them, and more money for the manufacturers. It meant that big features would be permanent.

The big men have taken the step, for in most cities a minimum admission price of ten and twenty cents is available where Paramount, Metro, V-L-S-E, World Film and Kleine programs are exhibited. The productions are better and are, thereby, worth more money, but in some instances the man with the little house isn't given half a chance to make an honest living. And why? Simply because some exhibitors are so infernally hoggish that they are willing to lose from five hundred to a thousand dollars a week for several months in order to keep the man with the little house from making his expenses.

The proposition, in this instance, is then: Are the manufacturers of the big features protecting the exhibitors? Is the advocation of this advance in the price of admission helping any? Are all the exhibitors heeding the advice?

Emphatically they ARE NOT. When the man with the 300 seating capacity house books big features that cost him more than his average day's receipts, what else can he do but raise the price of admission in order to make expenses? And when the man with the 1,500 seating capacity house books big features just as good, and DOES NOT advance the prices of admission, and advertises very strongly that his house shows the same pictures for half as much money, what is the man with the 300 seating capacity house going to do? Simply sweat and wonder why God made such nefarious, blackguardly specimens of humanity, pack his belongings and leave the town with regret that such a thing as moving pictures were ever invented.

Again, let me ask, are the manufacturers of these big features protecting the man with the little house? And emphatically again they ARE NOT. Can they protect the interests of exhibitors at large if they will? They CAN, very, very easily. How? By compelling every exhibitor that uses their productions to charge a minimum admission price of ten and twenty cents.

I do not mind being frank with you readers, and telling you that I am wearing my life away trying to hold out against a man that has no principle. My show is a losing proposition, and just because the men that manufacture big features do not protect their exhibitors.

The motion picture industry is one of the most thriving things in existence. It is uplifting. Preachers everywhere are acclaiming this fact. It has become a recognized fact by all civilized nations, but even the "little man of no consequence" can pick a flaw in the work of the very biggest man in the business.

Will manufacturers, exchangemen and exhibitors consider this little article as coming from a man that is sincere in his efforts to help the cause along; one that is fighting honorably for existence; one that is willing for co-operation, and has asked for it more than once? Will the big men take notice of the fact that they are sending souls to hell, demolishing happy homes, and causing corruption by not protecting exhibitors that are striving honorably for a foothold? Where is the ever lauded manhood of this picture game? Come to arms!

Neutrality At Shows

Many Philadelphia Exhibitors Agree to Show No Scenes from the European War Fields—Stanley Mastbaum, an Exchange Man, Took Lead in Movement and Is Indorsed by Mayor Blankenburg—Theaters in the Strict Neutrality Agreement.

Special to Moving Picture World from the Philadelphia News Service.

MAYOR Blankenburg, of Philadelphia, recently expressed his approval of a movement set on foot by the exhibitors of this city to refrain from the showing of European war scenes during the diplomatic crisis which has arisen over the sinking of the steamship Lusitania.

Stanley Mastbaum, head of the Stanley Film Exchange and proprietor of a number of moving picture theaters, recently dictated a letter to the Mayor offering to omit all war scenes and suggesting that Mr. Blankenburg publicly indorse this policy in order that other theaters and film exchanges take similar action. The Mayor replied to Mr. Mastbaum as follows:

"Dear Sir.—Answering your letter, I think that it is wise for you to omit all scenes relative to the existing war from exhibition at your theaters. It would be to the best interests of the public if all exhibitors would join you in this movement.

Very truly yours,
Rudolph Blankenburg,
Mayor,"

Following this epistle, war views were omitted at the following theaters: The Stanley, Arcadia, Palace, Leader, Germantown, Orpheum, Locust, Ruby, Alhambra and the Great Northern. All of these houses are in the habit of showing typical services from the Pathe, Hearst-Selig, Gaumont, Mutual and Universal companies, and each reel containing war views was omitted. The following announcement was flashed on the screens: "Owing to present conditions and the desire of national leaders for calm action and thought, the management has decided to omit views of the European war."

In every instance this slide was received with wild bursts of enthusiasm. The war scenes had formerly evoked both cheers and hisses despite the showing of President Wilson's request for the "higher neutrality."

Boycott Case in Montana

Helena Musicians' Union Carries "Unfair" Banner in Front of Empire Theater—Had Refused to Engage Five Musicians—Former Supreme Court Decision Forbids Injunction—A Judge's Opinion on Case.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

UNTIL precedents by the Montana Supreme Court are reversed boycotts against moving picture theaters, if peaceably conducted, are legal.

Judge J. N. Clements of the district court at Helena refused to issue a temporary injunction restraining the musicians' union from boycotting the Empire theater at Butte, because the state supreme court decision in a similar case prevented. An appeal to the supreme court was announced. His regret at the absurdity of the technicality is apparent in his opinion.

"The defendants contend that the carrying of the banner in front of the plaintiff's place of business, bearing the words 'Notice: The Empire theater is unfair to organized labor,' was only a request to members of organized labor and their sympathizers to refrain from patronizing the plaintiff's business, and involved no threat, or veiled intimidation.

"I cannot agree with this contention. One or two persons might have demanded that the plaintiff surrender his inherent right of personal choice as to whom he should employ, and that transaction alone would involve a mere request, but when his refusal to comply was followed by a boycott involving an overwhelming number having the power to injure and destroy, it becomes a self-evident threat. The menace or threat is involved in the numerical strength back of the demand.

"While the law on the subject of boycotts as declared by our supreme court in the Lindsay case and the Dilno case is repugnant to my personal sense of justice, and contrary to that declared by the courts of other jurisdictions, both state and federal, it stands as the law of this state on this subject, and as a judge of the district court I am bound by it. Unfortunate, in my judgment, for the law-abiding people of this state, it is nevertheless the law as it stands declared by our supreme judicial authority."

The case grew out of the refusal of the management of the Empire theater to engage five members of the musicians' union for each performance at the house. The musicians' union declared the house unfair. The Silver Bow Trades and Labor Council was appealed to to assist in the boycott. It was made the defendant, along with the individual members of the two organizations. Boycott banners, as they are termed, declaring the theater unfair to union labor, were carried in front of the house. The testimony of those connected with the theater was to the effect that this had a serious effect on the receipts. Suit was brought to have the unions enjoined from prosecuting the boycott further, and a temporary restraining order was issued. It was on motion to vacate this order and the application to make the injunction permanent pending the final decision of the case that a long hearing had.

VOTING CONTEST CAUSES MUCH TROUBLE.

Ill feeling has been engendered at Helena over an automobile contest conducted by a theater there. "Miss Birdie McKay, a clerk in the last legislature who entered the contest at the last minute, won the machine," says a press report. "A section foreman named James Doyle, who bought $770 worth of tickets and lost, complained to the authorities. Miss McKay said that she had been induced to enter the contest by a man by the name of Clark of Great Falls, who put up the money and also paid her $100 for her trouble. The machine was turned over to him as soon as she won it. A warrant has been sworn to charging Clark with grand larceny."

There must be some local ill feeling engendered by this unpleasant situation and it can hardly help being of some disadvantage to the theater.

FILMS CHANGING SCHOOLS.

Minneapolis Hard-Shells Make Protest Against Influence of Theater on Public Schools.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

"EVIDENCE is constantly accumulating of the influence the theater is exerting on the public schools, and this influence through different means amounts to a propaganda in favor of the theater as an institution," reads a petition from the Swedish Salem Mission Church at Minneapolis to the school board. Things objected to are the advertising of films in schools, giving theater tickets as rewards for school accomplishments, etc.

Principal Albert Gullett, of the Precott School in northwestern Minneapolis—the direct object of the attack—has announced his intention of going ahead with his plan. He hopes by the next school year to have a longer list of educational subjects. One of the contentions of the objecting parents is that all forms of "show amusement"—pictures or theaters—are wrong ethically or contaminating to Christian life. The issue sprang forth when about 400 children from the school and some of their parents saw the Williamson submarine pictures through the courtesy of the Arion theater.

"You never saw anything more wonderful than the enchantment with which these children took their glimpse into an unknown world. Whole new vistas were opened up to them," said Mr. Gullett, "and no opposition that could be made would convince me that there was anything wrong in presenting these pictures to the children."

A mother of four children championed the pictures: "Wrong?" she said, "Why, I think this showing of pictures to the children is the finest thing the school has ever done. What could be 'wrong' in showing the mysteries of the ocean floor, the wonders of fish life, the methods of deep-sea diving and sponge fishing and the geography of countries under the sea."

The error of such deep-seated disapproval of the theater or anything that smacks of it is pointed out to the objectors by the Minneapolis News. "Should they stop to consider that the film exhibit has been the most effective influence ever devised for putting the bad theater out of business," it reminds them, "they might modify their opposition to the public school plan."

Pictures and the People

Evanston, Illinois, Is Taking a Keen Interest in Programs, But Especially in Modern Popular Comedies—Charlie Chaplin's Work Warmly Discussed—Many Think It Funny, Others See the Vulgar Things.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE people of Evanston seem to want to thresh out the moving pictue question. Evanston women have been acting as a voluntary board of censors but there is dissatisfaction with a certain type of comedy shown. As a result the city council has appoved the request of Alderman Kingsley that an ordinance for a censorship board be drawn. It is understood that this board will have police power.

The issue is clearly defined in events following a talk before the Congregational Current Events class by Mrs. T. P. Stanwood, one of the voluntary censors.

"On coming out of one of the Evanston moving picture theaters lately, the manager politely accosted me and said, 'You found all the pictures this morning satisfactory, Mrs. Stanwood?' 'All but one,' said I. 'You know how I feel about that last comedy picture. It is low and vulgar and cheap. It is degrading.'

"'That is odd,' replied the manager. 'A prominent business man of Evanston just dotes on that kind of picture, and he asked me to telephone him fifteen minutes before that kind of a reel is shown, so that he may run over and enjoy his morning laugh.'

"The next week my censoring task continued until almost one o'clock one morning, and sure enough, when this foolish rowdy extolling picture was shown, in walked the prominent business man."

The News Index refers editorially to this business man as one "who enjoys the respect, esteem and affection of everybody who recognizes a most excellent citizen. * * *

"Now, we, ourselves, are bored by Charlie Chaplin, and consequently were we motion picture habitues would choose other nights for our visits to filmland, yet we do not consider that our tastes are necessarily finer than those of the prominent business man (though the designation was far more conclusive than that). We simply are not amused. Nevertheless tne fact remains that Charlie Chaplin can fill a motion picture theater more satisfactorily to the manager than any other attraction. And with what sort of people? Every class to which Evanston lays claim. Men and women prominent in every sort of activity in Evanston may be seen, in spite of the fact that they are warned by the bill-boards in the lobby what is to be expected within. And they never leave during the exhibition of the film. Young people, presumably, from their appearance and manner, students in the university are entertained by Charlie Chaplin."

Regarding what it calls the crucial point of the moving picture business in Evanston the Review says: "Mothers are gathering en masse in the small groups to discus the demoralizing effects on the children of a certain type of moving picture.

"The marvelous thing about it is that they have waited so long to make this protest. But now that they are thoroughly aroused, it is hoped they will continue in action until no picture house dares show a film that has not been approved by a body of mothers capable of judging the merits of moving pictures as bearing upon the morals of their children."

"The News-Index believes that the managers of the motion picture houses in Evanston have honestly tried to deal fairly with the best element of their patronage. They have willingly and courteously submitted to every reasonable demand made upon them. * * * It is quite within parental authority to protect their children, if they chance to agree that the amusement is harmful."

SNAP SHOTS AT PROGRAMS.

A matinee of "Julius Caesar" was given for the St. Ann's guild of the Episcopal church by the Yale at Carbondale. Local papers in Gibson City praise Miss Pearl Rue, pianist at the Lyric, for playing the pictures. An industrialog put out by the Holeproof Hosiery people is being run in many Illinois houses co-operating with local dry goods stores. Dreamland, at Farmington, is now running only three nights a week.

The Majestic, Lyceum, Columbia and Empress theaters at Peoria, are accepting "Travel" coupons issued by merchants for admission. A mile in travel is valued at five cents. The Empress gives a half-mile coupon at its Tuesday and Thursday matinees. The Majestic at Kewanee has a new Bartola. It has been reopened and follows the same policy as the West theater at Galesburg, five to eight reels. The Orpheum at Cuba gave a benefit for the Cuba cubs, local basketball team. W. W. Watts is conducting a short but snappy voting contest at the Gaiety in Springfield, with a Maxwell touring car as first prize. Patrons of the Electric at Manteno recently saw Manager Reilly singing in a film and he appeared in person and sang the song. The Lyceum at Wyoming sent a moving picture camera man among its citizens and homes for special night material. Two houses in Evanston had Pythian films. The Hoyburn showed the pictures of the big golden jubilee parade at Chicago with the Evanston lodge in line and two nights later a local lodge sponsored "Damon and Pythias" at the Star theater.

The Princess and Star theaters at Dekalb are working the stunt with the Dekalb Chronicle. Prizes are offered for scenarios. The Republican Era at Murphysboro is conducting a similar venture. The Amity society's treasury was replenished by a benefit show at the Majestic at Freeport. A ticket to Scott's theater was given with every pound of coffee by a Jacksonville grocer. Manager Rosenthal of the Majestic at East Dubuque has made his lobby the terminal for an autobus line. The Gem at Altamont gave a benefit for the Sunshine Society.

ILLINOIS BRIEFS.

Sam Lears of the Lears Theater Supply company of St. Louis, recently was at Staunton and considered locating a plant there for the manufacture of theater supplies.

Mrs. Lilian Brown Ingraham of the censorship board at Quincy told the Star theater to put a minimum age limit of 18 years on the Jess Willard love story film because some parents might object to a prize fighter in a picture of any kind.

"I sincerely believe that the mission of the church is to serve the community," says Rev. A. O. Stixrud, pastor of Epworth M. E. Church at Elgin, in explaining why his church purchased a machine and will give picture shows every Friday night. He says that militant antagonism of the saloon is allied to preaching the gospel and that merely condemning amusements is wholly negative. A small admission will be charged for three reels.

Charles H. Adams, operator at the Palm at Rockford, joined the Benoist Aircraft Company of Chicago, as mechanician and camera man. He will use his own design of camera to film exhibition flights, and the factory will make a specialty of pictures taken from overhead.

Airdomes Boost Business

Kansas and Missouri Enjoy Many Open Air Theaters During the Hot Months—Marked Increase in Demand for Pictures Due to Them—Exchanges in District Prospering—Kleine Opens Kansas City Office.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE moving picture business in on the upward climb in Kansas City and the territory surrounding it. The travelers that have been in the city lately have all brought in excellent bookings and announce that most every town in Missouri and Kansas are sure to have from one to four airdomes. These are much more popular in the country than they are in the city. Only a very few have been opened in Kansas City and a great many in the territory. The theaters in Kansas City are making extensive arrangements for the cooling of their theaters through the summer and some of them claim to have them cooler than they could by natural resources. The managers of the exchanges all report that the bookings throughout the territory are much heavier than they have been for some time.

Business has been so good that George Kleine opened new offices here with John Hardin as the branch manager. They have a long list of releases with such features as "Quo Vadis," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "Antony and Cleopatra," "For Napoleon and France," "Between Savage and Tiger," "Spartacus" and other four to eight-reel features, besides a great number of one and two-reel pictures.

F. F. NINE GOES WITH V-S-L-E.

F. F. Nine, formerly of the Pathe exchange, has taken a position with the Big Four. Mr. Nine was employed at the Pathe office for some time. E. E. Heller, formerly manager of the Varsity theater at Lawrence, Kan., succeeded Mr. Nine at the Pathe company.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH KANSAS?

Since the state of Kansas has long been dry the censors have decided that everything in the state must be dry and it usually is, including the soil. They have decided that the moving pictures must absolutely be dry and that the actors and actresses cannot be seen even drinking water as if some of the vulgar Kansas patrons could possibly think of them drinking anything else. Since the state has also barred cigarette smoking it is entirely likely that they will demand that all the actors smoke cigars in the pictures or pipes—anything but cigarettes and liquor. W. D. Ross, in defense of his action as superintendent of the censors, says: "Kansas is a prohibition state and few of her children ever see a drunken man and few ever see the inside of a barroom, even outside the state. It does not seem proper to me that the children should be permitted to see scenes of debauchery in the movies that they cannot see with their own eyes in Kansas and seldom anywhere else."

CHURCH WILL LET HALL FOR PICTURE SHOWS.

Moving pictures in churches showing Bibical pictures and such religious educational features has been advocated quite extensively for some time. But the first church to open its door for hire to picture shows is the First Christian Church at Eleventh and Locust streets, Kansas City. The church recently built an addition to the building in which they have installed an up-to-date moving picture machine. The auditorium at the church is designed to seat 800 and the committee has announced that this auditorium is open for hire.

KANSAS CITY NOTES.

Manager Durrin of the Twelfth Street theater says that the business at his show, which, by the way, is the only ten-cent show on a street lined with a maze of five-cent ones, has been excellent during the first few weeks of the hot weather. The theater is cooled by means of electric fans and has several large exhaust fans to aid them.

The Century theater, one of Kansas City's burlesque houses, has been converted into a moving picture theater for the summer months. Joseph Donegan, the manager, is now showing two-reel features each day and evening. Reliance films seem to predominate on his posters.

C. M. Howard, traveler for the Pathe company, was in the city for a few days last week. Mr. Howard is out on the territory a great deal of the time and very seldom gets into the city and then it is only for a short time, he says, as the business is increasing so rapidly that it needs his constant attention.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange, recently returned from Clarksville, Ark., where he has been for the last week on business. Mr. Edwards left the work at the local office in the charge of L. A. Sheridan, who was in the city off of the road. Mr. Sheridan says that he spent the week as a most capable manager and did about as much business as Mr. Edwards usually does during a week. Mr. Edwards says that he was somewhat surprised at the amount of business accomplished by Mr. Sheridan while he was out of town.

Nathen Block, owner of the Orpheum at Atchison, Kan., has started repairing his theater, which was almost destroyed by the ceiling falling while no one was in the house.

MISSOURI NOTES.

L. A. Bauer, at Gallatin, Mo., has shut down his winter show and has opened a first-class airdome for the summer. He will use the Pathe service.

Gus Bennert, of Springfield, Mo., has sub-leased the store room at 137 Kirby arcade for a moving picture theater. He has agreed to pay a rental of $62.50 for the room and to keep the front of the building neat and attractive and to dispense with all loud and sensational placarding and draping.

The Sky Dome, Springfield, Mo., new name for the open-air summer theater opened for the season recently, and has announced that it will have the service of Prof. Gehrs' orchestra and the feature films will be shown on Tuesdays and Fridays.

Miss Helen Robertson, a Springfield, Mo., young lady, was seen in her home town for the first time in the cast of "A Celebrated Scandal," at the Jefferson theater. The theater was crowded with the friends of Miss Robertson and they keenly enjoyed her part more than all the others in the entire film.

The House Cozy at Springfield, Mo., is showing the Pathe series, "Who Pays?"

CINCINNATI NATURAL GAS CO. HAS INTERESTING FILMS.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Union Gas & Electric Co., which serves the public in Cincinnati with natural gas and electricity, gave a free picture show at the convention of the National Gas Association of America. The films dealt wholly with the natural gas industry and showed variety of effort and energy connected with production and distribution of natural gas. The pictures shown, which are entitled to high rank among the educational pictures which have become so popular and useful in the trade, start with the drilling of the gas well, the various processes involved in shutting in the gas and getting it under control, and pass from that phase of the industry to the construction of pipe lines hundreds of miles in length, and finally to the distribution of gas to the consumer, and its use in the home.

LUBIN THEATER'S BRIGHT ADVERTISING.

The Lubin theater, one of the leading houses in Cincinnati, and a prominent member of the popular group on Fifth street, between Race and Elm, has been keeping its displays of big features productions before select classes, as well as the public in general, by various clever advertising stunts, not the least of which,

as shown last week in the return engagement of "The Escape," with Blanche Sweet, in some effective direct-mail publicity. A neat folder, briefly referring to the production and giving the cast, contains on the inside a reproduction of a letter from a prominent Cincinnati lawyer praising the play very highly, and declaring that every lawyer and doctor in the city should see it, on account of its value as a commentary on sociological conditions. This leaflet, with several other pieces of advertising matter was sent to every lawyer and doctor in the city, in a sealed envelope, with first-class postage, and undoubtedly had a large influence on the attendance at the Lubin during the week. "The Escape" ran for several days at the Lubin several weeks ago, and proved so popular that the management secured it for a full week's return engagement, beginning on May 16.

EXIT QUESTION DELAYS FRANKEL'S LICENSE.

Manager I. Frankel, whose new Hippodrome theater, the largest in Kentucky, and one of the very handsomest in the vicinity of Cincinnati devoted exclusively to moving pictures, was recently opened to the public with much success, was naturually considerably surprised last week when, on application to the city authorities of Newport for the usual license, he was informed that there was an obstacle to his securing it. On inquiry Mr. Frankel found that the authorities held that the theater is not equipped with a sufficient number of exits, although every requirement of the ordinances and regulations of the city was complied with scrupulously, in its construction. The city commission, on Mr. Frankel's representation to this effect, directed the mayor to investigate the matter, and it is expected that the license will be issued, as it appears that there is some misunderstanding on the part of the authorities. The house involves an investment of about $75,000 and Mr. Frankel would obviously, as he points out, not fail to comply with the usual requirements regarding exits.

FAMOUS PLAYERS' CINCINNATI QUARTERS.

The Famous Players' Film Service, of Pittsburgh, which operates the service through the Paramount program is released, has secured handsome and entirely adequate quarters in Cincinnati on Walnut street, in a building which has just been completed by Herman Elsaesser, a well-known restauranteur. The upper floors of the building have been leased for a term of five years, and are being fitted up for the use of the Paramount people in a manner which will make them second to none in the city for film-exchange purposes. They will be occupied as soon as the necesary work involved in the improvements is completed, which will be about June 1.

CINCINNATI BRIEFS.

The last of the Charles Frohman film productions, "The Moth and the Flame," filled a successful engagement under the Paramount program at the Strand last week, having a peculiar interest by reason of the sad end of the famous theatrical magnate on the Lusitania.

The widely-discussed moving pictures showing Pope Pius X and a gathering of the college of cardinals in the Vatican, to which were devoted a leading article in a recent number of a popular magazine, were shown last week in Cincinnati to a private audience, consisting of leading Catholic clergymen, a number of exhibitors, and others interested.

A House That Didn't Pay

Detroit's Best Paying Picture Theater, the Washington, Leased by John Kunsky for Another Year—Until He Took It, House Had Been a Failure; But Best Pictures and Showmanship Changed Tale—A Lesson in How.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JOHN H. KUNSKY, present lessee of the Washington theater, Detroit, has renewed the lease for 12 months, and so the Washington will continue to play high class motion pictures until September, 1916. At this particular time it would not be fair to Mr. Kunsky or the motion picture industry to just announce the fact of the lease renewal without saying a few words about the history of the Washington. It was opened some three years ago as a dramatic stock playhouse, some of the best known talent in the profession appearing there. This policy continued for a year, during which time managers changed hands several times. Stock productions proved a failure and then musical comedy was tried, followed by a short season of grand opera. All of these attractions lost money for the promoters. Then pictures were tackled, but they were not put on right and they also proved a failure. The house closed in July, 1914, with many unpaid debts. The theater itself is beautiful, but is off the main thoroughfare. John H. Kunsky, looking around for a large downtown theater, consulted the directors of the Washington. He succeeded in acquiring it on a year's lease at a rental of $24,000 and opened it in September of last year. For the first few months it was no easy matter to get people over to that part of town, even with the best pictures. Mr. Kunsky kept up the standard of attractions, made improvements each week, enlarged his organization and the result is that today the Washington is considered the leading photoplay house in Detroit. One thing is certain, it is doing the biggest business, with prices at twenty-five cents for evenings and ten and fifteen for matinees. Most of the pictures shown at the Washington are from the Paramount corporation, although Mr. Kunsky is always on the lookout for any features which are worthy of exhibition to the best people and that can command the admission price charged at the Washington. The success of this theatre under Mr. Kunsky's direction shows what can be done with motion pictures if properly put on. The present house manager of the Washington is M. Harlan Starr.

ATLAS MOTION PICTURE CO. TO BUILD STUDIO.

The Atlas Motion Picture company, 800 Liggett building, Detroit, which started business about eight months ago, is so well satisfied with business conditions and future prospects, that it has purchased 20 acres of ground in the North Woodward section and plans within 60 days to begin the erection of a modern motion picture studio, to be all-glass, and on a par with the most up-to-date studios in the east. The company is just completing a one-reel comedy called "On the Golf Links," featuring Jerry Gamble and Happy Allen. Already 21 prints of this film have been sold. One comedy production every week will be the policy of the company during the next three months, increasing the number when the proposed studio is completed. A. C. Miller, photographer, formerly with Pathe, is now associated with the Atlas company.

THE LAKEWOOD NEARLY READY.

The Lakewood theater, at Jefferson and Oneida avenues, seating 1,500 and costing in the neighborhood of $75,000, will be completed and ready to open about June 15. It will cater to the people of Fairview and Grosse Pointe, both suburbs of Detroit. E. H. Rogers, 398 Montclair avenue, Detroit, is the architect. It will be operated by the Lakewood Theater Co., of which John Cutler is president.

SOCIAL MEETING OF LEAGUE.

The Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitiors' League held a get-together meeting at its new club rooms, 183 East Jefferson avenue, on Tuesday evening, May 11. The "doings" started at 10.30 p. m., and were attended by about thirty members of the league. A Dutch lunch was served. The only business matter that came up for discussion was the coming annual meeting of the state association, which takes place at Lansing, June 8 and 9. As there are no serious complaints before the local or state associations, the future meetings will be in the nature of social sessions and will be for the purpose of keeping the members together and prepared for problems pertaining to the industry which may arise at any time.

COULD LECTURE AND HAD GRIT TO TRY.

Clare J. Brokaw, house fireman at the Washington, is one man who appreciates the word "opportunity." During the week of May 16 the Williamson Submarine pictures were the attraction, lectures being given in connection with the film. The regular lecturer was late one afternoon. Brokaw noticed the difference in the atmosphere, and said to Manager Starr: "Gee, it seems funny to look at these pictures without any lecture." He informed Mr. Starr that he knew the talk word for word and that he would be willing to "help out" until the regular lecturer came back. It was agreed that he should go on at once and lecture. He did fine. In fact, so good that Mr. Kunsky hired him to lecture with the pictures which had been booked at the Garden and Alhambra theaters, although he had no intention originally of having a man to lecture with the pictures aside from the Washington theater engagement.

DETROIT BRIEFS.

H. W. Irons, who was originally engaged to manage the Norwood theater, at Woodward and the Boulevard, and resigned a few weeks ago to temporarily manage the Garden during the illness of A. C. Hoganson, has decided to accept the Norwood management and will assume charge when that playhouse opens.

Excavation for the addition to the Globe theater, Grand River and Trumbull avenues, is well under way. This will materially increase the seating capacity. The cost of the addition and the remodeling of the present building will be about $40,000, exclusive of equipment and new furnishings. The changes include a new entrance, new marquise, new picture screen, new interior decorations and remodeling present stage.

An East Side Commercial Club was organized at a meeting held Friday, May 14, consisting of business men on the east side. More than $50,000 was pledged for the erection of a $400,000 office and theter building to be erected at Chene and Warren avenues.

The Gladwin Park theater, Jefferson and Gladwin avenues, makes the following announcement in its weekly program: "Patrons who wish to buy tickets in amount of one dollar are furnished a neat leather holder for same. Securing tickets in advance avoids waiting in line and is a convenience for our patrons." Manager Edward Murphy of the Gladwin says at least several hundred people have taken advantage of this new plan.

"The Red Seal of Quality"

George Ade Discovers the Slimmest Princess

It is not the Slim Princess' fault that she is "skinny." Alas! she does everything possible to remedy it, even to the eating of many pickles, which malicious Popova has told her will help because—

Fat is beauty, slimness almost a crime in Morovenia, where the Slim Princess' father reigns in obesity and contentment—that is, contentment in all things save his daughter's slimness. She is the elder child and must, under Morovenian laws, marry before her sister, Jeneka, who is F-A-T and, therefore, beautiful. She is disconsolate until —

Comes one Alexander H. Pike, wealthy and American, whose ideas of pulchritude are occidental and not —decidedly not—oriental. He sees the Slim Princess, admires her svelte, dainty beauty and—American-man fashion—proceeds to win her.

He does not do it until the Slim Princess has made a trip to America in search of a medicine that will make her so fat that she will waddle when she walks. She does not find the medicine, but she does find Pike and happiness.

In "The Slim Princess" Mr. Ade says the Essanay Company has produced the greatest photoplay-comedy it has ever been his pleasure to witness. Through all its 4 acts Ruth Stonehouse is irresistible as the little princess who cannot become fat. She is ably supported by Francis X. Bushman.

All the branches of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay (Inc.) are now booking "The Slim Princess."

Opposed to Free Slides

San Francisco Exhibitors Protest Against Requests for Unpaid Screen Advertising —Feel That Anti-Tuberculosis Slides Hurt Effect of the Entertainment—Cards to Hand Out Solve One Problem.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE question of running slides free of charge at picture houses has become a vexing one here and the matter was taken up at a recent meeting of the local league. Secretary Marks reported that he had received a communication from the Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis asking that this organization be allowed to run slides in the various theaters operated by members of the league in an effort to educate the public against promiscuous expectoration. Several members expressed the opinion that slides suggestive of diseases would prove harmful to the houses showing them, and while they approved of the work of the society in question they felt that there were other methods of publicity that would prove as effective as this. H. J. Gosliner, of the Edison theater on Powell street, told of a plan that has been adopted by him for stopping expectoration in and about his theater, and which had proved very successful. Small cards have been prepared with the inscription in bold type: "Please do not expectorate here. It is against the law." Whenever an offender is detected one of these cards is handed to him and the practice invariably ceases, without any argument or confusion.

While it is realized that in some instances it is necessary to accommodate friends and run slides free, the local exhibitors have agreed to refer applicants for such privileges to the local league and it is believed that in most instances the matter will never be carried further. Efforts are being made to cut down the number of slides shown and to have these pertain as much as possible to coming attractions at the various houses.

SPOOR VISITS THE COAST.

George K. Spoor, vice-president of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., was in San Francisco this week inspecting the magnificent new exchange and coast headquarters that have been opened at 986 Market street. While here he visited the Essanay studio at Niles and later left for Los Angeles to inspect the new studio there. He was delighted with the beauties of Northern California, but could remain here only a short time, having come West on a business mission. The San Francisco offices are now ready for business and bookings are being made on some productions, releases to be about the end of the month. It is planned to get the headquarters here in good running shape before opening branches elsewhere and for a time the entire coast business will be handled from San Francisco. Tom North, the representative chosen for the Northwest, will look over this field shortly and will decide whether Portland or Seattle will be chosen for an exchange site in that territory. The Los Angeles territory will be looked after by H. D. Naugle, formerly with the General Film Company, while R. B. Quive will be the San Francisco representative.

SCHOOL BOARD FAVORS MOVE FOR BETTER FILMS.

The Board of Education of Grass Valley, Cal., has indorsed the movement started by the women of the civic study section to secure better moving pictures for the children at moving picture theaters there. It has been decided to ask the management to put on subjects that will be instructive as well as entertaining, and every effort will be made to comply with the request. No censorship will be exercised there, but instead the school authorities will co-operate with theater owners to secure a better selection of pictures.

POPULAR EXCHANGE MAN GIVEN ROUSING FAREWELL.

The regular weekly luncheon of the film men of San Francisco was given on May 15 at the Portola-Louvre Cafe, the guest of honor being Tom North, who is leaving shortly for Portland, Ore., to take up his new duties as manager of the interests of the V-L-S-E, Inc., in the Northwest. More than fifty exchange men and exhibitors were present to wish him success in his new field and many and sincere were the regrets that business and social ties here were being severed. As a token of their appreciation Mr. North was presented with a handsome Boston bag, a toilet set to go with it, and a silver headed cane, all inscribed, "To Tom North From His San Francisco Friends." The presentation speech was made by H. J. Gosliner.

These programs will consist of topical, educational, travel series, fairy stories and other subjects strictly suitable to the formative mentality of the child.

It is proposed to make up the cost and a profit by showing a number of advertising slides. Two of the leading moving picture theaters are alleged to obtain $10 per week for each slide shown at all performances. Some of the smaller houses obtain about $2 a week for similar service. It is stated that the proposed show will consist of several interesting short subjects, and that slides will be shown between each subject. The plan has not proven successful in some theaters in other cities, it is stated, but it may work out all right in a good downtown location.

Readers may remember the Beecham's pills hymn book. Advertisers will surely get to cheap crowds in these free picture shows.

Schaefer and R. M. Jones, three shares each. The debt limit is the same as the capital stock and the company is authorized to manufacture and sell films and other moving picture equipment. Officers of the company are: E. O. Schaefer, president; R. M. Jones, vice-president; Otto Schaefer, secretary-treasurer. The company takes over the studio and other equipment of the Kentucky Film Corporation which was organized a few months ago, but which was dissolved during the past month. WELL KNOWN AMUSEMENT PEOPLE GUESTS OF COL. LEVY.

Col. Fred Levy, connected with the Keith interests, of Louisville, recently had a party of Eastern theatrical and moving picture men as his guests. The party included A. Paul Keith, E. T. Albee, J. J. Murdock, Henry Ziegler and William Mitchell, of the United Booking Office, which books for the Keith theaters. The party was in Col. Fred Levy's box at the Kentucky Derby, and later motored with Col. Levy to Lexington, Ky., where they were the guests of C. H. Berryman, head of the Ben Ali theater, recently converted into a moving picture house. While at Lexington the party put up at Elmendorf Farm, the noted Kentucky stock farm of the late James B. Haggin, Mr. Berryman being manager of the vast estate. The mansion, "Green Hills," is one of the handsomest in Kentucky and the farm is one of the principal points of interest in the state. Mr. Haggin was noted as a raiser of fine thoroughbred stock of all kinds. Col. Levy is also interested in the racing game.

LOUISVILLE ITEMS.

Jack Herman, of the Selig Company's Chicago office, was recently in Louisville to take pictures of the wrestling bout between Charles Cutler, of Chicago, and Yusif Hussane, the Dallas., Tex., Turk, for the heavyweight championship honors of America. The two men, while not equal in size, were equal in endurance, and the match went over three hours without a fall. It finally wound up in a draw and will probably be staged later on at Chicago or one of the larger cities. More than 10,000 people were present at the match, which was staged on the night preceding the Kentucky Derby.

Mrs. Ralph Whittinghill, proprietor of the Opera House, at Horse Cave, Ky., was recently in Louisville, where she called on the local office of the Mutual Film Company.

Censor Board Elects

Louisville, Ky., Board of Censorship of Children's Motion Pictures Holds Annual Meeting May 9—President Mrs. Frederic Levy Re-elected—Other Officers Chosen—Widespread Interest Being Taken.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MRS. FREDERIC LEVY was re-elected president of the Louisville Board of Censorship of Children's Motion Pictures, at the annual meeting held in Louisville on May 9, in the assembly room of the Louisville Free Public Library. Other officers to serve during the coming year are: Mrs. Helm Bruce, vice-president; Mrs. Emil Tachau, corresponding secretary; Miss Annise S. Waters, recording secretary; Mrs. J. B. Arbegust, treasurer. The possibility of interesting children through the school rooms in the Saturday morning picture show at the Mary Anderson theater was discussed. Mrs. Frank Rosenbaum stated that while the Board of Education, of Louisville, has indorsed children's pictures, it is forbidden by law to advertise the pictures through the school. Mrs. Herbert Mengel and Mrs. John Little made the point that as the work of the Board of Censorship is educational, the school is the proper place to interest children in the movement. Action on the matter was deferred until the fall meeting of the board.

Letters were read from various cities, telling of the widespread interest the movement has created and asking suggestions as to its inauguration. A delegation will represent the board at the annual meeting of the Parent-Teacher League to urge its co-operation, and put before its members the value of children's pictures. Among the most interesting letters read were those from Miss Helen Duey of the Woman's Home Companion; the Parent-Teacher Association. of Spokane, Wash.; and president of the Woman's Club, of St. Joseph, Miss.; C. L. Williams, of the Chamber of Commerce, of Bowie, Tex.; from Atlanta, Ga., and Salem, Mass. These communications asked for co-operation and advice in organizing children's motion picture boards of censorship. Mr. Williams, of Texas, wrote: "The Censorship Board, of Louisville, is working in an excellent cause and deserves not only the supoprt of the city and state governments, but of the Federal Government as well." The other letters commended the work of the board and said that the need for better films for children was universal. At the motion of Mrs. John Little it was voted to close the Saturday morning pictures when the playgrounds open. The constitution was amended and Mrs. Levy was elected a delegate to represent the work of the board at the meeting of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs.

BENNETT SEATING CO. IN DIFFICULTIES.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Bennett Seating Company, of Louisville, by Berry Brothers, varnish manufacturers; the U. S. Glue Company, and the Hincher Manufacturing Company. The claims approximate $850. The Bennett Seating Company was formerly located at Cincinnati, O., but came to Louisville about a year ago with the intention of getting closer to supplies needed in manufacturing seats for moving picture theaters, schools, churches, etc.

PHOTOPLAY CLASS GRADUATES.

Fifteen students, comprising the only Y M. C. A. photoplay class in America, finished their course on Tuesday night, May 11. Public exercises were held in honor of the occasion in the assembly room of the local Y. M. C. A. Stuart W. Cayce, formerly instructor, talked on a recent trip through a number of the leading film studios. L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Company, owners of the Majestic theater, delivered a short address. Officers of the Photoplay Club were elected and refreshments served.

CHILDREN'S FEATURE STOCK SUBSCRIBED.

R. W. Conant, general business manager of the Children's Feature Film Company, of Louisville, reports that the stock in the recently organized company has practically all been subscribed, and that several contracts will be closed inside of the next few days. A studio, which has a number of exceptionally good points, and a central location, will probably be leased inside of the next week. Repairs and improvements amounting to about $1,000 will be necessary on the building under consideration. The impression has been established that the company will make pictures of children for children, but this view is not exactly correct though the company will use some children in its productions. The idea will be to make clean pictures for clean-minded children, or grown-ups, to see. A Bell & Howell camera will be purchased, and the company will also purchase two large automobiles for transporting its actors from the studio to points of scenic interests, residences, etc. An option has been obtained on a series of stories for children by one of the foremost authors of children's stories. The movement has been endorsed by the women's clubs of the country and Mrs. Helm Bruce, of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs, has arranged to secure the support of that organization. She has also taken the matter up with Mrs. Percy Pennybacker, of Austin, Tex., who is president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs. Mr. Pennybacker will take the matter up with the national association at the annual meeting to be held in Seattle, Wash., in July. Mr. Conant will leave Louisville in a few days for Eastern points, where he will close some pending deals. It has been decided to have all films developed and finished at Chicago, and, instead of conducting exchanges, the productions will be sold or handled through some of the large concerns which are already conducting exchanges. The slogan of the company is "Pictures My Children Can See," and the productions will be known under the trade title of "Aladdin Films."

TWO PROMISING YOUNG MEN.

Ernest Carpenter, of the firm of Carpenter & Johnson, is now giving almost his entire attention to taking local motion pictures. He recently made the local society play entitled "Billy" in which a number of Louisville's elite appeared on the screen in well known local surroundings. The first run or trial run of this picture was made on Monday evening, May 10, at the Majestic theater, after the final performance. The play was witnessed by a number of film men, exhibitors and local newspaper men, and was said to be exceptionally good. Mr. Carpenter has installed developing apparatus at his home and is now working up a good many of his smaller pictures himself. "Jack" Johnson, his partner, is holding down one of the cashier's positions at Churchill Downs race track during the present meeting. Mr. Carpenter is killing two birds with one stone by handling the operating room at the Parkland theater at night.

Pittsburgh Picture City

Smoky City Film Lovers in Clover—Everything Worth While Comes to Their Screen Early—Programs De Luxe at Many of Neighborhood's Leading Theaters and Master Films Are Plentiful Every Day.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

BEGINNING Monday, May 17, Harry Davis of the Davis theater, started his new policy of continuous performances from 10 a. m., to midnight, at which the greatest photoplays of the period will have their first Pittsburgh exhibitions. This marks a new era for the pictures; for, in addition his patrons have a brand new theater, completely appointed, magnificently furnished and perfectly ventilated—a theater entered from three main thoroughfares, Smithfield street, Sixth avenue and Oliver avenue. Fine musical accompaniments are provided for each of the picture plays. The admission is 10 cents to any seat in the house.

Mr. Davis and J. P. Harris of the Grand Opera House have booked all the photoplays produced by the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig and Essanay companies, the William Fox features, the Mutual masterpictures, the World's Film Corporation and the Metro service. This means control in downtown Pittsburgh of film masterpieces for the Grand Opera House and the Davis theater during the summer season.

"CABIRIA" AT THE MILES.

The splendor attained by the modern motion picture has been demonstrated in a manner rather startling to conservative Pittsburgh playgoers in the production of "Cabiria" in the new Miles theater. Of course, the furore the picture has caused in and about Pittsburgh is largely due to the lavish manner in which Mr. Miles has put on the production. A chorus of one hundred voices sings at all evening performances, and there is also brought into play the great $40,000 organ, without which the picture would lose something from the effect of its spectacular qualities. During the past two weeks the Miles has been packed at all performances. The transformation of the house from a home for popular priced vaudeville into a first-class photoplay house has been quite striking. A long line of limousines flank the street for several squares in and about the vicinity of the Miles theater each night, and every one who leaves the house comes away loud in his or her praise.

CRAFTON'S FOTOPLA A BEAUTY.

The Fotopla, the handsome playhouse of Crafton, Pa., was thrown open last week by Messrs. J. W. Rhodes and F. F. Hyde, proprietors, and is one of the most beautiful and artistically equipped of the suburban picture theaters. The color scheme is worked out in light brown and the first impression one receives on entering the theater is of a gloom-dispelling nature. The lighting is of most improved style. The seats, nearly 500 in number, of Circassian walnut, and the carpet and draperies are a harmonizing brown. There are five six-foot exits and the aisles are four feet in width. That peculiar and appropriate attribute of a theater, the marquee, it is very handsome. Messrs. Rhodes & Hyde have decided to offer patrons the Paramount pictures, William Fox pictures, the Mutual masterpictures and other features.

PITTSBURGH BRIEF NOTES.

Charles A. Lange has bought from John and Joseph DeMuth a lot 30x100 feet, on which is a one-story brick structure used as a nickelodeon building in the south side of Spring Garden avenue, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., for $6,500.

The Sheridan Square theater in East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., with John P. Harris as president and Charles P. Dempsey as manager, started an exclusive picture policy last week, using V-L-S-E and Alliance films, each subject being used two days each. This is a vaudeville theater with 1,500 capacity and it ran moving pictures last summer with much success.

J. F. Smith, who formerly owned picture houses in Elwood City and Evans City, Pa., has bought the Grand at Barnesboro, Pa., from A. Lansing. This house has a capacity of 320 and is a good proposition.

Henry A. Landau and O. C. Raeder have purchased the Winner theater, East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa.

JACKSONVILLE NOTES.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville (1429 Ionia St.), Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A THREE reel Kalem subject, "The Destroyer," produced by Robert Vignola at the local studio, featuring Alice Hollister, in "The Dance of Death," was shown at the Grand theater Tuesday, playing to crowded houses throughout the entire day.

Geo. E. Smidth, who has been manager at the Prince theater for the past eight months, left last week for Columbia, S. C., where he assumes a like position at the Ideal theater. Mr. Smidth is succeeded here by Mr. J. H. Whitney, formerly advertising manager of The Southern Investment and Amusement Co.

Mr. R. V. Anderson representing the North American Film Corporation, with headquarters in Atlanta, was in the city a few days ago in the interest of their serial "The Diamond from the Sky," which he reports is going big over the entire south.

Mr. O. P. Hall, formerly manager of the Prince theater here, but who has for some time been with the Fox Attractions, with headquarters in Atlanta, was in the city this week on business.

Mr. Kissneck, also of Atlanta, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, was in the city for a few days.

On Monday of this week the Emperial theater began with the first installment of the Vitagraph serial "The Goddess," playing to capacity business. On Thursday the third of the V-L-S-E Blue Ribbon pictures, "Graustark" also played to capacity. Miss Bessie Welsh versatile soprano, who styles herself, from ragtime to opera, is the singing attraction at the Emperial this week.

"Little Johny Jones" has left the Florida Motion Picture Co., to open in Musical comedy with his own company at the Florida Ostrich Farm. They are also running one reel of Keystone Comedy. With good car service and free gate admission they should do good business.

The Republic theater, which has been running World Film, and Metro Attractions is playing to good business regardless of "Florida Weather." Carl C. Smith announces that "Three Weeks" is booked for the near future.

The busiest man in town this week is "Sir" Edwin Baker, who is now in charge of the Pathe exchange, having succeeded Mr. Wilbanks, who was called to Atlanta on account of sickness. If being a good fellow and "reel" hustling will get business, "Sir Edwin" will certainly make the "Rooster" crow.

The last week in Jacksonville will be one long remembered by Arthur D. Hotaling, Director, as well as his brother Garey chief cameraman of the Lubinites. They both rode the "Goat" across the "Desert of hot burning sands," and are now full-fledged Shriners.

E. K. Taylor, formerly cameraman with the Kalem Co., has returned from the Everglades, where he secured about fifteen hundred feet, pictures that are rare indeed. Mr. Taylor has accomplished something that has never before been done, that of photographing the Seminole Indians, which are claimed to still be hostile.

C. C. Gordon is now in charge of the camera work with the Florida Motion Picture Co.

Miss Alice Hollister, and "Bob" Vignola were at the Grand theater Tuesday to see "The Destroyer." They had just returned from St. Augustine where they had gone to make some special scenes.

IN NEW ENGLAND.

Plans have been completed by Louis E. Destremps to remodel the Emmanuel Baptist Church at Acushnet avenue and Nash road, New Bedford into a $35,000 picture theater. The building will be owned and operated by a concern composed of William J. Kervin, Edward Y. Cronin, Fred Wood, Aldege Chausse and Theophile Lebeau. The building will be ready for occupancy in the middle of September.

A moving picture exhibition was given in St. Mary's hall, Lynn, for the instruction of the members of the Holy Name society of the church. The pictures showed scenes of infantry, cavalry and artillery in action, the firing of 12-inch guns, men at work in the trenches and incidents in the life of a sailor aboard one of the largest battleships in the United States Navy.

Preparations are being made to open the Strand in Providence on Memorial Day. This house is absolutely fireproof and has been under construction since last fall. "Birth of a Nation" Bill

Massachusetts Legislature Passes Censor Bill—Gives to Two People, Majority of Board Made Up of Mayor, Chief of Police and Chief Judge of Municipal Court, All of Boston, Absolute Censorship Power—Danger in Measure.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE socalled "Birth of a Nation" bill became a law in Massachusetts, last Friday, when it was signed by Governor David I. Walsh, as soon as it had been enacted by the Senate.

The bill provides for a censorship board of three members, who, on a majority vote, will have full power to stop any film, which, in their opinion, is obscene, immoral, or degrading to public taste. The members of the board are to be the mayor, police commissioner and chief justice of the municipal court.

The bill, when presented originally in the House of Representatives, provided that a film could not be stopped except by a unanimous vote of the board. Attempts to pass amendments failed in the House, but the Senate, after seven roll calls, secured an engrossment of the bill, with an amendment and this modification was accepted by the House.

The amendment was submitted by Senator Bean of Cambridge, who is elected from a district where negro votes count. At first, it was believed that the amendment would tend to kill the bill, because it was thought that the House would never agree to the modification.

The Boston Transcript, a strong Republican journal, advised the defeat of the petition, calling the amended bill a cowardly attempt to "sacrifice public rights for party votes." This editorial said in part, "Before the censorship bill as amended is placed upon its final passage it behooves the legislature, and particularly the Republican members, to consider and reconsider the cause and effect of this legislation. The cause is to be found in a motion picture play (meaning "The Birth of a Nation") now nearing the end of its run to which some of the colored citizens of Boston object.... The expurgation ordered by the courts failed to satisfy the objectors."

The editorial rehearsed the various stages of the agitation up to the amendment of the bill reported by the house Judiciary Committee and continues, "To pass the censorship bill in its present amended form is to place the Legislature on record as surrendering the rights of the whole people of the Commonwealth to the whim of a small minority who threaten retribution at the polls unless their unreasonable demands are granted."

However, the bill was enacted, after a long debate, during which subdued expressions of bad feeling were shown. Mutterings of treachery and double crossing were made and agitations were whispered that one member of the Senate was trying to "Jimmy Valentine" the bill.

A motion of Senator Hays of Brighton, a leader in the fight against the passage of the bill, for reconsideration of the enactment was defeated.

Before the Senate opened the session at which the bill was enacted, there were rumors of shifts on the bill which would bring about its defeat. Opponents of the bill were rushing about the Senate corridors and reading rooms, buttonholing their fellow members and trying in every possible way to persuade them to vote against enactment.

It was evident all through that many of the Republican leaders made a political issue of the fight.

The supporters of the bill were equally active. They watched every move made by their opponents. When the bill came over from the House where the amendment was enacted, the supporters claimed to have discovered a plot to hold up action on the matter.

Their suspicions were aroused to the limit, when Senator Green, a member of the committee on engrossed rules, whose duty it is to read all measures before they are put on their final passage, took the bill and petition from the clerk of the Senate and passed out of the chamber into the Senate reading room. His absence from the chamber for a time longer than the supporters of the bill believed necessary forced the latter into a state of mind bordering on hysteria.

Immediately it was said that Green's absence was part of a plot to defer action for a day in order that the opponents might have more time in which to persuade the Senate to kill the measure.

Then it was learned that Green was not in the Senate reading room, where he was supposed to have gone to read the bill. This caused considerable uneasiness among the advocates of the bill and they were not assured until the Senator returned to the Chamber with the other members of the committee on engrossed bills and with the measure duly reported.

Finally the bill came up for passage. Senator McLane moved for postponement of a day. Senator Bean opposed this and sought immediate passage. The latter motion passed. The bill was then passed by one vote and sent to the governor and signed. The quill with which it was signed was presented to William Reed, the governor's colored messenger.

The ink on the bill had hardly dried when the leaders of the colored race rushed from the State House to take steps immediately to protest the further production of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation" at the Tremont theater to the new board of censorship created by the act. When the governor signed the act, he is reported as saying, "Any show that cannot get the approval of two of the three members of the board, ought not to be permitted to continue."

It is interesting to note the use which colored citizens make of the law in their attempt to drive this production from the city. They feel confident that they can override Mayor Curley's alleged indifference by inducing, under a new complaint, the police commissioner and the chief justice to take a majority vote for summary suppression of this film, which they claim holds their race to ridicule. They do not have to give any reasons for suppressing the production. Their power is arbitrary and they are accountable to nobody.

Without questioning the motives of the police commissioner and the chief justice, it is well to note, that both are appointive offices. The former is for a term of six years and the latter for life. The mayor is the only member of the board who is elected by the people and accountable to them.

As long as any small part of a community wish to suppress any film or dramatic production, this will is always sure to be an eyesore and a menace.

NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

Manager Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England franchise of the United Film Service, spent last week in New York City on business.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the General Film Company was the recipient of many congratulatory telegrams and several floral tributes last week, on the observance of his birthday. "Ed" refuses to say which one it is. He claims it has no number.

Dallas Film Ordinance

Exchanges Forced to Move from Buildings More Than Two Stories High by New Measure of City Commission—Vaults for Storage Specified—Metal Containers Required—Heating of Building and Handling of Film.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas (1915 Main St.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE City Commission of Dallas, Texas, has drafted an ordinance which sets forth that in no building over two stories high shall there be a film exchange, storing film in the building; that all exchanges be heated by steam or basement furnace heating; that each inspector have only one reel of film out of a fire proof vault at a time, and each reel must not be over four hundred feet in length.

There are a few other features of minor importance that are being fought by the exchanges.

The censorship committee of the Motion Picture Trades Club, composed of L. W. Miller, of the Progressive, E. T. Peter of the United, and Claude C. Ezell of the Paramount, went to the Municipal Building the 17th to confer with the Commission at 10.30, and in talking with the Mayor, were told of this new ordinance which would be voted on at the 11.00 o'clock meeting of the Board.

The exchange men immediately called a meeting of each exchange manager in the city to discuss the matter; and they requested the City Commission to wait until complete information could be given them regarding the various disagreeable features. The Commission agreed to await further action until the 18th, and asked the exchange men to put their recommendations in a written petition.

On Tuesday, the exchange men of Dallas discussed the ordinance with Building Inspector Emmins, Fire Chief Magee and City Fire Marshal in the office of the City Attorney.

Each point of the proposed ordinance was brought up and the exchange men made suggestions as to changes, which were discussed from every angle.

After a session of about an hour and a half, the ordinance was changed to meet with the approval of the film exchange representatives and the committee for the City Commission, and there is no doubt that the ordinance will be passed within a few days by the administration, becoming a law within two weeks' time, which is allowing the exchanges to comply with the different sections of the ordinance.

As approved by the film exchange men, the fire marshal, building inspector and fire chief, it sets forth as follows:

No film exchange shall be in a building of more than two stories of height. (This does not include a building of two stories and basement).

All film must be kept in a vault, as specified below, except when receiving shipments, making shipments or while being inspected or repaired.

The vault shall be of brick, concrete or hollow-tile, with walls thirteen inches thick, and an approved vault door.

Film may be taken from the vault for inspection or repairing but must be immediately put in metal containers on the inspector's table, which must be also of metal. Not more than ten reels for each inspector must be out of the vault at a time. The inspector may take one reel out of the metal container at a time.

Only approved electric lighting is allowed for the vault, with wires in conduit and controlling switch on the outside of the vault.

Film exchanges may be heated with hot water, hot air, steam or natural gas, stoves, but system of heating must be approved by fire marshal or fire chief or building inspector.

The penalty for not complying with the ordinance is a fine of not more than $200 for each offense, and each day will constitute a separate offense.

The ordinance affects every exchange in Dallas more or less; but more particularly those in the Andrews Building, a four-story structure at Main and Akard streets. Those in this building who will have to move within two weeks are Pathe Exchange, Inc., Apex Feature Service, Progressive Feature Film Co., Dallas Film Company, and Picture Playhouse Film Company. In the Busch Building the Standard Film Company will be another to move; and the Big Four Feature Film Company will have to move from the Praetorian Building.

The "joker" inserted in the original ordinance of having reels of not more than four hundred feet in length, has been done away with, the standard thousand-foot reel being permissible.

The objectionable feature of having only one reel out of the vault at a time is satisfactorily arranged by inserting the clause pertaining to the metal container for reels over the inspection tables, in which may be kept as many as ten reels for each inspector at a time.

It is practically certain that all the exchanges effected by the "two-story building" clause will move to the 1900 block on Main street or Commerce street, the next block over, as those two districts contain all the other exchanges and supply houses in the city.

ADS THAT ENTERTAIN.

Atlanta Man's Clever Idea Makes Amusing Screen Publicity.

By Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Strand theater, one of Atlanta's newest and modern equipped moving picture houses, was the first to adopt a new idea in screen advertising.

Instead of the silent and actionless slide, the Strand's animated advertising films has such an interest for its patrons that an applause always follows an unusual action picture.

Atlanta boasts the origination of this novel screen advertising, invented by Carl B. Rountree, an Atlanta man, who has hit the keynote, in that he forces the people to read advertising shown on the screen.

There is running at the present time an advertising film showing a border of ice with a black background. A brilliant sun begins to shine as a polar bear ambles onto the screen with a huge cake of ice, which he drops and breaks into small pieces; the bear rushes from the screen; the pieces of ice begin to chase each other around the background inside the border, finally forming a straight line across and changing into letters advertising a candy manufactured in Atlanta.

So popular has this style of advertising become that many applicants are being held on the waiting list by the management. It is expected that it will be but a short while until advertisers of national reputation will be using this novel form of advertising, as a company is being formed to do this work.

ALAMEDA HOLCOMBE, GEORGIA'S BEAUTY.

Lifted from obscurity of a desk in a downtown florist's shop to the renown of the "most beautiful girl in Georgia," Alameda Holcombe, winner of the Constitution-Universal's Beauty Contest, embarks soon upon a cross-continent trip to the San Francisco exposition, Universal City, and other points in the far west.

The contest closed last Saturday after having run for five weeks, during which time Miss Holcombe obtained 746,000 votes. She is an Atlanta girl, born in this city, and for four years attached to the Hollingsworth Floral shop. This will be Miss Holcombe's first trip outside of Georgia. Miss Holcombe has appeared in local moving pictures, having taken Vampire characters in the "Belgian's Relief" and "Husband or Lover."

JOHN FLYNN IN ATLANTA.

KNOXVILLE BIJOU TO BE PICTURE HOUSE.

By G. D. Crain, Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT Knoxville, Tenn., C. B. Atkin has announced that the Bijou will shortly be opened as a moving picture house. Converting the theater will probably take the next week or ten days, and the opening date has not been announced. The house will be run under the direction of C. B. Atkin, who with associates, owns the theater. A representative has been sent East to make arrangements for film service and look over New York moving picture theaters for good ideas. During the past few weeks a number of regular theaters in various cities of Tennessee have joined the ranks of the picture houses, which somewhat proves how popular high-class films are becoming.

THE LYRIC GIVES WAY TO NEW AIRDOME.

At Nashville, Tenn., a large airdome will shortly be erected on the site of the old Lyric theater on Fourth street between Church and Commerce streets. It is proposed to so devise the structure that the plant may be used either for moving pictures or vaudeville. The establishment will be called the Fourth Avenue aerodome and will shortly be opened by James W. Kean and Jack O'Neal.

MEMPHIS' "COTTON BOLLS AND WEDDING BELLS."

At Memphis, Tenn., over 5,000 children were present to see the Memphis-made picture, "Cotton Bolls and Wedding Bells," at the Lyceum on Saturday afternoon of the last scheduled day for the picture. The crowd was far larger than had been anticipated and the management had considerable difficulty in preventing crowding. The fire department and police department sent men over to see that no one was hurt in the jam around the doors. It was later decided to show the pictures for a week longer so that every one would have an opportunity of seeing them. Nearly 30,000 Memphis people saw the pictures, and as the Business Men's Club had shut down in the beginning on all passes it is a nice little sum left for the publicity department of the club. This fund will be used in showing the pictures throughout the state.

THE MAJESTIC A SUCCESS AS PICTURE HOUSE.

Howell Graham, manager of the Majestic, of Chattanooga, just converted from a regular theater, opened the new show on May 10. The theater is very handsome since undergoing remodeling. The boxes have been tastefully arranged with flowers and potted plants. A trellis arrangement was made at the doors of the boxes with a rose-colored light coming from behind. The music is supplied by a four-piece orchestra in addition to a fine new orchestrion. "The Juggernaut" was the first picture in the theater. The house has drawn crowds since first opened.

A strong combination was recently at the Alcazar, Chattanooga, Tenn., when William Farnum in the "Sign of the Cross" and Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" were shown between the hours of one and six o'clock as a special Sunday performance. This was for the benefit of the Kosmos Cottage Association.

Cold Closes Airdomes

St. Louis Airdomes Blossomed, But Temperature Dropped Twenty-six Points and Spectators Were Fewer and Fewer—World's Correspondent Built Furnace Fire to Thaw Fingers While He Wrote Weekly News Letter.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SUNDAY afternoon, May 16, the temperature took a sudden and unexpected drop of twenty-six degrees, and managers of airdomes that have theaters in connection with their airdomes made a hasty move back into the houses. Those who have only airdomes stood around and shivered while their scanty audiences shook the paint from the seats and benches and kicked up the gravel in an effort to keep warm. The next night was worse, the attendance as well as the mercury kept going toward the zero mark. The optimistic ones said: "It can't last more than two days!" It did. The third day it rained and turned cold enough to freeze a cat's whiskers. The World correspondent stopped his search for items, raked up a hatful of coal in the cellar, started a fire in the furnace and wrote this article, while airdomes all over the city closed up tight as a drum and waited for warmer weather.

COL. OLDHAM HAD A FILM FOR THE OCCASION.

An example of timeliness and the ability to seize and exploit an opportunity was shown by Col. Alf. V. Oldham, manager of the Hippodrome, during the week of May 16. The Catholic Union of Missouri held their 23d annual convention in St. Louis that week, with a big parade on Sunday and a meeting that lasted several days. Mr. Oldham, who owns the films of the parade of the American Federation of Catholic Societies held in Louisville, Ky., the biggest religious procession ever held in this country, arranged to exhibit the films in addition to the regular program at the Hippodrome, and sent special invitations to the pastor of every church of the Catholic denomination in the city, calling their attention to the parade film and inviting them and the delegates of the convention to be the guests of the Hippodrome on any day of the engagement.

AIRDOME ANNEX TO MOGLER THEATER.

Jos. Mogler, proprietor of the Mogler theater, 9th and Bremen avenues, is building an airdome that will in reality be a part of the theater itself, since the audience may step from any of the side entrances right into the open air theater. On Sundays Mr. Mogler plans to give his patrons a big double bill. He will maintain two programs, one in the theater and one in the airdome. The exits will be thrown open and the audience allowed to pass from one place to the other at will. Thirty-seven hundred persons can be taken care of by this arrangement, and Mr. Mogler says that he will be able at last to give seats to all of his Sunday audiences, which he has never been able to do in the past because of the number of people that patronize the theater.

CALIFORNIA GARDEN CHANGES HANDS.

A. D. Lawrence and Chas. Devoto, who have bought the California Garden at California avenue and Sidney street, have made many improvements that have added much to its beauty and attractiveness. A new Minusa gold fibre screen has been installed, the entire place given a thorough cleaning and refurnishing, and a flower garden and big spraying fountain has been put in the space back of the seats. J. C. Scott, former manager of the Euclid on Easton avenue, has been appointed manager, and an all-picture program will be maintained. Many large features will be used in addition to the regular program.

AIRDOME AND THEATER TOGETHER.

The Delmar airdome, Delmar and Aubert avenues, opened on May 15. The airdome is connected with the Delmar theater; in fact, the audience can pass from one to the other as from one room to another, which makes it an ideal arrangement in case of rain, or cold and chilly nights. The Delmar advertises "Nightly shows, rain or shine." The program consists of high-class moving pictures and features, with one of the best orchestras in the city. The admisson is ten cents.

PASSERS KNEW SOMETHING WAS UP.

When the management of the Columbia, 6th and St. Charles streets, ran the Salisbury wild animal pictures, they made a lobby display that was most unique and of splendid advertising value. A number of stuffed and mounted wild animals were secured from a local fur house and distributed around the lobby. The display attracted much attention, and caused hundreds of people that passed the theater to stop, that otherwise might have passed on.

ST. LOUIS BRIEF NOTES.

The Columbia, 6th and St. Charles streets, closed its season on Sunday, May 16, with the last showing of the Salisbury hunting and fishing pictures. The Columbia is a high-class vaudeville house which ran a few weeks of moving pictures, such as "The Nigger," after the vaudeville season had closed.

The Elite airdome, 18th street and Park avenue, opened on May 16 with moving pictures and a dramatic stock company. The Elite runs five reels of pictures every night, with the addition of a play by the stock company on Sunday and Wednesday, for which ten cents admission is charged. On other nights the price is five cents.

J. W. Cotter, manager of the Kriterion Exchange at 3217 Locust street, says that the temporary difficulty affecting the releases of his exchange will be straightened out in a very few days, and then the Kriterion program will be on the go with increased vigor.

The Apollo airdome, Grand and Bell avenues, opened on May 15 with an all-moving picture bill, under the management of K. B. Avouris, who gave away free certificates, good for a handsome 7x11 sepia photograph to every lady attending the airdome on May 15 and 16, as souvenirs of the opening. High-class pictures and features are shown, and a fine orchestra furnishes the music.

The Knickerbocker airdome, 3145 Park avenue, opened on May 16 with an all-picture bill, running Paramount features on Tuesday and Thursday, and "Who Pays?" on Saturday, and a Broadway star feature every Sunday. The airdome is connected with the Knickerbocker theater.

A. G. Buck, formerly of Chicago, where he was engaged in the exploitation of Blinkhorn features, has assumed charge of the Picture Playhouse Film Company's office at 3431 Olive street.

Cicardi's Gardens, an open-air dining palace with garden attached, one of the first restaurants in the city to feature cabaret entertainments, have added first-run moving picture features to their program every night from 8 to 9 o'clock.

Club Wants Co-Operation

New Orleans' Recently Formed Film Trades Club Sends Formal Announcement of Its Aims to Exhibitors and Asks Co-operation in Carrying Out Its Program—Will Work for Benefit of Legitimately Conducted Picture Trade.

Special to Moving Picture World from Trades News Service.

THE newly organized Film Trades Club of New Orleans has sent out the following letter to exhibitors, outlining the purposes of the organization and soliciting the co-operation of the exhibitors for the carrying out of its purposes, the bettering of conditions for the industry as a whole:

"Owing to the fact that there has been considerable comment on and speculation regarding for what purpose the Film Trades Club of New Orleans was formed, we wish to explain for your information that said organization was formed only for the betterment of conditions, both for the exhibitor and the exchanges.

"Through our organization we have so arranged matters as to give protection to the established and dependable exhibitors from the non-permanent and irresponsible theater operators. For example it has been proven that of eighty-seven theaters licensed in the City of New Orleans an alarmingly large per cent have been operated upon a purely speculative basis by promoters or brokers who expect to make money by the sale of these theaters, and not by the legitimate operation of same. This class of exhibitor eventually comes into your locality and, by defrauding as many film exchanges as he can, exists for weeks on business that rightfully belong to the honest and responsible exhibitor.

"It is our desire to impress upon you the fact that there has been no combination formed for the purpose of raising prices on film service, the whole and sole aim of this organization being to better conditions in the industry as a whole by putting it on a sound business basis and keeping it there. To this end we respectfully solicit the co-operation and support of every honest and well intentioned exhibitor, and that includes the prompt liquidation of film and poster bills as they become due. You may be assured that this organization will at all times work harmoniously with the exhibitors to make conditions more satisfactory and your business more successful than has been the case previously.

"With best wishes, we are,
"Yours very truly,
"Film Trades Club of New Orleans."

The Film Trades Club of New Orleans at its last meeting adopted a constitution and by-laws and discussed credits; the latter are to be taken up again and passed on at an early meeting.

NEW ORLEANS EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN.

George Cheney, secretary of the Film Trades Club of New Orleans, recently organized association of exchange managers, requests that every exhibitor in the New Orleans territory forward his name and address and that of the house or houses controlled by the exhibitor, to his office, 414 New Orleans National Bank Bldg. The purpose of this request is to enable the secretary's office to make its mailing list both complete and correct. Certain inaccuracies are known to exist now and these must prove inconvenient for the exhibitors, it being expected that they would prefer to have their mail from the New Orleans exchanges addressed correctly so that there may be no delays in or failure of delivery. Every exhibitor who does this will thereby reduce the lost motion in the conduct of his business by just that much.

Mr. Cheney, who is at the same time connected with the Trades Press Newspaper Bureau, the WORLD'S New Orleans correspondents, would also like to get in touch and keep in touch with all the exhibitors of the territory, it being his wish thereby to improve the news service of the territory. Items forwarded to the office of the bureau, whether complete or only "tips," will receive immediate attention and whenever they prove of sufficient news interest will be forwarded accordingly.

THREE OF A KIND.

Rex Beach and Jack London, famous authors, will, it is learned, join Upton Sinclair in his affiliation with the Dixie Film Company of Biloxi, Mississippi, which is preparing to produce at a point near the town.

FILM TRADES' CLUB DINNER.

The members of the new organization of New Orleans film managers, the Film Trades Club, had its organization dinner at Noy's Spanish Fort Restaurant on Lake Pontchartrain last Saturday as per schedule. It was one of the most successful get together feeds of recent months, a sort of combination college fraternity dinner and regimental mess, aplenty of parlor tricks and foolishness and a lot of good stories about the recent past of the picture game, with particular reference to the tremendous improvement in productions and the general tone of the whole industry.

Al Shear, vice-president, acted as master of ceremonies, did the ordering, and contributed considerably to the enjoyment of the evening with anecdote and the business of keeping everybody in the talk all the time. All the membership was there, Auger of the Mutual (since made Southern manager for the World Film), Stephens of Fox, Ford of United, Bugbee of World Film (since succeeded by Barr), Shear of Consolidated, Bryan of Pathe and Kirkpatrick of Paramount. These with George Schaeffer, sales manager for the World Film, as guest of honor, and Cheney of the World's New Orleans news bureau, secretary of the organization, made up the party.

They talked about business but they didn't talk business, and that is a distinction with a considerable difference. There were no toasts and no formalities, but just an excellent dinner and enough real goodfellowship to get it past the worst digestion in the world, and among those present there seemed to be some of the best.

COQUILLE CHANGES RELEASE ARRANGEMENTS.

The Coquille Film Company is releasing some of its products at New Orleans, the first being a one reeler, "The Studio Dandy," shown at Pearce's Trianon, beginning the early part of the week and still running. "The Pearl From India" is being released locally also. These two pictures represent the film part of "Made In New Orleans" week, things of all kinds made in New Orleans being featured during that period.

The release arrangements of the Coquille Company were recently altered and have not as yet been established definitely. They will, in the mean time, release certain pictures on state rights or independently. No further official statement of the changes made by the company has been given out as yet, though an announcement of changes, both in scope and personnell is expected within a short time.

WORLD FILM CHANGES IN NEW ORLEANS.

The World Film Corporation has shifted its Southern headquarters from Atlanta to New Orleans and ordered several other changes, all effective June 1. The World Film is the first to place its Southern headquarters at New Orleans but in view of the growing advantages of that city from the picture standpoint, as to distribution, it is considered amongst the exchangemen that further shifts of this kind may be made by some of the other companies.

E. Auger, now New Orleans manager for the Mutual, sometime general manager of branches for Pathe, and a film man of long and thorough knowledge of the business, will succeed C. W. Sawin as Southern manager.

Maurice F. Barr, now travelling representative for the World Film, will succeed Karl Bugbee as manager of the New Orleans office. Mr. Barr, previous to his entrance within the last few months into the film game, was a New Orleans newspaper man. His rapid rise to the managership has proven a source of gratification to numerous friends.

M. W. Lawrence, formerly representative of the North American and Thanhouser, and with headquarters at New Orleans, goes to Memphis to open an office for the World Film. Mr. Lawrence during his previous connection made his headquarters with the Mutual.

These changes were announced after the arrival of George Schaeffer, sales manager for the World Film, and are understood to have been finally arranged by him on his present Southern tour, he having been making his headquarters in New Orleans for the past ten days.

NOTES FROM GULF STATES.

The new organ for Pearce's Trianon has arrived and is shortly to be installed. This will put the Trianon practically on a parity with the Tudor, Pearce's feature house; it is expected to prove a drawing card as has the organ music provided at the Tudor.

The exchange managers of New Orleans, on learning of the death of Mrs. William Oldknow, wife of General Manager Oldknow of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, headquarters at Atlanta, wired condolence.

O. K. Bourgeois, formerly travelling representative for the World Film Corporation, has been sent to Tampa, Fla., there to open an office for the United Program Film Service of Louisiana.

William H. Guerringer, general manager for Fichtenberg, has gone to Pennsacola to look after the company's interests there. Mr. Fichtenberg is expected to return from the Coast where he has been taking in the fairs about the end of the month.

NEWS LETTER FROM MAINE.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMPLIMENTS are heard on all sides for the tactful manner in which Manager Bibber of Music Hall, Lewiston, Me., handled the great audience of more than 1,300 people during a fire almost next door to the playhouse last week. Manager Bibber, when he discovered the fire to be so near, quietly gave a tip to the orchestra leader and had the musician tune up good and loud and play continually in order to keep the attention of the people. The plan was successful. Only a very few left the hall and practically none of the people knew of the fire right under their noses even though now and then a whiff of smoke would find its way into the theater. When the show was over people were amazed to learn of the excitement which had been going on so close by.

PICTURES MAKE MONEY FOR HOSPITAL.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

For the first time in the history of Toronto moving pictures have been officially acknowledged by the social set. The word "movie" has until now meant enough to keep the local 400 away from any theatre that dared to make a venture. A few weeks ago Mr. Hague, the local manager of the Universal Film Company, got an idea that there was an opportunity to introduce pictures to this same set, so he approached Mrs. W. J. McWhinney and sprung his stunt. It worked and Mrs. McWhinney was over her head in enthusiasm, for she is one of the leading social organizers in the city, and his offer was to have a real live social picture show to raise funds for the University of Toronto Base Hospital.

All arrangements were made, Lady Pellatt, Lady Willson, Mrs. A. E. Gooderham and several others of the "best," agreed to act as patrons, and St. Georges Hall was hired for the entire week of May 11. Top prices were one dollar and the event was largely chronicled in the social columns, a "bevy of young girls in white frocks and pretty caps sold ices and lemonade and acted as ushers," as one society editor wrote, after describing an hundred "smart" dresses. Many comments from the audience were heard and the number that were seeing pictures of the kind for practically the first time was astonishing. Needless to say, Mr. Hague saw to it that the observers made little mistake as to the origin of the films. Over $2,000 was realized during the first half of the week.

"It was one of the biggest boosts that moving pictures have had anywhere," said Mr. Hague as he watched the long line of motors after one of the evening performances.

FILMS IN NEW TECHNICAL HIGH SCHOOL.

A special projection room is being installed, and lectures illustrating many processes of manufacture and many other lines will take the place of the parties of students that have been accustomed to travel to various manufacturing plants in search of knowledge.

CRANDALL HELPS CITY PLAYGROUNDS.

Harry M. Crandall is meeting the demand for children's exhibitions and incidentally swelling the funds for children's playgrounds by throwing open in his theater mornings for their benefit. Sharp criticism has been made here of the lack of films suitable for juvenile minds, and at a meeting recently of parents and teachers, which was also attended by a number of exhibitors, the offer was made by Mr. Crandall to donate films, tickets and the use of his theater by the schools. The tickets are furnished to the teachers to be sold by and to the pupils, the receipts therefrom to be applied for the support of playgrounds. His offer has been accepted by nearly a dozen schools. In carrying out this plan he is receiving the cooperation of several of the local exchanges who heartily endorse the action.

WASHINGTON SHORT NOTES.

The Home Amusement Company has procured plans for the erection of a motion picture theater on C street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, northeast. It is estimated that the building cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. It will be of fireproof construction throughout and will have a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of about 110 feet. It will be a modern house in every particular. W. S. Plager is the architect.

Samuel Greenberg has resigned as manager of the Stanton and Empire theaters, located in the northeast section of the city, and his place has been taken by William Alvine as house manager of these and the American theater.

Picture fans, patrons of the theaters using the United Film Service, will have an opportunity of collecting a large number of different colored pennants, each bearing the name of some one of the stars playing for that service. These pennants are to be furnished to the exhibitors by Manager Lust at actual cost and by them awarded to their patrons through the double coupon scheme.

Mr. Johnson, who operates the Maryland theater on Ninth street, Northwest, is reported as about to reopen Central Park, an airdome on the same thoroughfare. This is a very large place and the only one in the heart of the business section. Ninth street is always a very busy place after dark and given good weather conditions, Mr. Johnson should make a success of this venture.

J. Martin McKee, formerly manager of the American theater, has entered the employ of the United Film Service as road man.

E. Frazio has secured control of Fairyland, formerly operated by the Griffin Sisters on L street, Northwest.

A. H. Rudolph has disposed of his holdings in the Niagara theater, on Seventh street, Northwest, to A. H. Moore.

E. Westfall, who has the Palace theater, in Hagerstown, Md., has opened his new house, the Maryland. This latter place has a very large seating capacity and is one of the finest in the state.

Davis Bros., operating the M Street Theater and an airdome of the same name, have secured the Idle Hour Park. All of these places are located in the Georgetown district.

George W. Smiley, traveling representative of the local branch of Pathe, Inc., has just returned from an extended trip through the South, where he was successful in signing up a large number of exhibitors for Pathe service.

The Pathe company are preparing to film the gathering of banking and business men of this and the South American countries, which will take place here during the week of May 24. The object of this convention is to devise plans for the extension of our trade in the Latin-American countries.

National Censorship Bill

Plan to Saddle Americans with Federal Censorship Still Alive—Special Session of Congress May Be Called October 1, and Judge Hughes Intends, If Given an Opportunity, to Present His Bill—Invites Criticism.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DURING the past week there has been more or less talk of a possible calling of an extra session of Congress to delve into the financial situation of the United States and also take action on a number of bills that failed of passage during the last regular session. The call is desired for October 1, two months earlier than the regular session, although it is said that President Wilson is opposed to seeing Congress convene until the appointed time. In an interview with a representative of this paper, during the last session, Judge Hughes emphatically declared that if given the opportunity he will make an early presentation of his national censorship bill. He also invited criticism of the measure which he had introduced and further asked for the views of authorities as to what a perfect censorship bill would be. Should the extra session be called there would intervene but four months within which the film interests may prepare their case. There was a feeling at the Capital that with other important measures disposed of, a great deal of attention would be devoted to the passage of the censorship bill.

LADIES WANT NO SUNDAY SHOWS.

The Woman's Interdenominational Missionary Union of the District of Columbia, whose members were recently so active in the hearing granted them by the Superintendent of Police, Major Raymond W. Pullman, have adopted resolutions favoring the closing of motion picture theaters on Sunday. The resolutions deplore "that there is no law to inforce respect for Sunday;" that on that day "moving picture shows are open in all parts of the city with sensational placards displayed;" that the pictures displayed "tend to attract the minds of children toward murder, drunkenness and other vicious practices."

It is very possible that these ladies know nothing of that which they speak for perhaps it is the same in their case as it was with another group of ladies who condemned motion pictures as being something really awful, although their total visits would not average one a year. They would restrict the rights of others because they do not coincide with the latter's views. A plan for educating the general public as to the real value of pictures and just what they represent is at present being considered by a number of the leading exhibitors.

EMPRESS THEATER NOW VERY PRETTY.

The Empress theater, at 416 Ninth street Northwest, has undergone a complete overhauling and is one of the most attractive houses in the downtown section The first improvement made was the moving forward of the front wall and pushing back the rear wall to give an additional seating capacity. The new front is in white, contrasting with the mahogany finished doors, the upper part of which contains sections of opalescent glass. The ceiling of the lobby is of white art metal with an electric fixture at either side. The entire arch, in which is also contained a sign with the name of the theater, the large cross piece above and the big sign which stretches nearly to the roof, are outlined with forty-watt tungsten lamps. There are four double exits (one of which is also used as an entrance).

The inside of the Empress theater is very pretty. The white art metal ceiling is in pebble effect and ornamented. From it is suspended three large chain hung lights of the direct-indirect type, with chains and bowl finished like weathered copper. These with the eighteen side lamps furnished brilliant illumination without interfering with the projection. The walls are buff colored with panels of blue decorated and finished off in gold. It is the intention of reseating the house throughout. The floor is of cement colored brown with a front border of mosaic work.

Entrance to the booth is had from the outside of the theater only, guaranteeing additional safety in the event of an accident. Here are two Edison projectors and the motor generator set. There are four operators divided into two shifts for day and night work. The house is now using an early run Paramount feature service.

EXCELSIOR AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

Articles for incorporating the Excelsior Amusement Company were filed last week in the office of the Recorder of Deeds. This company is formed to engage in the exhibition and production of motion picture shows in the District of Columbia and the several states and territories and has a capital stock of $2,000 divided into two hundred shares of a par value of $10 each. The trustees for the first year are Emanuel Steinem, Albert E. Steinem, and Lester H. Steinem, and the principal offices of the company will be at 1408 Church street, Northwest. The Excelsior Amusement Company has secured from Harry Stevens and Walter E. King, for a consideration of $650, the motion picture business conducted by the latter at 1408-10-12 Church street, Northwest, know nas the Odeon theater. This very attractive house is fitted with a large sized stage and is capable of being used for vaudeville or other purposes. The interior fittings, equipment, lighting and ventilation are of the best.

FOX BRANCH IN WASHINGTON.

Following the recent visit of A. Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation, the finishing touches have been put to the establishment of a local, independent branch of the New York office. It is now equipped as a full buying office and will release all of the Fox productions simultaneously with the New York and the other independent branches throughout the country. Heretofore, Washington has been a sub-office of the Philadelphia branch, but from now on the exhibitors using these productions in Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina will receive direct service from this city, prints of the various releases having been sent here for such distribution.

GREATER N. Y. FILM BRANCH GOES TO BALTIMORE.

The local headquarters of the Greater New York Film Rental Company has been removed to Baltimore and James Whittle, in addition to his duties as manager of that depot will cover the territory, relieving Lieutenant Jim P. Anderson of that duty. Mr. Anderson will remain the representative of the company in Washington but the service will be handled from the Baltimore depot.

WRIGHT MANAGES COLONIAL.

Fred C. Wright is the manager of the Colonial theater, Hagerstown, Md., and not W. E. Shafer as we lately announced. In a letter to the Moving Picture World, Mr. Wright says that Mr. Shafer was never employed as manager but as assistant booker for a period of five weeks.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, NO. 10, "Mr. Jarr and the Beauty Treatment" (June 7).—On a bright spring day, Mr. Jarr gets home early and is soon absorbed in the afternoon paper, while his wife reads the beauty page of the Woman's Magazine. She is greatly impressed with the warning against the first signs of a "sagging chin," as being a sure sign of the wane of beauty. By strange coincidence, Clara Mudridge-Smith has that day engaged a beauty doctor, and, learning the august person will treat two victims for the price of one, she phones for Mrs. Jarr. That lady goes right over, after insisting Jarr take the children out for a walk. The two women pester Mr. Smith until he finally slams on his hat and goes out. Meeting Jarr and the children, the two men commiserate each other, and Smith buys a toy balloon for each of the Jarr youngsters.

In the meantime, the dermatological expert has Mrs. Jarr and Mrs. Smith in chin straps and all kinds of face-harness, but the women cheerfully suffer tortures. Little Izzy Slavinsky becomes envious when he sees Willy and Emma Jarr with the balloons, but is flatly snubbed by them, whereupon the little rascal bursts Willy's balloon and cuts the cord holding Emma's. It flies into the air and becomes lodged among a maze of heavily-charged electric wires. Emma cries bitterly, and Jarr throws his steel-handled umbrella at the balloon to knock it down, causing a short circuit and a fine display of fireworks. This brings out the fire department, then a riot call for the police reserves. Jarr and Smith are both arrested, and come near being jailed, while their women-folks, in their queer headgear, create some sensation when they rush into court. Fortunately, Gus's political influence gets them all out of trouble, but Mrs. Jarr's beauty treatment is indefinitely postponed, while Izzy grins in satisfaction at the rumpus he has caused.

LOVE, SNOW AND ICE (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—June 8).—Mr. Farley wants his daughter, Jean, to marry Clarence Ponsonby, a young man styling him a "self-made" man. Jean thinks he made a pretty poor job of himself, despises him and is already in love with Cutey Mason. All live near Lake George up in the cold country, and when the lake freezes over, Jean undertakes to teach Clarence and her father skating. By previous arrangement, Cutey shows up, proposes to Jean in the middle of the lake, then when Pa and Clarence stumblingly interpose, the young people simply elope, leaving them to slowly and painfully follow. Hiring a cutter sleigh, Jean and Cutey start for the Justice of the Peace ten miles up the lake, closely pursued by father and Clarence in another sleigh. Cutey's sleigh turns over, but they make their way to a nearby toboggan slide, pile onto one of the big sleds and shoot out over the lake at a high rate of speed. Their pursuers do likewise, but Clarence gets left behind by falling down a steep hill into a crowd of revellers on their way to the mid-winter ice carnival. Mr. Farley, taking a short cut through the deep snow, reaches the Justice of the Peace ahead of the elopers, but that gentleman is on his way to the carnival. He meets Cutey and Jean, warns them papa is awaiting them at his house and tells them to meet him at the carnival, where he will marry them. Cutey hires an ice-boat and is soon speeding towards the carnival at the upper end of the lake. Papa Farley sees them, jumps into another ice-boat and, after some hair-raising bursts of speed, all reach the carnival. The elopers are married by the Justice just before Papa Farley and Clarence, whom he has met at the carnival, arrive. Papa decides to make the best of it, tells Clarence he is not wanted, then all make their way round the carnival. After watching the ice-skating, both fancy and racing, the parade floats and the ice palace, the newly-weds depart with Pa's blessing in a big dog-sledge on the honeymoon.

SPADES ARE TRUMPS (June 9).—At the reading of her uncle's will, Honoria Spavin, a spinster lady, learns that his entire fortune is to be left to her on condition that she marry her cousin, Benvenuto Torrini, a young man who is not an Italian, but an American, living in America. If she refuses to marry Ben, all the fortune goes to him, but if he refuses to marry her, she is to get the money. Ben happens to be already engaged to Ella Cunningham, and when he receives a copy of the will, together with the pleasing news that Honoria—who has never seen him—is coming from England on the next steamer, he agitatedly shows it to Ella. She thinks up a plan, and after securing the assistance of their friends, Ben and Ella make up to resemble Italians of the laboring class. Ben meets Honoria at the pier carrying a spade, hoping to make such a show of himself that she will be disgusted and refuse to marry him. He makes a scene right at the dock which would have disheartened most women, but she has a keen eye for that fortune. He takes her to a restaurant to "get somet'ing to eat," and gets them both put out by his antics. At Ella's home, Ben introduces his fiancee as "his sister." Ben gives her a drink of vinegar, pretending it is wine, and at the dinner table every proper procedure of table etiquette is broken by Ben, his "sister" and their friends. Honoria finally announces to Ben in no uncertain tones that she can stand it no longer and that she would rather give up the fortune than marry him. She then stalks majestically out, and, hurling off their wigs, the whole party give vent to whoops of delight. Poor Honoria has another sea-sick journey back to dear old England.

MR. BLINK OF BOHEMIA (June 10).—On his way through the Art Museum, Mr. Blink, in company with his wealthy aunt, meets Cordelia Clover, an art aspirant, and the two are immediately attracted to each other. Finding she paints portraits, Blink gives her a commission to paint his. At the very first sitting, Cordelia's Bohemian friends pay her a visit and Blink is greatly abashed at the eccentricities of the newcomers. He accompanies the party to a nearby Bohemian cafe, where he is made to feel still more uncomfortable. Later, he proposes, but Cordelia tells him she could only marry a man whose soul was filled with art. Finding he was not naturally gifted with an artistic temperament, Blink makes arrangement with Marinelli, a street singer, to help him out. Beneath Cordelia's balcony he places the singer, out of sight, and bids him sing a love serenade. At its conclusion, Blink steps forth to receive the admiring plaudits of Cordelia. She is greatly delighted and proud of his "beautiful voice." Blink gets away with his Romeo-like deonstrations until Marinelli's wife becomes suspicious of her husband. Cordelia and she meet, and the girl recognizes on the other woman a scarf she had supposedly thrown to Mr. Blink. Cordelia is told by Mrs. Marinelli, "my husband gave it to me!" Finding her husband serenading another woman, the singer's wife that evening rushes in to Cordelia and, leaving her baby, rushes out again to find her husband. Blink arrives at this awkward moment, and the indignant young lady tells him, "Here, take your child and go." He is utterly confounded, but fortunately Mrs. Marinelli arrives, dragging her husband, and Blink finally succeeds in explaining everything satisfactorily. Cordelia has had enough of art and Bohemianism, however, and is now willing to become Mrs. Blink.

FAIR, FAT AND SAUCY (June 11).—Looking around his harem, Prince Ali, a Persian Prince, tells his attendants that there is every nation but America represented there, and that he intends to visit New York and bring back a fat American wife with him. On the steamer he meets Mrs. Slater, who invites the Prince to be her guest while in America. At a reception he meets Mrs. Eaton, a very plump lady, her husband, and their daughter, Maud, a very slender girl. Bob, Maud's fiance, is given the "good-day" by Mrs. Eaton when she discovers the Prince is looking for an American wife, and together with several other mothers, tries to interest the Prince in her daughter, but the Persian will have none of them. He does, however, show great admiration for Mrs. Eton herself; much to that lady's embarrassment. Mr. Eaton gets jealous and decides to put a stop to the Prince's attention. Remembering Jerry, the fat cook, is going to a masquerade that evening, dressed as a sweet young miss of sixteen, he enlists his aid, and introduces the "young lady" to the Prince. The Oriental is overwhelmed with this new beauty, and after many amusing occurrences, Jerry suggests they visit a certain restaurant (suggested by Eaton) and dine. Eaton, meanwhile, notifies his wife, Maud and Bob he has a big surprise for them and escorts the wondering trio to the same restaurant. There they behold a never-to-be-forgotten scene. What Jerry doesn't do to the Prince, when the latter tries to kiss him, isn't morth mentioning. A grand rough house follows at the close of which Jerry chases the Prince out of the room, while Mrs. Eaton smiles benignly as Maud comes into Bob's arms.

FOUR GRAINS OF RICE (Special—Two Parts—June 12).—The leader of "The Sons of the Brazen Joss," one of the Tongs, or Chinese social organizations, is murdered by Moy Wong, cunning leader of "The Four Grains of Rice," a Tong of higher class and bitter enemies of the "Sons." Sworn to vengeance, the "Sons" await an opportunity to get even. A slumming party happens into Chinatown at this time, and Ruth Grinnell, fiance of Sidney Rance, insists upon exploring the interior of Moy Wong's little store. The leader sees her and is fascinated by her beauty. He is agreeable, and quietly slips a ring of peculiar design into her bag. Next day Ruth discovers the ring, remembers the Oriental perfume on it and where it came from. She determines to bring it back to its owner. Very foolishly she goes alone. Fuchoo, one of the "Sons of the Brazen Joss," is the last one to see her after she enters Moy Wong's store. Frightened at Ruth's non-appearance, her parents send out a general alarm, and Rance, thinking over the past few days, comes to the belief that Moy Wong has something to do with the mystery. He sets out on an investigation of his own, is lured into the little store and made prisoner. Fuchoo sees this also, and putting two and two together, he sees a way to be revenged for the death of their leader. After much consultation with the other members of the Tong, he warns the police of the whereabouts of the two white people. The warning comes in such a strange way, the police are inclined to be skeptical, but finally several plain-clothes men are sent to investigate. Meanwhile Ruth, who has managed to keep Moy at a respectable distance, is released and permitted to escape with Sidney by Sadi, the Chinaman's white wife. Quick action gives them a slight start, but for the arrival of the police, their flight would have had a tragic ending. Moy Wong is imprisoned for a long term, breaking the power of "The Four Grains of Rice," and leaving Ruth and her fiance in peace.

EDISON.

CARTOONS IN THE BARBER SHOP (June 2).—The cartoons are prefaced by several scenes acted by "real" actors, thus the cartoon episodes are ushered in in a novel way. The scenes are in a barber shop where Professor Bing comes to get shaved. There is a good amount of funny business between the occupants of the emporium and in the excitement the barber inadvertently massages Professor Bing with the shoe paste.

The first of the cartoons is "Dr. E. Z. Bear's Busy Day." He is visited by a giraffe, who has been stricken with "mushroomatis." At first, Dr. Bear is at a loss as to how to treat the tall animal, but finally gets a ladder, climbs it, and saws off the mushroom which has been growing out of the giraffe's neck. A leopard also comes in for treatment, which consists of hammering various vacillant spots into place where they remain, much to the comfort and satisfaction of leopard.

"One Hundred Years of Fashion Slavery" shows the evolution of the present day garb for women. It goes a step further and shows the atrocity which will be worn in 1920. It resembles the abbreviated garment we read of in Genesis.

"The Hicks in Nightmareland" completes the cartoons. Hercules of dwarfed proportions, undertakes to reproach the brawny janitor for the dearth of hot water in the flat. As Hercules delivers his tirade beneath the gaze of the towering giant, he gradually realizes his insignificance and soon dwindles away until nothing but a small puddle remains. The janitor, who has said nothing, sees the puddle and in characteristic fashion rubs the mop over it and then disappears into his flat.

THE TEST (Special—Three Parts—June 4).—Tom Neil, clerk in the law office of Robert Poindexter, is a man of no principles or ethics. When reproached by John Burly, a lawyer in the office, for studying the "dope" sheet of a newspaper so as to get a line on the horses, he resents it strongly, and the seeds of hatred are sown. Subsequently, Burly, in debt to the extent of $300, to George Laughlin, a newspaperman, steals the money from the Poindexter office, as the back of Luke Jackson, the cashier, is turned. Because of inaccuracies discovered in Neil's accounts previous, the charge of theft is made against Neil. Burly, however, admits the theft, and writes out a confession to that effect. He is then dismissed and the police are not advised.

Previous to the theft, Helen Poindexter, niece of Robert, had visited in New York, and became acquainted with Burly, through her uncle. A warm friendship springs up between them. After the trouble at the office, Burly leaves the city and ceases to correspond with Helen, resolving at first to make good. Helen soon returns to her home in the West. Almost a year has passed, and Burly has turned up in the West, in the same town where Helen resides. Daily, in the public square, Helen, her features obscured by a heavy veil, dispenses food to the poor. On one occasion she hands food to Burly, who has kept straight and paid back some of the money to Robert Poindexter. A note is slipped into her hand by Burly, who does not recognize her. She reads the note, which is an appeal for assistance. The following day she decides to test him and drops her purse where he sees it. A few hours after, Burly returns the purse to her at her home when he faints from hunger. He recognizes her later and is persuaded to remain in Helen's home until he recovers. Helen writes to her uncle in New York telling how straight she has found Burly to be, with the result that a recommendation is sent on for Burly by Robert Poindexter and his confession is torn up. Neil, through the keyhole, sees his employer tear up the confession and gets it and pastes it together.

With revenge in his heart and seeing a chance to blackmail Burly, now a lawyer in the office of ex-Judge Gary, Neil goes West and puts it up to Burly, who buys the confession. Neil substitutes a decoy for the original, which he sells to District Attorney Wallace, Burly's opponent for political office. George Laughlin, now editor of the newspaper in the same western town, supports Burly strongly for the office, but Wallace's disclosures of the theft are endangering Burly's chances. Helen, whom Wallace has been paying attentions to, succeeds in tearing off the signature from the confession in Wallace's office, so when the confession is shown to newspaper men, it has no signature and is declared a forgery. Consequently Burly wins both the election and Helen's hand.

A CHIP OF THE OLD BLOCK (June 5).—John Westerbrook, president of the Wheat Exchange bank, has just received a letter from the Rev. Allen Devine of Deer Lake, N. Y., to the effect that Harry Westerbrook, a grandson of the banker, is at Deer Lake, living with an old gamekeeper, with whom he had been sent to live years before by a dying wish of his father. The minister advises that Harry be given a chance in the city, as diligent study, under his tutelage has made him a proficient young man. John decides to have the boy come to the city and writes the minister to that effect. Herbert Westerbrook, John's son, has a son, Paul, a teller in the bank, whose attentions to Mary Wentworth have been received apathetically by her. Because she is bored by Paul, Mary asks her father to allow her to go to Deer Lake, where she can visit her friend, Myrtle. She is introduced to Harry at Deer Lake by Myrtle and Harry becomes much attached to her.

In the city, Herbert's wife, who has been informed by him of Harry's expected arrival in the city, is much concerned over the chances of her son for the hand of Mary. She tells her husband she will not have her son's chances spoiled by that young outcast, Harry. Harry arrives, and is made bank messenger by his grandfather. Paul, a sort of a black sheep, spends a good share of his time in restaurants wining and dining young women. He always seems to have plenty of money. The directors of the bank consider, with a detective, the theft of sums of money from the bank. The detective reports that the thief is very close in kin to the president, and the latter suspects Harry. He is assured by the detective, however, that Harry is not the thief.

At a dance at the Westerbrook home, Harry happens in. As he is standing in the corridor Herbert's wife comes out and hands her necklace to John Westerbrook, who is talking to Harry. John is called to one side, and leaves the necklace on the table. Little Helen, Paul's sister, whose mother owns the jewels, picks them up and goes to find her mother. The latter returns to the corridor, and finding the necklae gone, is alarmed. John accuses Harry, and the latter denies it and then chokes his grandfather for the insult. John is convinced and tells Harry he is a real Westerbrook. Helen has given the jewels to her mother who has hidden them just to incriminate Harry. Mary has seen her hide them and exposes her. Harry and Mary rejoice on the following day when Harry is informed that he has been made teller in the bank to succeed Paul, who has resigned after an expose, following the arrest of a fellow teller.

UP IN THE AIR (June 9).—Audrey and Archie, the brains, have long since come to a complete understanding of each other and are exchanging sweet nothings as a huge log, dropped by Audrey's irate father, rolls on and collides with Archie's leg. The log is followed quickly by papa, who denounces Archie as a worthless fop. Father goes off to shingle the roof of the shed, as Willie, a rusticated product of the farm, enters and assiduously explains that he is hers and she can have him for the asking. Archie, his spirit somewhat bent by the volley of opprobrious epithets hurled at him by Audrey's father, is on his way home when he gets too close to a blast which is about to go off. Laborers wave flags and gesticulate wildly to warn him, but he misconstrues the warning to be a salutatory manifestation and waves his handkerchief at them. Off goes the blast, and we next see him in the branches of a tall tree, coatless and hatless and almost trouserless.

Audrey gets the assurance of her father that the one who finishes the job assigned him the quickest will be allowed to marry his daughter. Archie is told to dig the cellar of a new home, and the other boys set to work shingling a shed. Working with a spade, and trying to keep one's hands soft and clean, under these conditions, is no easy matter. Archie, therefore, decides to profit by experience. He gets a quantity of dynamite from the tool box of the laborers and buries some in the ground on the site of the new cellar. He also places a quantity in the shed the boys are shingling. These are connected by a wire attached to the percussion cap. Archie sets off the charges. Earth is sent flying in all directions and the shed the boys are on top of goes sailing merrily through the air. Papa hustles into the scene after the boys have landed and they all stand in the new cellar. A better excavation could not have been made, had a gang of workmen dug at the place for years. Papa realizes that there are a few brains back of the clothes and monocle which bedeck Archie and he does not hesitate to hand over the prize, his daughter. The construction company pays papa and the others for their injuries, thinking the accident was due to the company's carelessness.

COHEN'S LUCK (Special—Four Parts—June 11).—Abe Cohen, president of the Buttonhole Makers' Union, bids his daughter, Minnie, and his son, Abe, goodbye as he leaves for Blumental's sweatshop. Sammey Blumenthal, owner of the sweatshop, is a despot, feared by all the workers in his place. He was separated from his wife by an agreement, by which he was to pay her forty dollars a week alimony. Cohen is met at the sweatshop by O'Roque, who solicits the aid of the Union in his campaign for alderman. Cohen tells him he has pledged his support to Tim Murphy. Consequently, O'Roque and Blumenthal conspire and Cohen is discharged. Minnie Cohen is enamored of Blumenthal, much against the wishes of her father. Mrs. McGee and Abe combine and buy a lottery ticket. After much argument, as to who will retain possession of the ticket, Abe tears it in two, each keeping a half. Subsequently Abe is set up in the restaurant business by Murphy in recognition of Abe's political support.

David Moss, Abe's choice for Minnie, pays assiduous court to her, but Minnie can "see" only Blumenthal. The latter and Minnie get married secretly. As the restaurant business is bad, Abe goes out on St. Patrick's Day and tries to sell shamrocks, but his efforts are rewarded by the sale of one only. Murphy advises Mrs. McGee that she has won the $10,000 lottery and when she tries to find the ticket, she realizes that it has been stolen. There is great sorrow as the result. Abe, who had contemplated giving a free dinner, is now very sad. The announcement of Minnie's marriage is read in the paper by Abe and he orders her to bring Blumenthal to him. She goes to get him but he evades her, and she realizes that he has tricked her. She goes to live in a poorly furnished room.

Murphy has been elected, but Abe is still sad. He is advised to mix with the underworld characters and try to find the one who stole Mrs. McGee's ticket. He succeeds, and a big dinner is given to celebrate. Murphy is invited and Minnie returns with David, who has found her languishing in her room, alone. With the party at its height, water, ashes and refuse fall from the flat above. The place is a beldam for a minute, but everything turns out all right, and Minnie gets David.

McQUADE OF THE TRAFFIC SQUAD (June 12).—Policeman Patrick McQuade, of the traffic squad, has a sweetheart. Patrick has a rival in Policeman Flynn, who does not stop at anything to depreciate Patrick in Nora's eyes. Mike Leary, Nora's brother, has just left to drive his employer to the theatre. Patrick arrives to keep an appointment with Nora, and has been enjoying her society only a few minutes when Flynn comes in and advises Patrick that he is wanted at the station house. Patrick leaves and is rather surprised that Flynn does not accompany him. At the station, Patrick learns that he is not wanted and realizes that Flynn has robbed him of a few hours in Nora's company. He returns to the house and fisticuffs is prevented by the interference of Nora.

In a saloon nearby Mike Leary and two crooks plan a robbery. They learn that Patrick is to be on the beat on the night in question and are at first reluctant to do the job. Mike assures them that he will get his sister out for a ride in his employer's car, stop in front of the mansion to be entered and when the time comes whisk the burglars away in the machine with Nora. On the night in question, Nora goes out for a ride and a sto- is made at the marked mansion. The burglars come out with the loot and the machine starts. Patrick follows on his motorcyle, but when he sees Nora,

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, NO. 10, "Mr. Jarr and the Beauty Treatment" (June 7).—On a bright spring day, Mr. Jarr gets home early and is soon absorbed in the afternoon paper, while his wife reads the beauty page of the Woman's Magazine. She is greatly impressed with the warning against the first signs of a "sagging chin," as being a sure sign of the wane of beauty. By strange coincidence, Clara Mudridge-Smith has that day engaged a beauty doctor, and, learning the august person will treat two victims for the price of one, she phones for Mrs. Jarr. That lady goes right over, after insisting Jarr take the children out for a walk. The two women pester Mr. Smith until he finally slams on his hat and goes out. Meeting Jarr and the children, the two men commiserate each other, and Smith buys a toy balloon for each of the Jarr youngsters.

In the meantime, the dermatological expert has Mrs. Jarr and Mrs. Smith in chin straps and all kinds of face-harness, but the women cheerfully suffer tortures. Little Izzy Slavinsky becomes envious when he sees Willy and Emma Jarr with the balloons, but is flatly snubbed by them, whereupon the little rascal bursts Willy's balloon and cuts the cord holding Emma's. It flies into the air and becomes lodged among a maze of heavily-charged electric wires. Emma cries bitterly, and Jarr throws his steel-handled umbrella at the balloon to knock it down, causing a short circuit and a fine display of fireworks. This brings out the fire department, then a riot call for the police reserves. Jarr and Smith are both arrested, and come near being jailed, while their women-folks, in their queer headgear, create some sensation when they rush into court. Fortunately, Gus's political influence gets them all out of trouble, but Mrs. Jarr's beauty treatment is indefinitely postponed, while Izzy grins in satisfaction at the rumpus he has caused.

LOVE, SNOW AND ICE (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—June 8).—Mr. Farley wants his daughter, Jean, to marry Clarence Ponsonby, a young man styling him a "self-made" man. Jean thinks he made a pretty poor job of himself, despises him and is already in love with Cutey Mason. All live near Lake George up in the cold country, and when the lake freezes over, Jean undertakes to teach Clarence and her father skating. By previous arrangement, Cutey shows up, proposes to Jean in the middle of the lake, then when Pa and Clarence stumblingly interpose, the young people simply elope, leaving them to slowly and painfully follow. Hiring a cutter sleigh, Jean and Cutey start for the Justice of the Peace ten miles up the lake, closely pursued by father and Clarence in another sleigh. Cutey's sleigh turns over, but they make their way to a nearby toboggan slide, pile onto one of the big sleds and shoot out over the lake at a high rate of speed. Their pursuers do likewise, but Clarence gets left behind by falling down a steep hill into a crowd of revellers on their way to the mid-winter ice carnival. Mr. Farley, taking a short cut through the deep snow, reaches the Justice of the Peace ahead of the elopers, but that gentleman is on his way to the carnival. He meets Cutey and Jean, warns them papa is awaiting them at his house and tells them to meet him at the carnival, where he will marry them. Cutey hires an ice-boat and is soon speeding towards the carnival at the upper end of the lake. Papa Farley sees them, jumps into another ice-boat and, after some hair-raising bursts of speed, all reach the carnival. The elopers are married by the Justice just before Papa Farley and Clarence, whom he has met at the carnival, arrive. Papa decides to make the best of it, tells Clarence he is not wanted, then all make their way round the carnival. After watching the ice-skating, both fancy and racing, the parade floats and the ice palace, the newly-weds depart with Pa's blessing in a big dog-sledge on the honeymoon.

SPADES ARE TRUMPS (June 9).—At the reading of her uncle's will, Honoria Spavin, a spinster lady, learns that his entire fortune is to be left to her on condition that she marry her cousin, Benvenuto Torrini, a young man who is not an Italian, but an American, living in America. If she refuses to marry Ben, all the fortune goes to him, but if he refuses to marry her, she is to get the money. Ben happens to be already engaged to Ella Cunningham, and when he receives a copy of the will, together with the pleasing news that Honoria—who has never seen him—is coming from England on the next steamer, he agitatedly shows it to Ella. She thinks up a plan, and after securing the assistance of their friends, Ben and Ella make up to resemble Italians of the laboring class. Ben meets Honoria at the pier carrying a spade, hoping to make such a show of himself that she will be disgusted and refuse to marry him. He makes a scene right at the dock which would have disheartened most women, but she has a keen eye for that fortune. He takes her to a restaurant to "get somet'ing to eat," and gets them both put out by his antics. At Ella's home, Ben introduces his fiancee as "his sister." Ben gives her a drink of vinegar, pretending it is wine, and at the dinner table every proper procedure of table etiquette is broken by Ben, his "sister" and their friends. Honoria finally announces to Ben in no uncertain tones that she can stand it no longer and that she would rather give up the fortune than marry him. She then stalks majestically out, and, hurling off their wigs, the whole party give vent to whoops of delight. Poor Honoria has another sea-sick journey back to dear old England.

MR. BLINK OF BOHEMIA (June 10).—On his way through the Art Museum, Mr. Blink, in company with his wealthy aunt, meets Cordelia Clover, an art aspirant, and the two are immediately attracted to each other. Finding she paints portraits, Blink gives her a commission to paint his. At the very first sitting, Cordelia's Bohemian friends pay her a visit and Blink is greatly abashed at the eccentricities of the newcomers. He accompanies the party to a nearby Bohemian cafe, where he is made to feel still more uncomfortable. Later, he proposes, but Cordelia tells him she could only marry a man whose soul was filled with art. Finding he was not naturally gifted with an artistic temperament, Blink makes arrangement with Marinelli, a street singer, to help him out. Beneath Cordelia's balcony he places the singer, out of sight, and bids him sing a love serenade. At its conclusion, Blink steps forth to receive the admiring plaudits of Cordelia. She is greatly delighted and proud of his "beautiful voice." Blink gets away with his Romeo-like deonstrations until Marinelli's wife becomes suspicious of her husband. Cordelia and she meet, and the girl recognizes on the other woman a scarf she had supposedly thrown to Mr. Blink. Cordelia is told by Mrs. Marinelli, "my husband gave it to me!" Finding her husband serenading another woman, the singer's wife that evening rushes in to Cordelia and, leaving her baby, rushes out again to find her husband. Blink arrives at this awkward moment, and the indignant young lady tells him, "Here, take your child and go." He is utterly confounded, but fortunately Mrs. Marinelli arrives, dragging her husband, and Blink finally succeeds in explaining everything satisfactorily. Cordelia has had enough of art and Bohemianism, however, and is now willing to become Mrs. Blink.

FAIR, FAT AND SAUCY (June 11).—Looking around his harem, Prince Ali, a Persian Prince, tells his attendants that there is every nation but America represented there, and that he intends to visit New York and bring back a fat American wife with him. On the steamer he meets Mrs. Slater, who invites the Prince to be her guest while in America. At a reception he meets Mrs. Eaton, a very plump lady, her husband, and their daughter, Maud, a very slender girl. Bob, Maud's fiance, is given the "good-day" by Mrs. Eaton when she discovers the Prince is looking for an American wife, and together with several other mothers, tries to interest the Prince in her daughter, but the Persian will have none of them. He does, however, show great admiration for Mrs. Eton herself; much to that lady's embarrassment. Mr. Eaton gets jealous and decides to put a stop to the Prince's attention. Remembering Jerry, the fat cook, is going to a masquerade that evening, dressed as a sweet young miss of sixteen, he enlists his aid, and introduces the "young lady" to the Prince. The Oriental is overwhelmed with this new beauty, and after many amusing occurrences, Jerry suggests they visit a certain restaurant (suggested by Eaton) and dine: Eaton, meanwhile, notifies his wife, Maud and Bob he has a big surprise for them and escorts the wondering trio to the same restaurant. There they behold a never-to-be-forgotten scene. What Jerry doesn't do to the Prince, when the latter tries to kiss him, isn't morth mentioning. A grand rough house follows at the close of which Jerry chases the Prince out of the room, while Mrs. Eaton smiles benignly as Maud comes into Bob's arms.

FOUR GRAINS OF RICE (Special—Two Parts—June 12).—The leader of "The Sons of the Brazen Joss," one of the Tongs, or Chinese social organizations, is murdered by Moy Wong, cunning leader of "The Four Grains of Rice," a Tong of higher class and bitter enemies of the "Sons." Sworn to vengeance, the "Sons" await an opportunity to get even. A slumming party happens into Chinatown at this time, and Ruth Grinnell, fiance of Sidney Rance, insists upon exploring the interior of Moy Wong's little store. The leader sees her and is fascinated by her beauty. He is agreeable, and quietly slips a ring of peculiar design into her bag. Next day Ruth discovers the ring, remembers the Oriental perfume on it and where it came from. She determines to bring it back to its owner. Very foolishly she goes alone. Fuchoo, one of the "Sons of the Brazen Joss," is the last one to see her after she enters Moy Wong's store. Frightened at Ruth's non-appearance, her parents send out a general alarm, and Rance, thinking over the past few days, comes to the belief that Moy Wong has something to do with the mystery. He sets out on an investigation of his own, is lured into the little store and made prisoner. Fuchoo sees this also, and putting two and two together, he sees a way to be revenged for the death of their leader. After much consultation with the other members of the Tong, he warns the police of the whereabouts of the two white people. The warning comes in such a strange way, the police are inclined to be skeptical, but finally several plain-clothes men are sent to investigate. Meanwhile Ruth, who has managed to keep Moy at a respectable distance, is released and permitted to escape with Sidney by Sadi, the Chinaman's white wife. Quick action gives them a slight start, but for the arrival of the police, their flight would have had a tragic ending. Moy Wong is imprisoned for a long term, breaking the power of "The Four Grains of Rice," and leaving Ruth and her fiance in peace.

EDISON.

CARTOONS IN THE BARBER SHOP (June 2).—The cartoons are prefaced by several scenes acted by "real" actors, thus the cartoon episodes are ushered in in a novel way. The scenes are in a barber shop where Professor Bing comes to get shaved. There is a good amount of funny business between the occupants of the emporium and in the excitement the barber inadvertently massages Professor Bing with the shoe paste.

The first of the cartoons is "Dr. E. Z. Bear's Busy Day." He is visited by a giraffe, who has been stricken with "mushroomatis." At first, Dr. Bear is at a loss as to how to treat the tall animal, but finally gets a ladder, climbs it, and saws off the mushroom which has been growing out of the giraffe's neck. A leopard also comes in for treatment, which consists of hammering various vacillant spots into place where they remain, much to the comfort and satisfaction of leopard.

"One Hundred Years of Fashion Slavery" shows the evolution of the present day garb for women. It goes a step further and shows the atrocity which will be worn in 1920. It resembles the abbreviated garment we read of in Genesis.

"The Hicks in Nightmareland" completes the cartoons. Hercules of dwarfed proportions, undertakes to reproach the brawny janitor for the dearth of hot water in the flat. As Hercules delivers his tirade beneath the gaze of the towering giant, he gradually realizes his insignificance and soon dwindles away until nothing but a small puddle remains. The janitor, who has said nothing, sees the puddle and in characteristic fashion rubs the mop over it and then disappears into his flat.

THE TEST (Special—Three Parts—June 4).—Tom Neil, clerk in the law office of Robert Poindexter, is a man of no principles or ethics. When reproached by John Burly, a lawyer in the office, for studying the "dope" sheet of a newspaper so as to get a line on the horses, he resents it strongly, and the seeds of hatred are sown. Subsequently, Burly, in debt to the extent of $300, to George Laughlin, a newspaperman, steals the money from the Poindexter office, as the back of Luke Jackson, the cashier, is turned. Because of inaccuracies discovered in Neil's accounts previous, the charge of theft is made against Neil. Burly, however, admits the theft, and writes out a confession to that effect. He is then dismissed and the police are not advised.

Previous to the theft, Helen Poindexter, niece of Robert, had visited in New York, and became acquainted with Burly, through her uncle. A warm friendship springs up between them. After the trouble at the office, Burly leaves the city and ceases to correspond with Helen, resolving at first to make good. Helen soon returns to her home in the West. Almost a year has passed, and Burly has turned up in the West, in the same town where Helen resides. Daily, in the public square, Helen, her features obscured by a heavy veil, dispenses food to the poor. On one occasion she hands food to Burly, who has kept straight and paid back some of the money to Robert Poindexter. A note is slipped into her hand by Burly, who does not recognize her. She reads the note, which is an appeal for assistance. The following day she decides to test him and drops her purse where he sees it. A few hours after, Burly returns the purse to her at her home when he faints from hunger. He recognizes her later and is persuaded to remain in Helen's home until he recovers. Helen writes to her uncle in New York telling how straight she has found Burly to be, with the result that a recommendation is sent on for Burly by Robert Poindexter and his confession is torn up. Neil, through the keyhole, sees his employer tear up the confession and gets it and pastes it together.

With revenge in his heart and seeing a chance to blackmail Burly, now a lawyer in the office of ex-Judge Gary, Neil goes West and puts it up to Burly, who buys the confession. Neil substitutes a decoy for the original, which he sells to District Attorney Wallace, Burly's opponent for political office. George Laughlin, now editor of the newspaper in the same western town, supports Burly strongly for the office, but Wallace's disclosures of the theft are endangering Burly's chances. Helen, whom Wallace has been paying attentions to, succeeds in tearing off the signature from the confession in Wallace's office, so when the confession is shown to newspaper men, it has no signature and is declared a forgery. Consequently Burly wins both the election and Helen's hand.

A CHIP OF THE OLD BLOCK (June 5).—John Westerbrook, president of the Wheat Exchange bank, has just received a letter from the Rev. Allen Devine of Deer Lake, N. Y., to the effect that Harry Westerbrook, a grandson of the banker, is at Deer Lake, living with an old gamekeeper, with whom he had been sent to live years before by a dying wish of his father. The minister advises that Harry be given a chance in the city, as diligent study, under his tutelage has made him a proficient young man. John decides to have the boy come to the city and writes the minister to that effect. Herbert Westerbrook, John's son, has a son, Paul, a teller in the bank, whose attentions to Mary Wentworth have been received apathetically by her. Because she is bored by Paul, Mary asks her father to allow her to go to Deer Lake, where she can visit her friend, Myrtle. She is introduced to Harry at Deer Lake by Myrtle and Harry becomes much attached to her.

In the city, Herbert's wife, who has been informed by him of Harry's expected arrival in the city, is much concerned over the chances of her son for the hand of Mary. She tells her husband she will not have her son's chances spoiled by that young outcast, Harry. Harry arrives, and is made bank messenger by his grandfather. Paul, a sort of a black sheep, spends a good share of his time in restaurants wining and dining young women. He always seems to have plenty of money. The directors of the bank consider, with a detective, the theft of sums of money from the bank. The detective reports that the thief is very close in kin to the president, and the latter suspects Harry. He is assured by the detective, however, that Harry is not the thief.

At a dance at the Westerbrook home, Harry happens in. As he is standing in the corridor Herbert's wife comes out and hands her necklace to John Westerbrook, who is talking to Harry. John is called to one side, and leaves the necklace on the table. Little Helen, Paul's sister, whose mother owns the jewels, picks them up and goes to find her mother. The latter returns to the corridor, and finding the necklae gone, is alarmed. John accuses Harry, and the latter denies it and then chokes his grandfather for the insult. John is convinced and tells Harry he is a real Westerbrook. Helen has given the jewels to her mother who has hidden them just to incriminate Harry. Mary has seen her hide them and exposes her. Harry and Mary rejoice on the following day when Harry is informed that he has been made teller in the bank to succeed Paul, who has resigned after an expose, following the arrest of a fellow teller.

UP IN THE AIR (June 9).—Audrey and Archie, the brains, have long since come to a complete understanding of each other and are exchanging sweet nothings as a huge log, dropped by Audrey's irate father, rolls on and collides with Archie's leg. The log is followed quickly by papa, who denounces Archie as a worthless fop. Father goes off to shingle the roof of the shed, as Willie, a rusticated product of the farm, enters and assiduously explains that he is hers and she can have him for the asking. Archie, his spirit somewhat bent by the volley of opprobrious epithets hurled at him by Audrey's father, is on his way home when he gets too close to a blast which is about to go off. Laborers wave flags and gesticulate wildly to warn him, but he misconstrues the warning to be a salutatory manifestation and waves his handkerchief at them. Off goes the blast, and we next see him in the branches of a tall tree, coatless and hatless and almost trouserless.

Audrey gets the assurance of her father that the one who finishes the job assigned him the quickest will be allowed to marry his daughter. Archie is told to dig the cellar of a new home, and the other boys set to work shingling a shed. Working with a spade, and trying to keep one's hands soft and clean, under these conditions, is no easy matter. Archie, therefore, decides to profit by experience. He gets a quantity of dynamite from the tool box of the laborers and buries some in the ground on the site of the new cellar. He also places a quantity in the shed the boys are shingling. These are connected by a wire attached to the percussion cap. Archie sets off the charges. Earth is sent flying in all directions and the shed the boys are on top of goes sailing merrily through the air. Papa hustles into the scene after the boys have landed and they all stand in the new cellar. A better excavation could not have been made, had a gang of workmen dug at the place for years. Papa realizes that there are a few brains back of the clothes and monocle which bedeck Archie and he does not hesitate to hand over the prize, his daughter. The construction company pays papa and the others for their injuries, thinking the accident was due to the company's carelessness.

COHEN'S LUCK (Special—Four Parts—June 11).—Abe Cohen, president of the Buttonhole Makers' Union, bids his daughter, Minnie, and his son, Abe, goodbye as he leaves for Blumental's sweatshop. Sammey Blumenthal, owner of the sweatshop, is a despot, feared by all the workers in his place. He was separated from his wife by an agreement, by which he was to pay her forty dollars a week alimony. Cohen is met at the sweatshop by O'Roque, who solicits the aid of the Union in his campaign for alderman. Cohen tells him he has pledged his support to Tim Murphy. Consequently, O'Roque and Blumenthal conspire and Cohen is discharged. Minnie Cohen is enamored of Blumenthal, much against the wishes of her father. Mrs. McGee and Abe combine and buy a lottery ticket. After much argument, as to who will retain possession of the ticket, Abe tears it in two, each keeping a half. Subsequently Abe is set up in the restaurant business by Murphy in recognition of Abe's political support.

David Moss, Abe's choice for Minnie, pays assiduous court to her, but Minnie can "see" only Blumenthal. The latter and Minnie get married secretly. As the restaurant business is bad, Abe goes out on St. Patrick's Day and tries to sell shamrocks, but his efforts are rewarded by the sale of one only. Murphy advises Mrs. McGee that she has won the $10,000 lottery and when she tries to find the ticket, she realizes that it has been stolen. There is great sorrow as the result. Abe, who had contemplated giving a free dinner, is now very sad. The announcement of Minnie's marriage is read in the paper by Abe and he orders her to bring Blumenthal to him. She goes to get him but he evades her, and she realizes that he has tricked her. She goes to live in a poorly furnished room.

Murphy has been elected, but Abe is still sad. He is advised to mix with the underworld characters and try to find the one who stole Mrs. McGee's ticket. He succeeds, and a big dinner is given to celebrate. Murphy is invited and Minnie returns with David, who has found her languishing in her room, alone. With the party at its height, water, ashes and refuse fall from the flat above. The place is a beldam for a minute, but everything turns out all right, and Minnie gets David.

McQUADE OF THE TRAFFIC SQUAD (June 12).—Policeman Patrick McQuade, of the traffic squad, has a sweetheart. Patrick has a rival in Policeman Flynn, who does not stop at anything to depreciate Patrick in Nora's eyes. Mike Leary, Nora's brother, has just left to drive his employer to the theatre. Patrick arrives to keep an appointment with Nora, and has been enjoying her society only a few minutes when Flynn comes in and advises Patrick that he is wanted at the station house. Patrick leaves and is rather surprised that Flynn does not accompany him. At the station, Patrick learns that he is not wanted and realizes that Flynn has robbed him of a few hours in Nora's company. He returns to the house and fisticuffs is prevented by the interference of Nora.

In a saloon nearby Mike Leary and two crooks plan a robbery. They learn that Patrick is to be on the beat on the night in question and are at first reluctant to do the job. Mike assures them that he will get his sister out for a ride in his employer's car, stop in front of the mansion to be entered and when the time comes whisk the burglars away in the machine with Nora. On the night in question, Nora goes out for a ride and a sto- is made at the marked mansion. The burglars come out with the loot and the machine starts. Patrick follows on his motorcyle, but when he sees Nora, is loath to fire at the fleeing car and gives up pursuit. The following day, when the robbery becomes known, Patrick is suspended on a charge of neglect of duty. Mike is arrested for complicity in the burglary.

Some days later Patrick overhears plans for another break, and follows the crooks. He chases them on his motorcycle, leaps from it to the running board of the automobile, and there is a hand-to-hand fight in the machine. The driver loses control in the excitement and off a pier into the river he sends the car at high speed, with the occupants frantically fighting. The men are arrested, and Patrick is lauded for his fine work. Nora is at the station visiting her brother when Patrick enters. He learns that she had nothing to do with the burglary, being drawn into the plot unconsciously, and Patrick understands.

LUBIN.

ROAD O' STRIFE, NO. 10 ("The Unsparing Sword"—June 7).—The death of Gilbert Jerome attracts great attention, and the grand jury acts promptly, indicting Alene for murder. Her trial is set for an early date. Robert Dane is almost in despair, for though sure that Alene is innocent, he realizes that a terrible array of circumstantial evidence will be brought against her. The show girl, Daisy, has not faltered in her friendship for Alene. A great change has taken place in Daisy's character since her meeting with Alene, and, sickened by the contrast between her own sad past and Alene's innate purity, she has bravely determined that she will rebuild her wrecked life and that henceforth there shall be in it nothing of sorrow or shame. Also, for the first time, she knows the meaning of real love. Though she gives no sign, Dane has completely filled her hungry heart.

In order to obtain money with which to engage a noted lawyer to defend Alene, Dane sells for a thousand dollars his chemical formula, which is really worth a fortune. Soon after, Alene's trial takes place. As Dane feared, the State is able to forge a strong chain of circumstantial evidence, in which even Dane's testimony is a link. It is proved that the poison which killed Gilbert Jerome was contained in the silver cup, and that this cup was handed him by Alene. Her honest indifference to Gilbert's fate is regarded as a demonstration of utter callousness, and her weary bewilderment is construed as the blase indifference of the hardened criminal, the veil of mystery shrouding her life to within the past few months being pointed to with sinister suggestion. The lawyer engaged by Dane stakes everything on the personal appeal which Alene may make to the jury, but when she is called upon to tell her own story, she says simply, "Everything was just as has been said, but I do not know what killed Gilbert Jerome." Very shortly the jury returns its verdict—guilty—and in an agony of horror, Dane hears the girl whom he now realizes is more precious to him than life and all things else that life may hold, condemned to be hanged by the neck until she is dead.

HE'S A BEAR (June 8).—Pat and his fellow students have a night of high jinks. Pat is in no condition to welcome his fiancee, Marion, and her mother, next morning when a wire is received announcing their visit. Hardly have the cards, etc., been removed when Marion and her mother enter. By accident the piano is found to be stuffed with cards and chips, as well as bottles. Marion is shocked. Meanwhile Ralph, a chum of Pat's, aims to win Marion's favor. A reward is offered by the curator of the Zoo for the capture of an escaped bear. Ralph persuades Pat to impersonate the animal. A bearskin has been procured and Pat envelops himself in it on the promise that he will receive a share of the reward. Pat is welcomed back to his cage at the Zoo and Ralph is paid the reward. No one helps Pat escape. Children feed the nice bear many bananas and apples, which Pat uses as missiles to hurl at Ralph, who pays no attention to him. When Pat sees Ralph pass with Marion on his arm, his rage knows no bounds. He escapes and causes a panic. Finally Pat gains the campus, makes his way to Ralph's room and steals the reward money. This gives him a tremendous advantage in the eyes of Marion, and when he explains his absence to her she is all the more willing to be his alone.

TAP! TAP! TAP! (Special—Two Parts—June 9).—Winston Hedges, inebriate son of a wealthy father, carries his vagrancy to a point where the old man will no longer endure him. Heavily in debt, the young man makes a final appeal to his father, who tells him that he will pay his debts for the last time, and Winston is sent off on a yachting trip with a view of removing him from the temptations which surround him in the city. Living with his pretty young wife and baby in a small cottage nearby, the lighthouse keeper, Peters, leads a frugal but happy existence. His thoughts constantly revert to the hardships which he had to endure as a sailor and he determines that his little daughter shall be protected from such. Monthly he saves his wages and invests them in government bonds, which he has secreted where no one can possibly find them.

Fate brings the yacht with Winston Hedges and his gay party aboard abreast the lighthouse and at a time when they are in need of ice. Winston goes ashore to secure some and arrives at the lighthouse man's cottage just as old Peters is about to succumb to an attack of heart failure. Winston realizes that the man is in danger and sends Mary, the young wife, back to the landing platform to dispatch a sailor to bring Dr. Bruce ashore from the yacht. Winston is thus left alone with the old lighthouse keeper, who realizes that he may die before he can tell his wife of the government bonds which he has been saving for the benefit of his baby. He takes them from the secret hiding place, but the effort proves too much for him and he expires with them in his hand before the return of Mary and the doctor. The old man has told Winston that no one else knows of the existence of the bonds, so Winston finds himself face to face with the temptation which the opportunity affords to rehabilitate his financial status. The use Winston makes of this opportunity, and his acquaintance with the old lighthouse keeper's family lead to a thrilling dramatic climax of incidents which result in a picture of strong dramatic power and carrying with it a powerful moral tone.

COURAGE AND THE MAN (Special—Three Parts—June 10).—Ned Reed, a talented young physician, is forced to seek health in the Canadian northwest woods. He is frail in general health and is slightly crippled in one leg. He is accompanied by his wife, Ethel. Reed and Etnel soon find that their cabin is located close to that of Travis, a former sweetheart of Ethel's. Reed does not know that Travis has fled to the woods after killing Reed's young brother. While Reed is daily absorbed in his work of scientific research, Ethel sees much of Travis. Rogers, a woodman and cabin-mate of Travis, warns him that he had best keep away from Reed's wife. When Reed discovers that Travis is encouraging Ethel in every way to reciprocate his affections, there comes a bitter realization of his helplessness and of the superior qualities of Travis.

One day Rogers, the woodsman, discovers, hidden in Travis's trunk, news clippings which convince him that Travis is the slayer of Reed's brother. He openly accuses Travis. Travis threatens to kill him if he tells Reed. Rogers does tell the physician and Travis, from hiding, sees him. That night Rogers and Travis realize that each is waiting for the opportunity to slay the other. They arm themselves and wait tensely for the first move. They meet on the cliff above the cabin in terrific physical combat. This develops into a revolver duel in which Travis fires a shot that wounds Rogers. In the darkness of the night Travis cannot find Rogers's body and believes him dead. Meanwhile Reed, who has started in a blaze of fury to find Travis, has seen the shooting. He encounters Travis. Travis pulls a revolver to kwill Reed, but the steady, accusing stare of the man whose brother he has slain causes Travis to lower the gun. Reed's calmness only drives the fear-stricken Travis more frantic. Reed grimly orders him back to his hut. He realizes that in the solitude of the forest there is no hand to avenge his brother's death.

Travis returns to the hut, haunted by the bloody face of Rogers. He imagines he sees Rogers's accusing face staring down at him from the cliff above. In a panic of fear he fires upwards toward the edge of the cliff. The shot dislodges a small stone which starts a small-sized landslide. This carries the body of Rogers down the side of the mountain and deposits it at the very door of Travis's hut, where Travis finds it. Rogers' hand seems to point accusingly at Travis. Travis, cold with indescribable fear, slowly raises a revolver to his temple and kills himself. Reed, who has followed Travis to the hut, sees the suicide. He hurries into the hut to find Rogers still alive, and through his medical skill saves his life. Reed returns to his own cabin, still heartbroken ovef the thought that Ethel's affections have been lessened through the interference of Travis. But he finds that the tragedy has brought her to a speedy realization of her folly. She is asleep in a chair, a contented smile on her face, and one of the canes used by the crippled physician pressed close to her breast.

THE CORNET (June 11).—A man's passion for his cornet is a source of unending trouble to his wife, who is drudging along trying to do all the work of the house and mind her baby girl. On one occasion the husband returns home, and, despite the appeal of his wife not to practice on the cornet for fear of waking the baby, goes into his room and starts practicing. In a fury of rage she enters his room, and, snatching the cornet from his lips, stamps it into an unrecognizable mass. Enraged, the man picks up a chair to strike her, but, seeing her unafraid, drops it. His wife starts to lecture him, but he silences her and then leaves.

first trying to take her little savings to buy a new instrument. In this he doesn't succeed, but it whets his determination to leave her.

He takes a little tumble-down shack and starts to save little by little to buy a certain cornet which is in the window of a second-hand shop down the street. Later we find his wife ill and attended by kind neighbors and a compassionate landlord. The child has grown to a precocious waif of the street. The father has saved enough to buy the cornet and goes to the store to secure it. He sees a weeping child turned brutally away from a neigboring florist's because she has no money to buy flowers for her sick mother. He talks to her but does not recognize his own child. His heart is touched and he buys the flowers with his cornet money. He is drawn home by the grateful child only to find it is his own. There the reconciliation follows and a sane and unselfish future opens.

NEARLY A PRIZE FIGHTER (June 12).—Bill, a gentleman with a taste for travel and no visible means of paying his way, arrives with his valet, Mike, in his private freight car. They make a leisurely tour of the city, helping themselves, as a matter of course, to the lunch-boxes of some laborers. They hasten away, however, before finger bowl time, in order to escape the wrath of the workingmen. In a saloon, under the swinging doors of which they have crawled to the free lunch station, Bill and Mike hear a fight promoter excitedly explain to his partner that the night's match must be called off because "The Walloping Walloper" and "Battle Axe Joe" cannot appear. It is a golden opportunity for Bill and Mike.

They introduce themselves as pugilists and offer to put up a good fight. The promoters reluctantly accept them and all hurry off to training quarters. Suddenly comes word announcing the arrival of one of the real fighters. Either Bill or Mike will have to meet him. Bill, at a loss, discovers a sharp pointed iron bar and a happy thought comes to him. He instructs Mike to jab the spear upward through the floor of the ring as he stands in the cellar. It is Bill's plan to keep his opponent in one corner of the enclosure. The bout begins and the scheme works. As the fighter raises his foot in pain Bill gives him a terrific uppercut which lands him on the floor. In the ensuing lively round, Bill himself gets into the fatal corner and receives one of Mike's fiendish jabs. With a howl he leaps over the ropes and never stops until his freight car is reached. Mike starts soon afterwards, but is handed the loser's share.

ESSANAY.

So when Weston, a wealthy bachelor, asks for her hand, they are married. Marie, a step-sister, who is used pretty much as a slavey around the house, sympathizes with Kent Harding and he grows to love her. Eloise learns that wealth without love is unhappiness. She is in a gilded cage. Marie and Kent are married. Eloise spends her life in a round of pleasure which palls without love.

THE ROMANCE OF AN AMERICAN DUCHESS (Special—Two Parts—June 8).—The Duke de Longtour, a European nobleman, with impoverished estates, comes to America and wins the hand of Stephana Martin, an American heiress, defeating Marquis Ferdinand, an adventurer and his rival. He leaves a sting in the breast of Countess Maria, who loves him. The young nobleman brings his wife to Europe. The Countess and the Marquis, driven by a common interest, plot to estrange the young couple so that the Marquis can marry the heiress and Countess Maria can have the Duke. They hire an adventuress, and the Marquis, posing as a friend, brings Stephana to a cabaret just in time to see the adventuress throw her arms about the Duke. Stephana at once believes the worst and arranges to leave the Duke. But the Duke has befriended the adventuress and she confesses all. The plotters are denounced and the husband and wife reunited.

LOST IN THE JUNGLE AND A CLOSE SHAVE (June 9).—Joe Boko, the barber, gets a victim and instead of shaving him, tells a story of himself as a great ball player. But when he illustrates how he biffed an umpire, the irate customer kicks him into the street. Dreamy Dud appears perched on a telegraph pole watching the ball game. Another time Dud and Wag, his dog, get lost in a jungle. They meet a snake who swallows Wag and has to cough him up again. Then they have a fight with a monkey, who throws cocoanuts at them. Finally, Dud meets an ostrich who puts him on his back. Then Mr. Ostrich sees a snake and runs away. On his journey he comes upon a precipice. Mr. Ostrich stretches his neck clear across. Dud starts to walk across on it, but right in the middle he falls and wakes up on the floor, where he has fallen on the faithful Wag.

SWEEDIE'S FINISH (June 10).—Sweedie, the servant girl, is in love with a fireman, but her affections are not returned. The fireman escapes her caresses and gains the fire house and loses her seven hours later when a fire breaks out. The next day she finds him with another woman and administers punishment. Then she opens a lady barber shop and her first customer is the faithless fireman. She gives him a close and disagreeable shave and is interrupted by the news that she is an heiress. The fireman's affection kindles at the news and he declares his love. To celebrate their engagement they go out in Swedie's new car and the romance ends at about 650 feet above ground when the car blows up and both disappear from view.

THE GREATER COURAGE (Special—3 Parts June 12).—Gilbert and Lawrence Carthage are in love with Peggy Lorraine. George Duncan, a wealthy and unscrupulous bachelor, insults Peggy in Gilbert's presence. Being timid and retiring, he does nothing. This infuriates Peggy, who previously had favored him, and she writes to Lawrence, a dashing, self-confident character, that she loves him. Stung by Peggy's taunts, Gilbert goes to Duncan's home to force an apology from him. Lawrence follows, bent on the same mission. In the quarrel Duncan is slain. Suspicion points to Gilbert. He refuses to make a statement, is tried by his own father, Judge Carthage, convicted and sentenced to prison.

Later Lawrence leaves home and is shot in a saloon brawl. He sends for his father and Peggy and confesses that he killed Duncan and that Gilbert took the blame because he thought Peggy loved Lawrence. Lawrence dies and Peggy and the judge procure a pardon and present it to Gilbert at the prison. There the girl tells him she had always loved him and that she wrote Lawrence only out of pique. She tells him he is the man with the greater courage.

LIFE'S MYSTERIES (June 3).—After reading in the sport section of the paper of the prodigious strength of Jess Willard, Flossie decides that the man she marries must not only be handsome but tall and powerful of build. Up to this time young Billy, who is short in stature, has been her favorite suitor; but Flossie's decision, coupled with the arrival of Count Padinsky, who is an exemplification of Flossie's type ideal of a husband, put faithful Billy a little out of the running.

At Fluossie's home the Count is welcomed with open arms by the family, who give a formal reception in his honor. Billy seeks to gain admittance to the function but is summarily shooed from the door. Nothing daunted Billy enters via a rear window. While making his way through the halls Billy steps into a room to escape detection. Zounds! It is the Count's room. Before Billy can leave the Count enters and the unhappy lover is compelled to hide. But he learns an amazing truth. The Count is not big and powerful as he appears to be—but padded!

With this information Billy happily starts out to avenge his wrongs. Three bandits and a chauffeur are hired by him. They decoy the Count from Flossie's home, pack him into an automobile, and at a lonely spot in the woods compel him to change his dress suit and pads for a ballet dancer's costume. Then he is taken back to Flossie's home and turned loose in the midst of the other guests. Pandemonium follows. The Count finally disentangles himself from the crowd and is last seen doing a Marathon down the roadway, while Billy, who has hovered near the scene, takes the frightened and repentant Flossie into his arms.

WIFE FOR WIFE (Special—Three Parts—"Broadway Favorites" Feature—May 31)—Called to Europe on business, Edward Walton entrusts the management of his estate to his friend, Richard Singleton. The latter meets Edith, who, with her sister Grace, is visiting her aunt. He falls in love with the girl. Edith, however, learns of Richard's intimacy with Susie, a mulatto slave, and spurns his advances. Hoping to win Edith back, Richard sells Susie. His efforts go for naught. Edith, turning a deaf ear to his pleas, goes abroad. George, Susie's husband, is driven almost insane because of his wife's fate. Fearing the mulatto's anger, Richard tells him that Susie was sold in accordance with instructions received from Edward. Edith and Edward meet abroad and are married. Shortly afterward, the two return home. Unaware of all that has passed between Edith and Richard, Edward is struck by their peculiar conduct when the two are introduced to each other. Suspicion forces itself into his heart.

George receives word of Susie's death. He resolves to make Edward pay—wife for wife—for the misery he thinks his master had caused him. Richard makes his home in the village hotel. Learning that his master has been called away on business and that Edith will be alone that night, George hastens to Richard and imparts this information to him. Richard still loves Edith. Resolved to win her at all costs, he calls upon her late that evening. Edith repulses his protestations of love. Inflamed, the scoundrel seizes her in his arms. Edith is struggling in Richard's embrace when Edward returns home unexpectedly. The husband endeavors to shoot his false friend. Richard returns the shot. The bullet strikes Edward in the head and deprives him of his reason. Edith vainly endeavors to nurse her husband back to health. According to the physician, only a shock such as he has already undergone, can bring back his mind. Not satisfied with the misery he has caused, George continues his plotting. The mulatto informs Richard that Edith is wearying of her invalid husband.

Led to believe that her heart has returned to him, Richard calls upon Edith. Again Edward comes upon the scoundrel while the latter is endeavoring to embrace Edith. The sight brings back Edward's reason. Snatching a sword from the wall, Richard endeavors to slay the man he has wronged. Edward, however, secures a sword and engages his false friend in mortal combat. The fight ends with Richard's death. Overcome by the shock, the victor takes to his bed. Furious at the frustration of his plans, George determines upon a last stroke. Suddenly appearing before his master, he binds Edward and then tells him upon whose head all guilt for the trouble lies. Delving into a gunnysack he holds in his hand, the maddened slave brings forth a rattlesnake. Just as George is about to allow the reptile to bury its fangs into his helpless victim, Edward tells him of how Richard had sold Susie to get her out of his way. In his surprise, the mulatto loosens his grasp upon the rattlesnake. The next instant, the poisonous teeth are plunged deep into his arm.

Edith enters in answer to her husband's cries for help. She finds George writhing in the agonies of death. Freed of his bonds, Edward tells Edith of how both had been victimized and vows to make amends for his lack of faith in her.

"HAM" IN THE NUT FACTORY (June 1)—Worn out by the strains of looking after the patients in his private insane asylum, Professor Squirrel hires Ham and Bud to assume charge of the institution while he takes a vacation. Ham and Bud are warned to beware of Meek, the most dangerous patient. Eclaire, who seeks to rob his ward, Caprice, of her fortune, determines to place her in the asylum. For the sum of $1,000, Ham and Bud are induced to lock Caprice in a cell. This, although Caprice's pleas make Ham shed bitter tears. Caprice's lover, Danny, learns what has occurred and plans to free his sweetheart.

The peculiarities exhibited by the patients get on the nerves of Ham and Bud. After several encounters with the inmates, the adventurers discover that Meek is loose. They flee in terror. At the same time, Eclaire is knocked unconscious by one of the patients. Danny arrives upon the scene and releases Caprice. Ham and Bud, with Meek close behind, continue their wild efforts to escape. Utterly exhausted, the adventurers finally fall to the ground. Meek, howling fiendishly, approaches. Just as Ham and Bud expect to be murdered in cold blood, Meek bends over, gently taps both on the shoulders and gleefully cries, "Tag! you're it!"

THE SECRET WELL (Special—Two Parts—June 2)—Hot on the trail of Wharton, a moonshiner, Denton chases his man until the latter reaches a pile of rubbish in an alley. There Wharton disappears. Unable to find him, Denton secures the assistance of Netty and Lesan and returns to the scene. While the men are poking about in the rubbish, a short distance away, Netty overturns a box and discovers an empty well. An instant later, Wharton emerges from the well and makes the girl captive. Compelled to follow the criminal, Netty finds that a passage at the bottom of the well connects the latter with the chimney of a deserted house.

A ladder runs up this chimney. Upon reaching the fourth floor, Wharton opens a secret door which leads into his gang's den. In the meantime, Lesan and Denton, searching for Netty, discover the well. While Lesan investigates, Denton goes for help. The gang discovers Lesan's presence in the chimney. Ignorant of the secret door, the detective climbs to the roof. There he is beset by the moonshiners who leave him unconscious. Lesan, however, presently learns of the secret door. His effort to enter the room leads to his capture. He eventually makes his escape and is joined outside the building by Denton and a squad of policemen. When the latter attempt to enter the room and rescue Netty, they find that the criminals have tied a rope around the girl and have suspended her from the window. Question threatens to cut this rope should the officers enter the room. Lesan, however, saves Netty's life by a daring ruse. The officers and moonshiners engage in a terriffic battle, which ends with the capture of the criminals.

THE BELL OF PENANCE (A Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce Re-Issue— June 4)—Henry Fitch, a young American, rescues the Donna Josefa and her cousin from a band of ruffians. Refusing to pose as a hero, Fitch continues his journey. He later presents a letter of introduction to Senor Carrillo and, to his surprise, learns that Josefa is his host's daughter. Junipero Serra, a Spaniard who seeks to wed Josefa, finds a rival in the American. Junipero endeavors to trick the girl into a marriage, but Fitch frustrates the plot and elopes with his sweetheart. The two are married in Mexico.

A decoy letter causes Fitch and his bride to return to California a year later. There, at Junipero's instigation, Fitch is arrested and tried before an ecclesiastical court for violating the laws of the Church and territory. The penalty for this offense is imprisonment and banishment, unless the offender will produce such penance and reparation as can be noticed throughout the whole pueblo. Father Vincente, who sympathizes with the unhappy couple, secretly suggests to Josefa that Fitch secure a bell to replace the one that had been stolen from the tower of the church several years before.

A month later, Fitch stands before his three judges. A sudden commotion goes through the court as an unexpected sound cleaves the air. Noticing the delight of the judges, who listen to the tolling of the bell, the American says: "This bell is my penance and reparation. Its voice can be heard throughout the pueblo and will for all time proclaim the clemency and wisdom of this court in setting me free!"

THE HUMAN CHAIN (Episode No. 30 of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series—June 5)—Word that a package of gems valued at $30,000 reposes in the express safe at the Oceanside office, causes Deering and his gang to plot to gain possession of the gems. Decoying Helen out of the station, Deering makes her a prisoner while another member of the gang rifles the safe and secures the package. Helen, however, later seizes the package from the crook's hands and hurls it into the river. Throwing the girl aside, Deering and his men jump into a launch in their effort to recover the gems. Accompanied by Morton and a couple of trackmen who are attracted to the scene by her shouts for help, Helen rushes to the trestle which spans the river a short distance away.

The girl telegrapher sees the package floating down the stream towards the bridge. While the railroad men form a human chain, Helen climbs down and tries to catch the package with her feet. Deering and his gang arrive at this moment. Not only do they obtain the gems, but also boldly tear Helen from the arms of the man supporting her. While the wharf rats' launch speeds down the river, Morton halts a freight train. His story causes the engineer to cut his locomotive loose and speed down the track along the water's edge in pursuit of the crooks. Unaware of this pursuit, the wharf rats attempt to land. They are captured by the train crew after a hard battle and Helen is released.

HER HUSBAND'S HONOR (Special—Two Parts—June 7)—Her desire for adventure causes Florence to aid her father in smuggling diamonds into this country. Meeting Robbins, a customs inspector, the girl falls in love with him. The two are eventually married. Secret Service Agent Ellen is led to suspect Cole and Florence. A visit to Stoddard, a jeweler, confirms this suspicion. Shortly afterward, Cole informs Robbins of his desire to have Florence accompany him abroad.

U. S. agents in Paris trail the suspects and learn that Cole intends to smuggle a large number of gems. When the two return to these shores Ellen has them searched. This search proves fruitless. Upon entering her home an hour later, Florence places a box of candy she has carried all along, upon the table. Robbins carelessly takes one of the chocolates and bites into it. Then comes the discovery that each piece of candy contains a smuggled gem.

Horrified, the inspector spurns his wife's explanations. Hastening to his chief, the boy gives him the candy containing the smuggled gems and tells him the story. Florence enters the Deputy Collector's office in time to see her husband place his resignation in his chief's hand. Florence's grief touches the Deputy Collector's heart and he tears up Robbins' resignation. Realizing that his wife's repentance is sincere, the young man forgives her.

HAM AT THE FAIR (June 8)—While enjoying the beauties of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Diego, Cal., Ham meets Goldie. Flattered by her evident admiration for him, Ham graciously consents to kiss her. The next instant Goldie screams for help. Only when Ham makes her a present of a large sum of money—part of a roll he had found—does Goldie consent to remain quiet. In his desire to see somebody else stung, Ham hunts for Bud. The latter falls hard when he meets Goldie and is victimized as easily as Ham was. Meeting a westerner of ferocious appearance, Ham and Bud induce him to try his luck with Goldie. To the intense amazement of the adventurers, not only does the westerner make a hit with Goldie, but she also gives him the money she had received from them.

Later, Bud meets a young man who offers to bet him that he cannot pick up six small wood blocks from the ground without saying "ouch!" Again Bud allows himself to be buncoed. Just as he stoops to pick up the sixth block, he receives so violent a kick that he loses his bet. Bud tries this scheme on Ham and wins back the money he had lost to the swindler. Ham in turn tries it on Goldie and gets his money back. Later, he meets the swindler, who had taught the trick to Bud. Ignorant of this, Ham, refusing to listen to Bud's pleas, tries it on the man and loses every penny he has. Later the adventurers see Goldie and the swindler dividing their profits. One long, lingering look at the money that had belonged to them—and Ham and Bud head for a building in the front of which hangs a sign, "Wanted, two men to act as Egyptian mummies!"

THE MONEY LEECHES (Special—Two Parts—June 9)—An effort is being made to rid the city of loan sharks. Molly and Holcomb are given this assignment. Stanley, a prominent banker, offers them his aid. Shortly afterward, Bob Lewis, one of Stanley's employes, is arrested on the charge of having robbed the bank. The boy tells his story to Molly. Unable to secure money with which to pay his mother's doctor bills, Bob had borrowed money from Fox, a loan shark located above the bank. Later, unable to continue paying the exorbitant interest demanded, the boy was warned that unless he produced the money shortly, his employer would be informed. Terrified, Bob stole.

Although Stanley insists that Bob be punished, Molly succeeds in delaying action. She also succeeds in securing a position as typist in Fox's office. Entering the office a few days later, she finds a scarfpin lying on the floor. Molly recognizes it as Stanley's property. Then comes the discovery that Stanley is really the head of the institution. Peering through a hole in a secret panel between his office and the loan office, Stanley sees Molly going through Fox's papers. He and his figurehead capture the girl.

Holcomb, who has been waiting for a signal from Molly, hears the struggle. Upon entering the office he finds Fox alone. A scream from behind the wall arouses his suspicion. Covering Fox with his pistol, Holcomb traces the cries and discovers the secret panel. Stanley and Fox are eventually placed under arrest. By promising to close their illegal business and to withdraw the charge against Bob, the bank president and his accomplice secure their freedom.

THE HAUNTING FEAR (Special—Three Parts—June 11)—Lured by Diana, Katherine runs away from home. The foolish girl is soon drawn into the whirlpool. She meets Mace, a notorious man-about-town, and is fascinated by him. Doctor Busby, an insane physician, recognizes in Mace the man who had caused his daughter's death. Shortly afterward, Katherine discovers Mace's real character. Wild with rage, she stabs him. Believing herself to be a murderess, Katherine flees. The crime occurs opposite Busby's home. The doctor witneses all that happens and carries the wounded man into his house.

When Mace revives, he finds himself in the clutches of a madman who intends to torture him and thus avenge his daughter's death. In the meantime, haunted by fear, Katherine flees from place to place. Sleep is denied her. Half-crazed, she pours her tale into the ears of Father Richard, a priest. At his suggestion, Katherine surrenders herself to the police. The latter, however, unable to prove such a crime to have been committed, set the girl free. Katherine thereupon resolves to take the veil and enters upon her novitiate.

Mace escapes from Busby's clutches. Frenzied by his frightful experience, he seeks the girl who was responsible for it. Mace traces Katherine to the convent. Forcing his way into the place, he comes upon the girl as she is praying for forgiveness. Her words cause the man to stay his hand. Katherine thus learns that she is not a murderess. Father Richard enters and witnesses the startling denouement. Dropping to her knees once more, Katherine, folding her hands in prayer, weeps tears of joy and thanksgiving.

THE PAY TRAIN (Episode 31 "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series"—June 12).—Tony, a Mexican section hand, endeavors to kiss Helen. The girl's struggles attract O'Mally's attention and he floors Tony. The latter departs vowing revenge. At his orders, Velasquez and Orturo throw down their tools and quit work. Tony has discovered that the pay train is due shortly. He and his accomplices plot to derail the train and steal the money from the wreck. Helen overhears the plot, but before she can make use of the information, the Mexicans discover her presence. The girl is captured and thrown into a cattle car to prevent her from betraying their plans.

While Tony and his men open the derailing switch, Helen discovers a revolver which had been dropped by one of the desperadoes, lying on the ground beside the car. With a strip torn from her dress for a line and a hairpin for a hook, the plucky girl succeeds in securing the weapon. The semaphore pole is but a short distance away. Carefully leveling her pistol, Helen shoots at the wire controlling the semaphore arm. Four shots go wild. The pay train just rounds the curve a hundred yards away when the last bullet severs the wire. The arm swings up to "Danger!" The train is brought to a halt. Helen's plight is discovered. As the result of her story, the train hands institute a man hunt, which ends with the death of Tony and the capture of his accomplices.

HOW CALLAHAN CLEANED UP LITTLE HELL (Special—3 Parts—June 3).—When Jimmie Collins, a pickpocket, is arested and brought before Captain Callahan of the Tenth, he is surprised because he is lodged in a cell. Jimmie claims acquaitanceship with Bill McFarlin, a corrupt political boss, and he sneers at Captain Callahan when he is ordered to be placed behind the cell bars. Jimmie gets word to Boss McFarlin, who confidently visits Captain Callahand and says: "One of your men arrested a little friend of mine on the cars and I want you to let him go." McFarlin is astonished and vows immediate reprisal when Captain Callahan refuses to free the pickpocket. Boss McFarlin seeks the advice of an unscrupulous lawyer, and a writ of habeas corpus is issued for the body of Jimmie Collins. This move is circumvented by Captain Callahan, who transfers Collins into the custody of a sergeant in charge of a suburban police station. Collins is finally convicted and sent to prison. Boss McFarlin seeks to have Callahan removed from the office through the influence of his friend, the mayor. The mayor tells him he cannot remove the captain as he stands high in public esteem. However, the mayor, the chief of police and Boss McFarlin plot against Captain Callahan, and the result of their machinations is shown when Callahan is ordered by the chief of police to take charge of an unlawful city district, known as "Little Hell."

When Captain Callahan takes charge of Little Hell, the papers predict a clean-up of the district, and Jim O'Neil, boss of Little Hell, becomes anxious. With Captain Callahan's assumption of authority in Little Hell, the work of reformation begins, and Boss O'Neil arrives at the conclusion that Callahan is disgruntled because no graft has been offered him. Jake Stahl, chief henchman of the boss, is arrested for conducting a disorderly resort. Boss O'Neil and a brewery agent intercede for Stahl; but Callahan remains firm. O'Neil hurls a threat at the captain as he files out of the room. Mary, daughter of Captain Callahan, undergoes a difficult and expensive operation. The bill for professional services rendered amounts to $300. Added to this expense, there comes a letter from mortgage brokers informing Callahan that the interest and part principal of the mortgage on his little home, amounting to $699.54, is due and payable at once. Callahan is worried because he has no funds to meet all of these expenses. The letter from the mortgage brokers was instigated by Boss O'Neil. O'Neil calls at the Callahan home and leaves a package of bank notes. Callahan tells his wife: "If I keep this money, I shall belong to O'Neil body and soul; but the home is yours as well as mine. What shall I do?" Mrs. Callahan tells her husband to return the money.

News of Callahan's financial difficulties have caused his old comrades on the police force to get busy, and they raise the funds to lift the mortgage, much to the chagrin of Boss O'Neil, who tells Gourley, another henchman, that it is worth a thousand dollars to him to put Callahan out of the way. Gourley indicates his willingness to do the job, and is given half the money in advance. Two days before election, it apears that O'Neil's candidate for office may be defeated. The political machine starts to grind and no effort is spared to put across the O'Neil candidate. The night before election day, Tom Gourley's mother is seized with illness, and Gourley explains to O'Neil that the reason he could not appear sooner at the polls was because of that fact. Excitement increases during the day of election and there are many riots. Gourley overhears O'Neil and another henchman plotting his downfall, saying that he knows too much. Gourley confronts O'Neil and his henchman with drawn revolver. An altercation ensues, and Callahan arrives on the scene. O'Neil, Gourley and others are arrested. Callahan, however, permits Gourley to see his sick mother before going to jail, and thus wins the gratitude of the henchman. Toughs assault Callahan, and he is being overcome, when Gourley returns from his home and saves Callahan's life. Gourley then goes to Callahan, and says: "Hereafter you and me's pals. Say the word and me and you cleans up Little Hell!"

THE BATTLE (Re-issue No. 1—June 11).—A battle of the Civil War takes place outside the home of the captain's sweetheart, where she is left alone; and he, panic-stricken by the sight of his comrades falling all around him, rushes in, trembling with fear, to hide. She laughs in scorn at his cowardice, and commands him, implores him by his love for her, to play the man—go back and fight. Her fortitude inspires him, and he manages to rejoin his company before his absence is noticed. Ammunition runs low, and somebody must take the hazardous journey to procure more from another regiment. He volunteers, and faces death at every turn. The opposing forces build bonfires along the road to menace the powder wagons. Several of the powder wagons are blown up, and his companions in the desperate adventure are killed. But with magnificent courage he brings the last remaining wagon through, and thus saves the day. His reward is not the praise of his general, lying, wounded in the girl's home, but the wonderful light that glows in his sweetheart's eyes.

MAN AND HIS MASTER (Special—Two Parts—June 8).—The selfish factory owner really believes himself made of a different clay from that of which his workmen are fashioned. His young daughter, however, does not share his ideas, and does everything in her power to alleviate the misery of the poor. They call her, in gratitude, the angel of the tenements. Although she knows her father to be stern and unyielding, she does not realize how deeply he despises the working classes until she and her lover, the factory foreman, announce their betrothal. Then he reveals his false pride, as he declares that his daughter shall not marry a man who has risen from the ranks. The discontentment of the employees with their wages comes to a head, and they demand satisfaction. The foreman acts as intermediary, and is coldly received by the master. "If they are not satisfied, let them get out!" is the ultimatum. The men go out on strike, and the factory is shut down and guarded by the police.

A month passes, and the master reads with increasing satisfaction of the misery that has fallen upon the strikers. The foreman appeals to him in vain for a conference with the men. The master decides to bring still greater pressure to bear upon the malcontents, and writes his lawyers, making an appointment for a conference, at which they will discuss the raising of rents throughout the tenements. Going to keep his appointment, the master is stricken by apoplexy and falls in a lonely street. A young Italian, who has been working in the factory until the shutdown, comes out of the tenements to gather wood for a fire, the night being cold. He finds the master lying helpless in the street, and with great difficulty takes him home, where his young wife does what she can for the sufferer. His daughter, discovering that he has not returned home, appeals to her lover. The Italian comes running up with his news. The workmen follow the foreman and the girl to the tenements, where they threaten to take their revenge upon the now helpless master; but the girl appeals to their better natures, and they assist in getting the master home.

Here, after a long illness, he recovers. He is a changed man. On his first interview with the foreman, he says humbly: "My Master has taught me the true mastery of men." He shows his gratitude to the Italian, and gives his blessing to the marriage.

THE DIVIDED LOCKET (June 10).—When their mother died, Harry and Edith longed for mementos of her. Most desirable of all her little trinkets was a locket containing her portrait and that of their father. They quarreled over the possession of it, and their father adjusted matters by giving half of the locket to each claimant. Time passed, then their father also died, and they were alone in the world. Neighbors adopted the boy and girl. Harry's guardian treated him brutally, and one day a passer-by rescued the boy from his clutches. He was a gypsy, and, rather than bear longer his guardian's ill treatment, Harry went willingly with the wandering tribe. Years passed, and Harry, now at man's estate, loved the belle of the camp. One day a member of the tribe brought to the camp a little girl whom he had stolen out of revenge for her father's rough treatment of him. Harry found on the child the half of the locket which matched his own, and learned that the girl was Edith's daughter. Swearing the child to secrecy, he took her home, on condition that she bring him a picture of her mother. His gypsy sweetheart saw him kissing his sister's portrait, and jealousy flamed in her. Putting two and two together, she went straight to the child's home and attacked her supposed rival with a poniard. Harry, following her, arrived in time to rescue his sister and explain everything to his sweetheart. For love and his people he forsook the old ties.

LIFE'S CHANGING TIDE (June 12).—Loveliest of all lasses in the village by the sea was Pearl, the old fisherman's daughter. David Mallory had watched her grow to womanhood. One day he realized that Pearl loved his brother, Alan. Then a girl came to the village who was not like the simple fisher lasses, and Alan forgot Pearl. His infatuation for the novelist grew apace. Gossips carried the news to David and to Pearl. The girl was heartbroken; David accosted his brother and demanded an explanation. Hot words passed between them. Shrinking beside the window of the cabin, Pearl saw Alan rush out of the door, followed by David. At her touch on his arm, David turned. "Alan said I was making a fool of myself over the lady novelist," he stammered. At the same instant, Alan burst into the novelist's cabin and demanded passionately that she marry him. Fearing violence, she temporized. "I will marry you tomorrow," she said, and with that promise Alan went joyfully away. Next day he saw a young city fellow enter the girl's cabin—her fiance, for whom she had telegraphed. When he realized that he had been tricked, a revolver flashed in his hand. David, who had followed his brother, flung himself upon the furious lad and disarmed him. The pity of it was that Pearl, too, had seen what passed. To David's pleas on his brother's behalf she was deaf. If only David would see—but he did not, so she threw maiden modesty to the winds. "Speak for yourself, David" she whispered.

BIG U.

IN HIS MIND'S EYE (June 10).—The story opens with Peter von Helm, a blind beggar, seated on the street corner, playing on an old battered violin. He reviews his life in memory. He is shown first on the eve of his triumph, in a large hall, playing to fashionable guests, who applaud him wildly. A Miss Winton comes to meet him with her mother and asks him to their home. He refuses and rushes home to his wife, who is expecting a child. Arriving there, he finds a little daughter born to him, but his wife is dying. He holds her in his arms as she passes away. A few weeks elapse and Miss Winton and her mother come to call upon him. The girl find him in a receptive mood for sympathy and by a clever ruse forces him to hold her in his arms. Later he marries her and eighteen years elapse. He lives in a beautiful home, run much too wildly by his wife. He sits alone in his study, reading a note from his daughter, Margaret, telling of her proposed visit home, while his wife entertains lavishly in the gambling hall below, and flirts with Franklin. Von Helm, descending at length to his guests, finds her in Franklin's arms. At that moment his daughter arrives and he forgets all in the happiness of their meeting.

Norton, his scheming friend, makes a play for her and the wife, to further her plans, decides to throw them together. Later, as she is planning for them to run away together, Von Helm enters in time to stop them. He turns in a fury on his wife and Margaret, and Norton escapes. He follows his wife to her boudoir and as he turns on her, she throws a lighted alcohol lamp in his face. When the doctors take off the bandages, they find he is blind. All is lost to him and he starts on the downward path. His vision ends and he rattles the little tin cup, begging for coins. 'Frisco Mag, who is his daughter, Margaret, the lowest type of the woman of the streets, comes along and, seeing the beggar, gives him a few coins and starts to speak to him. Instantly he recognizes his daughter's voice and clutches her by the arm, finds that it is true. Overjoyed, the two cling to each other and then the girl takes her father home to his little tenement room. Then she walks to a corner of the room, smooths her hair, and takes off her cheap jewelry. When she kneels at his feet, he runs his hands over her smoothly parted hair and smiles a sigh of relief. He takes her in his arms and offers up a silent prayer.

It Means Dollars to the Man Who Knows

"I am one of the owners of the Oregon Theatre at Salem, Oregon, and at present giving it personal management. Recently I gave this Screen (installed March 9th) some very exhaustive tests to determine just what economy we were getting. The results were not only satisfactory, but astonishing. The layman will not appreciate this as I do, for I am a professional electrical engineer. When I mention a wattage consumption of 45% of what we had with the other screen, it means dollars to the man who knows."

ACROSS THE FOOTLIGHTS (Two Parts—June 13).—Larry Moore is a young amateur actor and lives at the same boarding house with Adele Lawrence, a rising young star, who has just secured the leading part in a play called "The Love Behind the Throne." Moore has been unsuccessful in his attempts to get a place and Adele sympathizes with him deeply. In the play "The Love Behind the Throne" makes such a hit as to put the leading man completely in the shadow. This causes him to become chagrined and fall down with his part which leads up to his discharge. The manager of the theater sends back to the theatrical agent for a new leading man and Larry is sent on. His rehearsal is so inferior, however, that he never has a chance to play. Adele is deeply sorry for him.

After Larry leaves, the manager endeavors to make love to Adele and a struggle ensues, Larry returning in time to rescue her. Adele quits the show and she and Larry are married, refusing to accept any engagements, except where both may play. This leads them into inferior repertoire, which finally comes to an end. Larry receives two or three offers but refuses to accept unless his wife can go with him as a member of the company. He finally receives a flattering offer, however, and Adele forces him to accept, sacrificing herself for his betterment of condition. Larry scores a big success and Adele breathlessly watches him as he wins new laurels each night. He, however, contracts diphtheria and is taken to a hospital. Adele goes to him posing as a nurse and remains at his side running the risk of catching the disease herself.

After several days Adele becomes convinced that Larry has only tonsilitis and not the dread diphtheria. She leaves the hospital and endeavors to obtain his release. She meets Max Harris, the manager of "The Love Behind the Throne" company, and he promises to obtain Larry's release from the hospital if she will appear in a revival of "The Love Behind the Throne." She consents and wins back her old triumphs. Larry sits in the audience beside Harris. A stage hand trips over an electric wire and overturns a light, setting the place on fire. In the ensuing fire, Larry rescues Adele.

Paul attempts to shoot it, but Mary's father interferes. A net is set about the hole and the party scatter in different directions to await the return of the animal. A huge lion, seeing the party, attempts to capture Mary. She runs away, Jumps astride her horse and dashes for freedom only to be thrown to the ground by a limb of a tree. She is rendered unconscious. Dirke and the hunters, unable to find the leopard, return to the net to discover that a lion has been there and escaped. This greatly worries Paul, who believes the lion has attacked Mary. For a time, the English sportsman is accused by Mary's father with having deserted her when she was in danger from the jaguars and tigers, who pursue her into a deserted cabin, but later Mary relieves him from the charge of cowardice when she is rescued and all ends well.

THE CIRCUS GIRL'S ROMANCE (Special—Two Parts—June 12)—Patsy is the daughter of an old circus veteran, and has been a part of the circus since her mother's death. Her father is not satisfied for her to grow up with a circus and arranges to send her to a boarding school. Patsy does not fall in with the idea and goes to her old friend, Bucky O'Connor, the veteran clown, for advice. He sympathizes with her, but refuses to intercede. Kelly's manager, Anton Fischer, has loved Patsy for a long time, but she does not care for him. Overcome with his passion, he tries to kiss her, but is prevented by the arrival of O'Connor. Patsy is finally sent to school.

Patsy finds her new life hard and to ease the longing, gets a horse to ride each morning. She is seen by Bruce Barker, a young playwright, who manages to get an introduction to her and they become fast friends. One day a circus is billed in the town and she accompanies Bruce to see it. The familiar sights so work upon her memory that she determines to run off and join her father's circus. Bruce proposes to her, but she is filled with the new thought and rejects him. Fischer then determines to get control of the show and then force the girl to marry him to save her father. By many crooked deals he gets the show in bad repute and lends money to Kelly from time to time. He arranges to have a crowd of roughs break up the show the next night. Patsy arrives in the town where they are, the day before the big fight arranged by Fischer is to be pulled off. She pledges her old friend O'Connor to secrecy and they arrange to tell her father next day. However, one of the girls falls sick and Patsy takes her place. She is recognized by her father and he starts to go to her but the fight breaks out at this point and he is mixed up in the melee. Through the strategy of O'Connor the company is saved.

Barker follows the girl and arrives in time to frustrate an attempt of Fischer's to get the girl in bad and then play the hero. He follows the show unknown to the girl and saves her from many misfortunes. Fischer determines upon a last attempt to rid himself of the rival and get the girl at the same time. He notifies the girl's lover to meet him at the lion's cage, planning to leave the door open, but the note is lost. He accidentally leaves the door open and is chased by the lion himself. Barton gets him in a tight place and tells him that if he don't promise to leave the circus and turn over the mortgage he has, that both of them will be killed. The frightened wretch promises and for a few months it looks as if both would be killed in the end, but the resources of Barker finally win over the brute and they are saved. Barker buys the show and Fischer leaves. Barker turns his purchase over to the girl and is about to leave, when she calls him back and tells him that she don't care for his show without him, and the story ends with a happy reunion under the "Big top."

BILL'S BLIGHTED CAREER (Two Parts—June 9)—The four young married folks were all cursed with the artistic temperament, but, unfortunately, in humoring it, they all got into the same studio unknown to each other. Bill's wife went to look at paintings, Bill went because he saw a swell looking model going thither, and the latter's husband went because he imagined himself a connoisseur. Bill got confused at so much art and tried to tickle a lady's toes. She turned out to be his own wife and Bill made a quick exit back to the next room where the other model was. Her husband entered at this moment and didn't like to see his wife in draperies and a pleasant smile.

He showed his displeasure so strongly that Bill put on a gladiator's suit to avoid the smoke and excitement. This didn't help him as a policeman tried to arrest him for indecency. Bill tried hard to escape. His wife also ran. The other husband and wife also got into the running, followed by two persistent cops, who attempted to shield the ladies from the public's gaze with their coats. Everybody fell into a big ditch except Bill, who got out and covered the rest up with wet sand.

A TRIP TO CAIRO (This is on the same reel with "She Winked," a story of which can be found on page 792 of May 1 issue. This reel was released May 3.)—First are shown views of a magnificent temple, with their mutilated walls, bombarded by Napoleon. Natives are shown at prayer; then a cemetery, where many of the inhabitants of the ancient city of Memphis are buried, is seen. Several scenes show one of the avenues of the twelve sphinx recently discovered in the ancient city of Memphis. A large and clear view of the fallen statue of Rameses II is next shown, after which the exact spot where Moses was found in the bulrushes appears. A close-up view of the Nileter, an instrument which registers the rise and fall of the Nile, is then shown, followed by a busy street scene in old Cairo.

FIGHTING THE HOOKWORM (This picture is the other half of the reel containing the subject entitled "The Runaway Auto," a synopsis of which was published on page 1500 of May 29 issue. This reel was released on May 8.)—A film showing Homer Croy on his trip around the world in India. The film contains the following scenes:

Medical missionaries examing patients, then giving medicine by permitting each seated patient a sip out of a cup containing medicine; scene outside the hospital of an English doctor questioning new applicants, one by one, with an interpreter; a yard, patients squatting on the stone pavement; it is dinner time and the meal consists of some greens and capsules; natives listen to a sermon; the women are in a separate department. Later the eye doctor examines dozens of women who are blind.

WHERE IGNORANCE IS BLISS (June 12)—Hank is in love with Susie. He receives an unexpected legacy from a distant uncle and he and Susie plan a happy future. All the townspeople, who formerly made sport of Hank, now shower him with all forms of adulation and designing mammas worship at his shrine, all of which Hank awkwardly accepts. An adventuress and her male companion see the notice of Hank's suddenly acquired fortune and also a chance to make some easy money. The man manages to scrape up an acquaintance with Hank and helps him spend his money. Later, they are together, and, as previously arranged, the adventuress crosses their path. The man informs Hank that he knows the woman and introduces him. The fair one strings Hank to a fare-you-well, being informed by her pal, that Hank carries his entire fortune in an old wallet, on his person. Flushed by his new victory, Hany ignores the pleadings of Susie that he return to her. In helping the woman over a country stile, she tears her stocking. Unknown to Hank, the woman whisks his roll and places it unknowingly in the stocking, which she has previously torn. She then excuses herself and she and her companion prepare to leave for parts unknown, while Hank waits in vain for her return.

It happens, however, that Susie passes the depot just as the train is leaving. The woman and her pal rush to catch the train, but, in the hurry to get away, the wallet drops from the woman's stocking, almost at Susie's feet. She picks it up and runs after them, but they have already boarded the train. Susie then notices that there is something familiar about the wallet and draws her own conclusions. Susie comes upon her erstwhile sweetheart just as he is reading a note from the woman thanking him for being so easy. He does not understand the note and shows it to Susie, who immediately sees the point, but keeps quiet. Susie then tells of having seen the woman leave town, and Hank realizes that his dream of love is at an end. He then tries to coax his old sweetheart back, but she is obdurate. Hank then discovers that his wallet is gone. Susie explains the meaning of the note, and Hank now understands all and is very miserable indeed. In the depths of his sadness, Susie gives him the wallet. Hank opens the wallet and discovers his funds intact. On the train, the tricksters find out their plot has failed, while back in the village Hank and Susie patch up their differences and pledge their love anew.

SHOULD WE EAT PIE? (June 3)—Little Jane Lee steals a pie and rushes into her room to feed herself and her pet monkey. The loss of the pie is discovered and her mother traces the little thief to her room, where Janie sits feasting on the stolen pie. Her mother removes the remains of the pie and puts Janie to bed. Janie thereupon dreams of her little pet monkey coming to life as "Alexander the Great." She sees him in a restaurant being waited on in splendor and eating his meal and smoking like a human being. She then sees him skating in a most wonderful fashion and riding a bicycle. He does stunts which are hardly conceivable for a mondey to do. Little Janie's dream, however, is too much for her. She finally tosses herself out of bed and realizes that she had only dreamt her little pet monkey had come to life.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Episode No. 2, "The Sign of the Sacred Safety Pin"—June 10).—The foreign spies have tried without success to steal the secret formula for making new explosive, noiselessite, a powder which explodes without sound. At last the spies learn that the Secretary of War is to witness demonstrations of this remarkable invention and, deciding to take advantage of the opportunity, remind the mysterious Lady Baffles, in a startling manner, of her oath of allegiance, and order her, by the Sign of the Sacred Safety Pin, to secure the formula. She prepares at once to obey. General Ginger, who has the papers in his safekeeping, attends the trials with the War Secretary. They are executed with amazing results. Lady Baffles is a hidden witness. She follows the General and Secretary to their offices and later has nearly secured the coveted formula when discovered. She barely escapes. Her usual challenging note is then found by the startled Secretary and General, who send immediately for the famous sleuth, Detective Duck. Lady Baffles is again warned by the disgusted spies. They join arms with her to see that there is no faltering the next time. They all then carefully scheme to raid the War Office that night for the papers. Detective Duck, who is on the trail of this mysterious woman, is captured by the desperadoes and lashed to the mouth of a loaded cannon. They light a long fuse and then rush to the War Office to secure the papers. The congenial Secretary and General, celebrating their relief at supposedly having the famous detective guarding them, go to bed filled with much good spirits. The spies and Baffles gain access to the office through this bedroom. They get busy on the vault.

Meanwhile the powder is discharged and Dick is hurled skyward. He finally tumbles down on a roof, going straight through the skylight and lands in the War Office, startling Baffles and the foreign spies who are drilling the vault. Duck rushes to capture them, but they escape to the bedroom, locking him out. Not to be foiled in securing the papers, Baffles and one of the spies disguise themselves in the clothes of the Secretary and the General, hide the latter two under the bed, and greet Duck when he finally breaks into the room. In their disguise they easily secure the iron box containing the coveted papers—all before the very eyes of Duck. After their getaway the real Secretary and General are discovered. To their astonishment, the detective produces the supposedly lost papers which he had hidden. And when the exultant spies break open the iron box they are shocked at finding a quantity of mysterious white powder. They also find a note addressed to Lady Baffles, which reads: "Try some of this noiseless face powder—use it once, and you'll use it always. (Signed) Detective Duck."

THE WOMAN HATER'S BABY (June 12).—Jack, a young doctor, vows never to marry. He laughs at one poor little wretch who is dragged from a harmless card game at the club by his aggressive wife. When the doctor calls at his brother's, his niece and nephew pull him around and climb all over him and almost deafen him with drums and trumpets. Gene is a young widow. One night while almost insane from want and the knowledge that her infant is perishing for the necessities of life, she leaves it in a basket on Jack's doorstep. He takes it in, to the consternation of his solemn butler who hates children. After getting some eats for the little one, the butler is sent to get the doctor's married sister. They come back in an auto full of toys. She takes charge while the disconsolate mother returns to her lonely room and laments over the empty cradle. Jack decides to adopt the baby.

The next morning the mother goes to the river to kill herself, but is stopped by a child who is picnicking. She is so starved that she gladly eats the crusts the picnickers have left and reads in the newspaper that had covered these crumbs an advertisement for a nurse. She sees it must be for her own child and applies and is engaged. It is not long before the woman-hater is angry at himself for falling in love with the attractive nurse and decided to get rid of her before he proposes to her and sends his butler for a grim and homely woman to take her place. Then he summons courage and tells her she must go, but she defies him to separate them and tells the secret. When he learns she is the child's mother he goes back to the new nurse and, giving her some money, he silently waves her away. Then, returning to the sorrowing mother he tells her they need never part for he loves her.

THE STRUGGLE (June 8).—Mrs. Castleman is the widow of an officer in the Confederate Army, her son being a veteran of the lost cause, who is by trade a locomotive engineer. Her granddaughter, Pauline, is loved by Buck Milligan, another railroad man, of a rough, uncouth type. The railroad issues an order whereby all engineers and firemen shall be paid by the day instead of the mile. This causes a strike of nation-wide proportions. So serious have matters become, that the traction managers, representing every railroad in the country, come together on Decoration Day to settle the trouble. On Decoration Day morning, Mrs. Castleman, accompanied by her granddaughter, visits the local cemetery, where they meet General Wood, president of the L. & P. Railroad, who is a Civil War veteran and an ex-comrade of Mrs. Castleman's son. Their meeting recalls memories of the past, when Mrs. Castleman appealed to Gen. Lee to bring about peace. Shortly afterward, the war came to an end. Inspired by her grandmother's story, Pauline appeals to the railroad delegates assembled in the convention to bring about an end to the present war between capital and labor, comparing in a dramatic manner the results of the previous national conflict with the present one. The strikers, who have, in the meantime, been aroused to a point of frenzy, plan an attack on the delegates in the convention hall. They are surprised to find Pauline on the platform eloquently swaying the convention. Order comes from chaos. The railroad officials compromise with their employees, the strike is ended and a monster barbecue is held in celebration. Several hundred veterans of the Civil War join with the traction managers to make the day a memorable one.

THE VALLEY OF SILENT MEN (Two Parts—June 10).—Tom Davis has rescued Jeanne from a life of shame and out of gratitude she has married him. But though he had a good heart he succumbs to the desire for liquor. The picture opens with Jeanne brooding over her past life as the drunken Tom comes home. Time goes on and a baby boy arrives at the Davis home. Tom comes home dead drunk and cannot understand the sight he sees before him. He goes out to clear his befuddled brain and Fate leads him toward the docks. It happens that the Nancy Ann is delayed from departing on her trip to parts unknown through a shortage in the crew. In order to make up his crew, the mate resorted to the time-honored custom of shanghaing, and was, with an aide, waiting on the dock as Tom Davis wandered out of a saloon.

Davis gazed at the water in a dim uncertain way. An officer wandering by and seeing his melancholy attitude and fearful that he would commit or was contemplating suicide ordered him to move on. Davis reluctantly did so, but came back after the officer was gone. The mate and his man, seeing their chance, attacked Davis and in the fight that ensued Davis' coat was torn from his back and his hat cast on the water below. The mate and his companion succeeded in overpowering Davis and casting him unconscious into a waiting dory, pulled for the ship. Soon after the Nancy Ann put off for the open sea.

Lestrade, a civil engineer working on the docks, discovered the hat and coat and, suspecting a suicide, called the officer. The officer remembered the incident and so it came to pass that the wife, Jeanne, was informed of her husband's death. Lestrade saw the beauty and the true side of the woman and starts her on the new path of life. He loved her, cared for her, and finally married her, taking the baby boy to live with them. They were happy, so happy, when one night Davis came back. But only Jeanne and the baby were there. She told him the story of his supposed death and he saw their happiness—he brought the baby to him for a moment, then was forced to release it and conceal himself through the returning of Lestrade. He then saw the real happiness of the woman and the future of his boy. Lestrade left the room and Davis came out. He bade the wife good-bye and then after kissing the boy good-bye back—back to "The Valley of Silent Men."

THEIR FRIEND, THE BURGLAR (June 8).—Father and mother have chosen a future husband for their daughter in the person of Mr. Smart.. The girl does not like the choice as her selection falls upon Neal, a rising young bookkeeper. An outing is planned at the beach in which Mr. Smart will play the star part, but Billie tips Neal off and promises that if he will come down she will "shake" the crowd. He certainly does get off and makes his arrival known to Billie. They give the bunch the slip and beat it for the roller coaster. Father misses the girl and he and Mr. Smart start a search for her. Father arrives at the roller coaster in time to see the runaways start a ride. He takes the next car and there is some race through the clouds. The daughter is finally captured and they set out for home.

Meanwhile, Basement Jimmy, a professional crook, has sized the house of Billie's father up as being worth while decides to return and leisurely "clean up," as he surmises the occupants have gone to the beach for the day. Billie arranges with Neal to be at the house at dark and they would elope. The family arrive home all in a bad humor. Neal is on time and slips into the girl's room. She hears a noise and secretes him in a closet. Downstairs, Basement Jimmy has started his work, but the family interrupts him. He runs for cover and the only place he can find turns out to be the same closet Neal is hiding in. They have a terrific fight and the noise arouses the family. They start to investigate. Billie, thinking the noise is made by Neal, tries to keep them back, but father determines to sift the matter to the bottom. Neal had gained the upper hand over the burglar and tells him to be still, that everything is all right. The burglar quiets down. Father comes into the room. Neal tells the burglar to peek out the key-hole and see what is happening. Just as he does so Neal gives him a push, throwing him into father. There is some chase, father runs him quite a distance, but the crooks' tactics are too much for him and his chase is fruitless.

With father gone and mother out of the way, Neal and Billie hurriedly pack their suitcases and leave. When father returns home, he finds a sign on the door, reading, "Farewell. Owing to the time given us by our friend, the burglar, we are making good our elopement." Father sadly agrees that he has had his fill of thieves for the day.

FROM THE SHADOWS (June 9).—Ferris Sims, once a notorious crook, but lately leading an apparently honest life, has a daughter, Helen, whom he wishes to keep in ignorance of his past life and also of his erstwhile associates, who frequently visit him. The girl is in love with, and is loved by, a rich young man of the town. "Spider" Dale, Sims' lieutenant and former companion in crime, calls on him for the first time, and gets a good look at the girl. He immediately falls in love with her and tries to meet her, but her father objects. This angers him and he goes back to his den, where Flo Summers, who has previously held his fancy, awaits his coming.

Time passes and one day "Spider" sees Flo reading a paper in which the engagement of Helen Vincent is announced. He is mad with rage, and getting the address of her fiance, goes there to kill him. Flo is angry because "Spider" is in love with Helen and, calling up Sims' house, warns him of what the crook is going to do. Sims, in an effort to save the life of his daughter's lover, hurries to the house where he lives. He arrives at the same time as "Spider" and they confront each other with drawn guns.

Vincent has heard the noise of their entrance, and, slipping in, turns on the light and confronts the two with a drawn revolver. Their surprise is mutual, and, in the moment of indecision, "Spider" makes a desperate attempt to kill Vincent. Sims is too quick for him, though, and, jumping in the way, stops the fatal bullet, but his life pays for the sacrifice. The crook, too, meets his fate at the hands of Vincent, who fires back. As the scene fades, the girl's father makes a last rally and is about to tell of his past, when he sinks and dies without bringing his past from the shadows. The two young people live in ignorance of the double life of the girl's father.

LITTLE MR. FIXER (June 13).—George Merrill and Nell Fenwick are in love with each other. George is a club man and has unconsciously drifted until he is a little better than a drunkard. Nell, a struggling young artist, has clung to him in hope of making a man of him, but her patience reaches the limit when he comes to her apartment one night, and, in an intoxicated condition, makes a fool of himself. She orders him never to enter her house again. Billy, a typical newsboy of the streets, is a favorite of Nell. One day as she is talking to him, Merrill comes out of a store and tries to force his attentions upon her. She resents his presence and Billy kicks him. The little newsboy is knocked down by Merrill. The boy is injured worse than was thought and Nell, who has taken him in charge, arranges to take him home with her until he is well.

Merrill is overcome with remorse at his actions and makes a resolves not to have anything more to do with liquor. Billy rejects the presents Merrill has sent him in the shape of peace offerings and tells Nell to throw them under the bed. Nell misses Merrill a great deal and secretly takes out his picture for consolation. Merrill, discouraged because he can make no headway in his efforts to win back the affection of Nell, prepares to go on a trip abroad.

Billy is now convalescent and whenever he can do so, he shoots craps with lumps of sugar to while the time away. Nell never knows of this, however, as he hides them before she arrives in the room. One day while he is alone, he rummages around the drawers of the bureau and finds a picture of Merrill. His sharp wits take in the situation and when Nell returns home, he tells her that he thinks he will die and wants her to get the "gink" who knocked him down so as to forgive him. Nell, in terror, calls for the doctor and also Merrill. Merrill arrives and Billy puts him "wise" to the deception. The doctor arrives and he, too, falls into the scheme. Billy's cleverness wins the day and the lovers are once more reunited with a better understanding of each other, while Billy has made a permanent place for himself in the hearts of each.

A STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE (Three Parts—June 11).—John Blake, a New York City merchant, tells his son, Andrew, that he will leave his his entire fortune on condition that he marry his partner's daughter, Katharine Van Wart. Andrew is in love with his cousin, Evelyn, and tells her that he will marry her in spite of his father's objections. A bitter quarrel ensues between father and son, and Andrew decides to go away for a month, so that they can both give the matter due consideration. During the absence of Andrew, his father tells Evelyn emphatically that she will never be allowed to marry his son with his consent. While hunting in the Maine woods, Andrew is overtaken by a storm, and, losing his way, seeks shelter for the night in the cabin of Hoenmaker, a scoundrel, who preys upon unsuspecting travelers. Luthia, Hoenmaker's daughter, overhears her father and brother plotting to rob the stranger. She warns Andrew that his life is in danger and leads him out of the cabin to a place of safety, where a saddled horse is in readiness for his escape. Andrew, realizing the risk she runs, if she returns to meet the vengeance of Hoenmaker, takes Luthia with him and places her in a convent for protection.

On his return home, Andrew, refusing to yield to his father's wishes that he give up Evelyn, is disowned and disinherited. The excitement of the turbulent interviews with Andrew results in a complete physical breakdown on the part of the merchant. Overcome with remorse, and realizing that his father has only a short time to live, Andrew seeks a reconciliation. The elder Blake is touched by his son's appeal for forgiveness, and tells him that, while he cannot consent to his marrying Evelyn, he will not insist on his marriage to Katherine Van Wart, if he doesn't love her, but that he would dearly like to see him married to some other girl before he dies. Andrew hastens to the convent and induces Luthia to become his wife. John Blake becomes very fond of his daughter-in-law and sends a note to Evelyn, in which he tells her that Andrew is married and offers to remember her in his will if she will call and promise him not to renew the old love affair. Evelyn calls and bitterly upbraids Andrew, who shortly afterwards is overheard by Luthia to tell his father that although he has married Luthia to please him, he still loves Evelyn. Luthia rushes out of the house, leaving a note for her husband saying that he will never see her again on account of his love for the other woman.

Just as Luthia is about to throw herself into a lake, she is kidnapped by her father and brother, who have read of her marriage and have been plotting to get her into their power for the purpose of extracting money from her husband. Andrew goes in search of Luthia and finding her shawl near the lake, supposes that she has drowned herself. The news of her death kills the elder Blake, and Andrew has the lake dragged for Luthia's body. A stranger, who has witnessed the kidnapping the previous week, arouses the suspicion in Andrew's mind that Hoenmaker and his son may be the culprits, and he hastens to Luthia's home in the Maine FATHER'S MONEY (May 7).—Harry, a lazy boy, is introduced to his father's old friend's daughter. Immediately he becomes much infatuated—so much so that he decides he would like to have an office of his own. Thinking perhaps that his son may amount to something, his father rents an office for him.

Harry patiently waits for business, but day after day finds him without any one entering his door. Finally one day he gets an idea. He decides he will find out what his father is doing. He bores a hole in the floor and with a telescope reads a business deal in the typewriter of his father's stenographer's machine. Quickly he telephones Dot, who comes down to his office. He orders her to take the notes down. They plan to get enough money together from their fathers to marry. Checks are given them by their fathers. They go to the firm of Smith & Smith, who have the option for Harry's father and buy the option through their brokers, Brown & White. Harry's father, in the meantime, decides he will buy the option, so he in turns goes to his brokers, but finds that Brown & White have the option now. The old man pays twice as much for the option. Harry and Dot are given the checks. Dot returns home and Harry to his office.

Harry then writes Dot, telling her that now they can elope. Harry tells his father that he must go to the seashore and Dot informs her parents she is not well and also must go to the seashore. They meet outside, go to the ministers and are married.

MUMPS (June 11).—Helen Wright receives a note from her editor, saying he would like her to write a story, telling how two young people, thrown together, can fall in love, within a month. Knowing nothing of love, Helen decides to make it a real story, so inserts an ad in the paper: Wanted—A nice young man as secretary to young brunette; first month as a trial. Helen Wright, 25 Fallon street. Harry Smith, while passing Helen's house, becomes very much infatuated. The next day his valet desires to quit in order to apply for the other position. He gives the newspaper to his master, who decides, as a lark, to answer it himself. He does and is accepted. As the month goes along, very little work is being done, for they are both much in love. One morning Helen's maid complains of her jaw hurting. A doctor is called, who informs them that she has the mumps and the house must be quarantined for at least a month. Two policemen are stationed at the house. No one can enter, or leave. The last day is up, the manuscript finished, but they cannot leave the house.

The same day, a burglar enters the house. The maid pleads with him, in fact even goes so far as to kiss him, if he will leave.. He insists that she hand over the jewels, she leads him to Helen, who is much more frightened of the mumps than the burglar. Harry enters, struggling with the burglar, sends the maid upstairs, tells Helen to call the policemen, gives her the revolver, takes the manuscript, and as the policemen enter, Harry dashes past them out of the house to the editor's office. The policemen take charge of the burglar, and leave. Harry finds it impossible to enter the house, but he does the same thing the burglar does, enters the window at the side of the house. Helen now has quite a sore throat. Harry enthusiastically enters and kisses her. She implores him not to, telling him that she has the mumps. That night, Harry hits upon a plan to elope with Helen. He goes to her room, throws a blanket over her head, leads her to his house, where he 'phones the minster. After the ceremony is performed, the minister insists upon kissing the bride. She objects, but he insists. He does. Next day finds the minister with the mumps, the burglar in jail, suffering, the officer watching the house, also has a swollen jaw, and Helen and Harry cannot find room to even kiss, their faces are so swollen.

THE BLACK BOX (Episode No. 12, "'Neath Iron Wheels"—Two Parts—May 24).—After an uneventful trip across the Pacific, following their successful escape from the Mongars in the African desert, Sanford Quest, his two assistants, Lenora and Laura, and Professor Ashleigh, arrive in San Francisco with their prisoner, John Craig. Inspector French meets the party at the dock and Miss Laura refuses to consider his plan for an immediate wedding and a honeymoon across the continent while taking Craig back to prison. She determines, instead, to remain with Quest's party, which has decided to visit the Exposition for two weeks. French starts on his journey with Craig. As the train is passing through New Mexico there is a wreck. French is pinioned fast in the wreckage and seriously wounded. Unconscious, he doesn't know that Craig rescues him from the burning train and turns him over to the care of the trainmen. Meanwhile, Quest, determined that his assistants and Professor Ashleigh shall get a much-needed rest, makes them promise not to look at a newspaper for two weeks. Consequently it is not until French recovers consciousness and telegraphs to Quest that they learn of the wreck. Arriving in Allguez, Quest immediately sets out to discover whether or not the report of the railroad officials that Craig was burned in the wreck is true. Quest finds a clue at last. A man answering the description of Craig is cook at the A. X. X. ranch and is loved by the cowboys because of his wonderful violin playing. Professor Ashleigh tells them that Craig can indeed play the violin and used to charm whole groups of natives in South America.

Quest and his party, the inspector by now being quite recovered, ride out to the camp to get Craig. Quest and French are both unknown to the cowboys and they refuse to give up their beloved cook unless the two New Yorkers can produce a warrant for Craig. Leaving Lenora and Laura under the protection of the Professor, Quest and French ride back to Allguez to get a warrant, but when they return Craig has gone. At that moment, indeed, the man is riding hard for the Mexican border. But Lenora has discovered his goal and determines to overtake him. She sends word to Quest, who rides after her. Craig rides on to a bridge which marks the line between the United States and Mexico at this point, and a moment later has pulled up his horse and looks back from safety at his pursuers. Lenora nears the bridge. A few hundred yards behind her comes Quest. The girl's horse clatters on to the bridge. A moment and she will also be across the border—then a terrible crash is heard and the horse and rider disappear into the stream. Quest arrives and plunges head first into the stream to the rescue.

THE BLACK BOX (Episode No. 13—Two Parts—May 31—"Tongues of Flame").—After Sanford Quest rescues Lenora from the river, he carries her back to the range camp. The two deputy sheriffs who accompanied Quest, having made themselves unpleasant in their search of the camp, the cowboys undertake to "educate" them. The two officers have been trussed up carefully against one of the canvas wagons and the cowboys, forming in a line, proceed to see how close they can come to singeing the deputies' whiskers with revolver shots. Inspector French and Laura, who are watching the scene, decide that it is time to interfere. French steps forward, revolver in hand, and commands the cowboys to cease shooting. Long Jim disarms French from behind, and decides that the New York officer needs a little of the same treatment which the two deputies are enjoying. The entrance of Quest with the half-conscious Lenora, stops all this teasing. An examination of the injured girl reveals the fact that she has several broken ribs and cannot be moved away from the camp for a week at least.

Across the line from Mexico, Craig wanders into a little town. All the inhabitants are gathered in the saloon. Craig stands in the doorway looking in upon the scene. Suddenly he sees a drunken Mexican, Jose, try to kiss one of the girls, Marta. She refuses him and he draws his knife and tells her he is going to mark her check with it. Craig springs inside the saloon and knocks the knife from the Mexican's hand. A week passes. Craig is still in the little Mexican town and Quest's party, unable to arrest him, remains at the range camp.

Lenora is recovering, but is not yet able to walk. Professor Ashleigh receives a cablegram which has been sent to Craig in his care and forwarded from New York. The cablegram reads: "Your sister died today. Her daughter Mary, your niece, sails Tuesday to join you in New York." Quest decides upon this plan: to take the cablegram to Craig himself and give him the chance to go to New York; in this way they may possibly get the man in their power again. Accompanied by Long Jim, Quest goes over the border and finds Craig in the Mexican saloon. Craig considers the telegram and tells Quest that if the criminologist will leave him alone, the accused man will go to New York, settle his niece's future and then give himself up. Quest hesitates, then decides to accept Craig's plan. Quest decides, however, that he and Inspector French will take the same train on which Craig leaves for New York and never let the accused man go out of their sight. Before Quest leaves the saloon, a sudden attack is made upon Craig. A hand carefully wound in a serape and holding a long dagger appears in the window back of where Craig is sitting and strikes down to pierce the man's heart; but the girl, Marta, sitting by Craig, has slipped her arm around him and receives the full force of the blow. In an instant the room is in an uproar. A few seconds later Jose appears in the doorway. The girl accuses him of having tried to kill Craig. The crowd divides in two factions and in the excitement that follows, to save his own life, Quest shoots Mexican Jose, arousing the bitter enmity of Jose's friends. Long Jim and Quest escape back to the range camp.

The next morning Quest and his party arise, in what they think is plenty of time to make that 8.30 train. However, when they go to breakfast they discover that the mysterious hands have set back every watch in the party exactly one hour. Long Jim tells them that they cannot possibly catch the train on which Craig is going to New York. Quest is determined to make the attempt, and accompanied by French and a cowboy, starts for the station. Quest offers the cowboy $50 if he can show them a short cut to the station and they turn off from the regular road on to a trail. Lenora discovers under her pillow one of the fatal black boxes containing the following message: "Fools! Tongues of flame will cross Quest's path, he will never reach the train alive. "The Hands." Lenora is frightened, she fears that Quest's life is in danger and determines to follow and warn him. Laura protests, but to no avail. The injured girl insists, mounts her horse and starts to ride rapidly down the road. Ahead she sees the bridge burning. Quest and French miss the train and Craig goes on alone to New York. Meanwhile Lenora has collapsed and fallen from her horse in the path of the flames.

The money lender is about to seize the tavern in settlement of the debt, so Capella and his wife plot to rob the first wealthy traveler that stops at the inn. The traveler happens to be their own son, whom they do not recognize owing to his beard and rich garments. Seeing that he is not recognized, Juan determines to go upstairs and shave off his beard then return and surprise his parents. A terrific storm rages shortly after Juan gains the shelter of his father's tavern and Juan's father leaves for the stable to shelter the horse. He and his wife have changed their minds about robbing the stranger.

Out of the stable the father has a vision of the sheriff's sale of the property and he resolves to return to the tavern and steal the stranger's gold without his wife's knowledge. Juan comes down the stairs, clean shaven, just as the mother awakens from her dream. She is overjoyed to see her son and realizes that it was only a bad dream. The father returns from the stable and is just in time to share in the reunion.

BRAVE AND BOLD (June 6).—A burglar scare hits the town. Max, a widower, brags to his friends, Ed and Fred, that he is the bravest guy on earth, and that as far as burglars are concerned, he is fearless. While he is bragging, a real burglar enters another part of the house. Ed and Fred, upon leaving the house, get the idea of testing Max's bravery. They disguise as housebreakers and return to Max's house by way of the parlor window. They catch Max in the act of loading his revolver and so frighten him that he is helpless. A shop lifter is watching an opportunity at Fay's counter. Fay is attending to Margy. Margy lays down a ten-dollar bill to pay for a pair of stockings. The shoplifter gets the ten and puts it in a stocking, one of a cheap pair, and gets the boy at the wrapping desk to tie them up.

Margy misses her ten. A dispute follows. In the excitement the shoplifter leaves with Margy's bundle of silk hose and Margy, after getting her change from the angry proprietor, leaves with the package of cheap hose, which also contains her ten-dollar bill. It happens that the boy at the wrapping desk forgot to break the string on the package which Margy is carrying. The string unwinds for several blocks, until Fay sees it. Margy has set her package down for a moment. Fay starts to pull the string back. Margy chases after her package.

Things look bad for Fay. The proprietor has told her that she must replace the ten dollars or be discharged. Fay continues to pull the string and Margy loses track of her bundle. A fat man steps on the string and breaks it. Roderick, on the way home, finds the package. He takes it to his room. Fay is discharged after refusing the aid of Boulter, who offers to make good the ten dollars. She goes to Roderick to give him back his ring. Margy has gone to Roderick's room to tell him about her loss. Roderick opens the package he has found. Margy is satisfied that they are her stockings. Fay arrives in time to see Margy, Roderick and stockings. She returns the ring. Fay's troubles are cleared up when Roderick tells Fay that Margy is his cousin. They find the ten dollars in one of the stockings.

MAJESTIC.

HER FILMLAND HERO (June 1).—The Girl was a moving picture fan. She could not get her hero of the screen out of mind. This made Gordon, her young sweetheart, miserably jealous. So he went to gorge himself with candy and forgot his heart-ache, while the Girl indulged in blissful day dreams. The Girl fell asleep. Real dreams visited her. She thought that her screen hero had saved her from Gordon and his rang, that he was showering her with gold, and that the next day they were to marry and flee together to a far country. But when she awoke she was hugging the sofa cushion, and the Boy was standing smiling down at her.

THE BURNED HAND (Two Parts—June 13).—Three college boys graduate. One is in love with a girl, whose mother and father have domestic difficulties. They go to court and are divorced. Father is refused the request for his daughter, and in turn kidnaps her and takes her to another state, where he becomes a great political factor.

Bill, one of the graduated college boys who is in love with the girl, with his two companions, traces the girl and steal her away. In doing so his hand is burned with a poker and the father uses that as a means of identification in tracing him. He goes to the house where Bill is hiding and one of Bill's pals, to avoid his arrest, burns his hand with a poker. Father comes in, cannot identify Bill's pal and he leaves, realizing he cannot have his daughter.

RELIANCE.

ONE WHO SERVES (June 2).—Jim Burns, a workman out of a job, stands watch over his two-year-old child, who is seriously ill while his wife goes for a doctor. Chuck White, a second story man, an acquaintance of Jim's, calls to tell the latter that he has a job on for the night that would mean money to pay doctor bills, medicine, etc. Chuck explains that he has trailed a bank messenger to a rich man's home, and that the job would be an easy one to pull off. He finally persuades Jim, who promises to meet Chuck in front of an east side saloon.

Mrs. Burns returns, having secured the promise of a famous doctor to visit the child a little later. Jim Burns, making a lame excuse to his wife, leaves to meet Chuck. He finds him at their meeting place and from there they go to the rich man's house, which proves to be the dwelling of the doctor who promised to visit Burns' child. Burns enters through a window and meets the doctor. The men struggle and Burns knocks the doctor unconscious. Assisted by Chuck and gathering up all valuables, he sees a memorandum in the doctor's hand which proves to be a memorandum to visit Burns' child. Chuck leaves, cautioning Burns, who, appalled at having robbed and assaulted the doctor about to attend his child, now anxiously administers to him. Through Burns' aid the doctor recovers consciousness. The doctor, having noticed in Burns' hand the memorandum of the intended visit, decides to make the call. Burns explains his presence in the room by saying he is the father of the child, his wife being over anxious having sent him. Both men leave for the Burns home.

Meanwhile Chuck has brought the valuables to his own quarters and awaits the coming of Burns. The doctor and Jim arrive at the Burns home in time to save the life of the child. After the crisis has passed, the doctor leaves for his residence. Burns, stricken with remorse, leaves for Chuck's quarters intending to secure the valuables stolen and return them to the doctor. Jim, entering Chuck's quarters, seizes the valuables and is about to leave when Chuck stops him. The men fight and Burns overcomes Chuck then leaves with the valuables. In the meantime the doctor has returned to his somewhat disordered apartment, when Burns enters with valuables and dumps them at the doctor's feet, indicating that he is the one who struck and robbed him and now wishes to be forgiven. The doctor pardons him.

THE CELESTIAL CODE (Two Parts—June 5).—After a meeting of the Junta, Vasco Carillo, leader of the revolutionary party of Salvador, with its headquarters in Los Angeles, places valuable military plans in his safe in the library of his mansion. That same night Sato, Carillo's Japanese cook, a paid spy in the interest of the Salvadorian government, steals the plans, hiding them behind a brick in the kitchen chimney. The house is roused. But Sato escapes detection, and Carillo telephones to Glen Morton, a famous private detective. Morton tips off Adele Block, reporter on the Morning Despatch. They drive together to Carillo's mansion. A thorough search of house and servants fails to produce the papers or any clew. The windows and doors all being perfectly secure, it is a mystery how the safe-breaking was accomplished. Adele, who has not been see by the servants, arranges to stay with the family as their guest. Next day she sees Sato flying a kite in the garden—ostensibly to amuse the Carillo children. She notices, however, certain combinations of colored tissue paper which he attaches to the kite. These have the appearance of signals. Making note of the colors and how they are used, she reports to Morton. The detective takes Adele's notations to an expert in Oriental matters. He recognizes in the color combinations the celestial code of which he has the key. The signals, interpreted, state that Sato will place the stolen papers in the laundry package, leaving the Carillo mansion at eleven o'clock that day. It is now seven minutes to eleven. Morton telephones Adele, who, on hearing the laundry delivery machine before the house, rushes out to the Carillo automobile, drawn up at the door, and gives chase. She tracks the Japanese, with the papers, to a noodle shop in the Japanese section of the town. Then she calls up Morton, telling him to join her at once. Fearful of losing her man, Adele enters the shop, where she is seized, gagged and bound, and carried upstairs, where the Salvadorians are holding a meeting. Understanding Spanish, she is able to make out that one of their members is commissioned to take the documents of the revolutionist leader back to Salvador, and that he has only a few minutes in which to catch the steamer. Garcia, one of the gang, is appointed to watch Adele. The others leave. Alone with her, Garcia begins to make advances, which the girl pretends to accept. Then, by a clever ruse, she gets hold of the Spaniard's gun. She wounds Garcia and fights her way downstairs and into her automobile, driving at top speed to the boat landing. Morton arrives at the shop, and then rushes to the wharf, as the steamer is pulling out with Adele on board. He charters a tug, and gives pursuit. On deck, Adele corners the Salvadorian, who leaps into the sea. She goes overboard after him. Morton, on the tug, comes up just in time to save Adele from being drowned by the Salvadorian, with whom she is fighting desperately.

PAYMENT IN FULL (June 9).—Willard McCourtney buys a farm in the West from Moreland Ellington, and finds that he has been buncoed. The property is worthless. Returning East for redress, he discovers that Ellington has closed his place of business and fled. McCourtney is forced, by his poverty, to take a job as waiter in a disreputable cafe. Some time later, he recognizes Julia, the daughter of Ellington, whom he had met at her father's office, entering the restaurant with a white slaver. McCourtney watches their actions in an alcove box, and is convinced that the girl is about to be drugged and kidnapped. He is filled with the joy of revenge. When Ellington, who has received word of the plot, rushes in a few minutes later, inquiring for his daughter, the man he once wronged tells him that Miss Ellington had been there, but that she had just left. At this moment, a note is handed to McCourtney. He reads that his wife is the mother of a baby girl. Suddenly, his own daughter, in years to come, seems to have exchanged places with Julia Ellington. Horror-stricken, the waiter rushes into the alcove and knocks from Julia's hand the cup of drugged wine just as she is raising it to her lips. Ellington, still unconvinced, returns. He is just in time to rescue his daughter. The slaver escapes. The triumphant father, not recognizing McCourtney, attempts to press upon him a bill. The waiter refuses the money. However, in pulling out his handkerchief to mop his brow, the swindler-broker drops his wallet. On returning to inquire for it, he finds that the roll of bills is considerably depleted and accuses McCourtney of having robbed him. In reply, the waiter hands him a paper on which is written, "Received of Moreland Ellington $2,000 repayment in full for the 200 acres of worthless land he sold me. (Signed) Willard McCourtney."

ROYAL.

HIS TWIN (June 5).—Twin brothers marry and settle in different towns. Joe invites Jim to pay him a visit, and Jim wires his brother to expect him at two o'clock, signing the message, "Your Better Half." Meanwhile, Joe's wife has caught him kissing the cook. Scarcely has Joe explained himself, when the telegram arrives, and the wife, reading the signature, accuses her husband of bigamy. Joe, to keep his wife from leaving him, pretends to poison himself. The wife and the cook run for the doctor. Jim arrives, and he and his twin exchange places. When the women return with the physician, Jim gets the medicine intended for Joe. The unexpected arrival of Jim's wife further complicates matters. But after much frantic explanation the tangle is straightened out.

FALSTAFF.

IT'S AN ILL WIND (May 28).—A heedless servant demolishes the dolls' trolley line with which Maurice and his little sister Lou are playing. The children seek revenge. Stealing up to the roof, they cut the clothesline. The wind is blowing hard, and the whole week's washing sails away before the eyes of the distracted Norah. The clothes have a remarkable career, and affect the lives of many different people. A young man, much the worse for liquor, stumbles into his room, and is horrified to see what he supposes are snakes crawling up and down his window. It is only the shadow of a belt and some neckties on the clothesline, but it makes him resolve to turn over a new leaf. An old maid's hopes are vainly raised by the sight of overalls on her balcony. A clothes' dealer sees an opportunity to get some stock for nothing—but finds he can't overtake the runaway apparel, which travels rapidly on over the housetops. At last, the clothes come to rest on the fire-escape outside a tenement window. A poor widow and her three children are overjoyed to find dresses and skirts and stockings, and many other things which they need, all come to them out of the air, like a gift from Heaven.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE LONESOME HEART (American—Four Parts—May).—Samanthy, a foundling, grows into a beautiful girl despite all the efforts of Sara Prue, superintendent of the orphan asylum, to suppress her by cruel treatment. The children and Tom, the gardener, love her and she finds comfort in reading romantic novels. These eventually inspire her with an idea. To escape Sara Prue she runs away and sleeps in the woods. There she is found by young George Stuart, who seems to the poor, abused girl the very incarnation of the fairy prince she had read about.

For protection Stuart takes her to live with his old nurse, who receives her with a mother's affection and lavishes attention on her. A few nice clothes to wear improve her appearance and she blossoms forth in a manner that quite captivates Stuart, who declares his intention of becoming her guardian for life. At this point his father steps in and, broken hearted, Samanthy returns to the orphan asylum.

There young Stuart finally discovers her in time to rejoice with her in a great good fortune that has befallen her. It seems that Sara Prue saw old James Stuart leave the infant Samanthy on the steps of the orphan asylum. The name "Dorothy Loomis" was woven into the shawl wrapped around the baby girl. Using this information to blackmail Stuart, Sara Prue undoes it all, for Stuart confesses that Samanthy is his dead partner's daughter and the heiress to the fortune he himself is enjoying.

THE DARKENING TRAIL (New York Motion Picture Corp.—Four Parts—May 31).—Jack Sturgess, a cad, gets into a mix-up with a young girl at home, and is ordered by his father to either marry her to to leave the house for good. He considers the girl beneath him and leaves, going into the Yukon district. There he is heartily despised by all the men and, on his arrival at Hope City, he is met by Yukon Ed and a bunch of miners, who proceed to have a little fun with him, because of his superior attitude. They bounce him around from one to another of the miners, making him dance and teasing him unmercifully. He is finally rescued by Ruby McGraw, proprietor of the store, who becomes his willing slave.

After several days, Yukon Ed, who is very much in love with Ruby, calls on them, bringing a minister with him, and Jack, who has already begun to tire of Ruby, is forced to marry her. After the wedding he neglects her and spends his evenings at the saloon with the dance hall girls. One rainy night he fails to come home and Ruby goes in search of him. She finds him in a drunken stupor on a lonely trail, and being unable to get him home, she sits all night in the rain with his head in her lap, her cloak covering him. Pneumonia is the result of the exposure and the only other woman in town nurses Ruby. The night of the crisis Jack is sent for the doctor, but goes to the saloon instead hoping Ruby will die so that he can go back to the States. She does die, and Yukon, learning of Jack's neglect, goes for him, leads him to Ruby's bedside, and sends him to meet Ruby on the "darkening trail."

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

What We Are

We are an organization composed of eight of the most successful of American Producers. We are not inexperienced newcomers.

Our names and productions are well known to the public in every part of the United States and Canada. Behind us and our intentions there is an invested capital of more than $600,000, in addition to untouched resources totaling thousands more.

What We Intend To Do

We intend to place before the exhibitor a service of twenty-one reels, dramas and comedies weekly.

These productions are to equal and surpass anything heretofore placed upon the market, and we are going to offer them to the exhibitor at a figure lower than he has ever paid before.

How We Are Going To Do It

Our system of distribution which is direct from producer to exhibitor through exchanges will eliminate the enormous expenses heretofore thought necessary in marketing film productions.

We intend to put this money where it belongs—part of it in the exhibitors' bank balance and part of it into our film; and not in fabulously high salaries and mahogany office furniture.

MAN AND THE LAW (Ideal—Two Parts—May 31).—There is only one man in the jury chosen to convict or declare innocent George Burton, clean living and fine, who is on trial for murder of his sister's betrayer who refuses to declare him guilty. The one—Will Harvey, a blacksmith—refuses to agree with the others that the lad is guilty, although evidence proves that he is so, and when his persistence almost results in blows, he tells his reason—the fact that his own little sister had been betrayed by a good-looking scoundrel, and that heaven only had prevented him from being a murderer by calling the fellow to an early death before a train. When his story is finished, the jury is so moved that they agree with the blacksmith and Burton is set free.

O YOU MULE! (Superba—June 1).—Charlie suffers terribly with attacks of acute indigestion, so his wife sends Morris to the doctor for medicine. Maude, farmer Jone's mule, is sick too, and Jones sends a farm hand to the veterinary to get some medicine. Morris gets the medicine and starts on the way home. The farm hand comes along the road with the medicine bottle in his hand and trips over Morris' wheel. They both fall and mix up their bottles. Charlie is given the medicine intended for the mule and immediately proceeds to kick and tear around. The mule is given the medicine belonging to Charlie and trots out of the barn. Charlie runs out of the house with his wife after him. The mule runs with his master after him. All four come together at a crossing road and Charlie and the mule go off together. After a while they come to Charlie's home where they enter and upset everything. The owner of the mule at length gets control of his animal. The doctor gives Charlie his own medicine and he is restored to his natural self.

COPPED (On same reel as foregoing).—Bill is a policeman. His sweetheart meets him every morning just as he starts on duty, and the morning kiss puts him in good humor for the rest of the day. By the roadside the cop finds a bathing suit. He goes in for a swim and is just beginning to enjoy the water when he sees a tramp putting on his uniform. He calls to him threatening to arrest him, but the tramp strolls away swinging the club. The cop comes out of the water and has to put on the tramp's clothing. A chase follows. The cop hails another "arm of the law," who assists him, and after a brief pursuit they "cop" the tramp.

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Empress—Two Parts—June 2).—To find material for his book on the psychology of women's minds, the writer deliberately makes his wife jealous by seeming to have relations with an actress, whom in reality he never sees, so that he may study the effect of the emotion. On the discovery that her husband has tortured her for his science, the young wife leaves, but is injured by an automobile and taken to a hospital. At the same time, the actress kills the artist friend of the writer, who has posed as the psychologist, and the finding of the scientist's card outside the actress' window, leads the detectives to believe that the murder was committed by him. The final confession of the actress of her crime, after she had been fatally shot by her pistol which she hid in the hopes of covering her guilt, frees the psychologist from the law, and the forgiveness of his cruelty by his wife on her sick bed restores them to their former state of happiness.

AMATEUR NIGHT (Starlight—June 3).—Listening to the call of the siren whom they meet on the street, Heinie and Louie end up at an amateur night show. Anxious to appear brave and fearless to the beautiful lady of their choice, they enter the lists of the prize boxing contest. But boxing and wrestling are one and the same to them, until they are made to understand the difference by the professor in charge, and amateur night ends up a farce for the other entrees, and the spectators, including the siren, but "no joke" to Heinie and Louie.

AUNT MATILDA OUTWITTED (Luna—June 3).—Aunt Matilda, a maiden lady from the East, arrives to take charge of her dead brother's ranch and of his daughters, Edith and Winna, whom she soon discovers are in love with two cowboys. Immediately Aunt Matilda discharges the cowboys and advertises for girls to take their places. The boys meet the girls on their way to the ranch, and persuades them to return to town. Back in town, the boys see the sign "Masquerade." An idea strikes them. They disguise as girls and go back to Aunt Matilda and the ranch. Disclosing their identity to Edith and Winna, they extract a promise to elope from the girls. That night sees an escape down a ladder and a flying chase to the parsons, where the young couples are married before Aunt Matilda arrives on the scene to learn that she has been outwitted.

THE PICTURE ON THE WALL (Premier—Two Parts—June 4).—The picture on the wall of his saloon is that of Lillian, Dave's daughter, whom Dave has never heard from since her elopement with Fred, a young civil engineer, a year before. Dave does not know that Lillian has been happily married, because Bill, the postman, the jilted lover, never gave the letter which she sent her father. He does not know, too, that Bill had gone to Lillian's home and told her that her father was dead, and that Fred, the husband, on finding the two together had gone away angrily on an expedition to Central America, thinking his wife untrue to him, and that Lillian had sent the imposter Bill from her house and had gone to a ranch as a cook determined to earn her living. As Dave meditates, Fred, returned from the expedition, enters to get some whiskey for a woman who has fainted on the street. Dave, recognizing him, follows. When the fainting woman revives, Fred, Lillian and Dave find themselves face to face. Explanations follow and all are happy again.

THE WORD (Lariat—Two Parts—June 5).—In the little meeting house in the mountains "Billy Whiskers," the bandit, is converted throught the efforts of the evangelist and his daughter after the outlaw and his gang have robbed the stage coach on which the minister evangelists arrive. Billy marries his daughter, and all goes happily until one day Ruth falls and hurts her ankle. "Billy" terrified lest she is seriously hurt, runs to the drug store for medicine, and learns that the bank has been closed through the misappropriation of funds by the cashier. His outlawry blood arouses and he and "the boys" rob the bank for the $37 in it which belongs to Bill and his wife. They ride to the mountains. Bill is shot and brought to jail. The old lawyer and his wife come to see him, and though Ruth is filled with disappointment at what has happened she is assured that her husband will be released. In the next cell is the cashier of the bank, and Bill, opening his copy of "The Word" hands it through the bars to his neighbor in captivity.

THE MYSTIC WELL (United—June 6).—Frau Murphy, unable to collect rent from her two male boarders, puts the "to rent" sign in their window. Facing ejectment, the boarders rack their brains for a way to make money. An empty bottle marked "Pluto Water" gives them an idea. Stealing a fire bucket and barrel from a factory they go to a brook where they fill the barrel with water as well as other ingredients, such as eggs, a chicken, old tin cans, etc. They write a letter to a rheumatic telling him of the mysterious well that cures all ills, and sign the name of "Dr. Pretzel" to the letter. They also insert an advertisement in the local paper. The editor of the paper, being rheumatic himself, sends his small colored errand boy to follow the man that placed the order for the ad. The boy reports that he saw the well and it certainly rejuvenated a man that drank from it. The news quickly spreads and the old men go to the well. They fight to get the first cup full, but their happiness is spoiled by the boy, who pulls out the cat and the chicken. The two discoverers immediately "beat it," but are overtaken by the rheumatic old gentlemen. Under threat of going to jail or drinking the contents of the barrel, the two discoverers do their best to keep out of jail.

TRICKS OF FATE (Balboa—Two Parts—Released week May 24).—The death of their only child completely stuns the Prestons. The grief-stricken couple, hearing a slight sound at the outer door, investigate and find a deserted infant which they decide to adopt. Jim Blake, a vagrant, has seen the child left there by a mulatto woman who he thinks must be the mother. Blake decides to keep his secret. The only clue to the identity of the baby is a locket engraved with the name Naida. Years pass and Naida, who shows no trace of negro blood, grows to girlhood ignorant of her real parentage.

One day Blake calls at the Preston home and tells Naida's foster-father that he can prove that her mother is a mulatto woman and will remain silent only if paid to do so. Preston satisfies the blackmailer, but Naida overhears the terrible disclosure. That night, overcome by the dreadful knowledge of her parentage, she silently leaves her home and goes to the city. Her foster-parents and her fiance are plunged in despair by her disappearance. Naida, who supports herself through her musical ability, engages a mulatto maid. She later meets Blake, who tells her how he saw her deserted years before by this same woman. Through a musical professor, who befriended her, Naida's fiance learns of her whereabouts and calls on her.

She confesses her dreadful secret to him, but is overheard by the colored maid, who then discloses the fact that Naida's real mother was a white woman. She died soon after her child was born, owing to the shock occasioned by her husband's tragic death. Being too poor to support the child herself, the maid, in whose care the child was left, hearing of the Preston's loss, left Naida to be found by them. The maid's story dispels the clouds which enveloped Naida's life and once more the happy family is brought together.

A STONE AGE ADVENTURE (Released week of May 24).—No thought of danger enters the head of Haddam Baad, who lived 'way back in the prehistoric days, as he hitched his giant Punkosaurus to his stone hansom and set forth for a drive. Jogging peacefully along, the cab bumps over what appears to be a rock but which turns out to be the head of a Geewhizzicus which had buried itself in the sands of the desert for a nap. Being thus rudely awakened, he starts after the fleeing Punkosaurus. Up hill and down dale they go. At last the Geewhizzicus catches the tail of the Punkosaurus in his teeth, and whirling him 'round his head, lets him fly through the air. He then turns his attention to Haddam Baad, who flees to the hills nearby. With mighty leaps, old boy Geewhizzicus swiftly follows. Baad is cornered at the top where he tries to hide behind a huge balancing rock. Reaching up to grab Baad the Geewhizzicus loosens the rock, which crashes down on him and hurtles him to the ground below. Haadam also falls nearby and thinks his hour has come. A lucky thought strikes him, however, and he runs 'round and 'round the Geewhizzicus, who twists his neck in a vain effort to keep track of Haddam. The strain is too great and the gigantic head snaps off and rolls to the ground. Haddam breathes again.

HOW TROOPS CROSS A RIVER (Sweden—On the same reel as foregoing).—The views show how soldiers overcome the difficulty presented by a turbulent stream. Arriving at the bank, one of them is detailed to paddle across and fasten a strong rope to a stake on the opposite bank. The near end of the rope is then fastened at a higher elevation. A trolley is then attached to the rope and is connected with a seat on which a man sits. With a push, the man starts on his journey, gaining momentum by the incline at which the rope is set. It is only a matter of seconds for the entire trip. Each man carries his own seat and trolley which occupy very little room.

RUINS OF ANCIENT ROME (May 24).—Back in the days of Roman power and grandeur it is more than likely that the wonderful architecture of that period did not receive the appreciation which it merited. But the ruthless hand of Time and the ravages of the elements have laid waste many fine edifices of old. Among the interesting views shown are the Gate of St. Paul, built in the sixth century; the Tomb of the Tribune, Caius Centius; the Bridge and Castle of St. Angelo, built as a mausoleum for the Emperor Hadrian in A. D. 130; the Arch of Constantine; the famous Colosseum; the Forum, and many other equally historical ruins.

MICROSCOPIC MARVELS OF FRESH WATER (On the same reel as foregoing).—Thanks to a special apparatus composed of magnifying lenses and mirrors, we are able to observe and photograph even the most minute creatures to be found in fresh water. Many different forms

BABY'S TRUMPET (May 24).—There is one very important thing connected with the visit of Jean's aunt and that is whether or not she has brought with her the trumpet which she had promised him. She had not, for the very good reason that she had too much consideration for the peace of mind of Jean's fond parents.

Jean's disappointent is keen and he determines to teach her a lesson. He places several pins in the seat of a chair where they will do the most good and awaits developments. But the fates decree that his father sits in the chair which was expected to be occupied by auntie and Jean gets what Paddie gave the drum.

Feeling sorry for the boy, his aunt and mother take him shopping, unconscious of the fact that he had filled his aunt's purse with fleas. A pickpocket steals the purse and flees with the fleas. When he opens the purse to pay for a drink, the fleas, seeking revenge for being imprisoned, make life miserable for the thief. When Jean learns of the theft and sees the thief frantically scratching, he confides his suspicions to an officer who pinches the pickpocket. Jean is hailed as a hero and of course receives the treasured trumpet as a reward.

HOW BUILDING STONE IS QUARRIED (France) (On the same reel as foregoing).—This film, which shows the progressive stages of stone quarrying, will prove both interesting and instructive. We are taken to the several quarries and there shown how the giant drills cut into the stone, how the colossal blocks are split away and finally "thrown" to the level to be hauled away.

THE VANISHING CINDERELLA (Released week of May 31).—Tom Watson, a young novelist, lately famous for his book, "The Happy Life," receives a letter from his father advising him that he will shortly be favored with a visit from his fiancee and her mother. He loathes the idea, that is, the mother-in-law part of it, but is resigned to Fate. Florence Kingdon, a young newspaper woman, reads his book and wants to interview him, but he will not talk for publication, and tells her so. Finally, made desperate by his repeated refusal to talk, she decides to interview him by strategy. She goes to a hotel and takes an apartment directly over his. She makes a fake fire with plenty of smoke, jumps out on her fire escape and screams loudly for help.

Watson "rescues" her and is trying to revive her in his rooms when he hears a knock on the door. He conceals her in his back room, but has to tie her bodily to a chair to prevent her "limp" body from falling to the floor. She enjoys it immensely. His fiancee and her mother enter and at once discover a girl's slipper on his floor. A search is made, the girl found trussed to a chair, and the two indignant females file out, followed by Watson vainly pleading. While he is gone Florence escapes to her own room. Watson has been so impressed by the girl's charm that he writes a touching story called "The Vanishing Cinderella," and sells it to the newspaper on which Florence is employed. She reads it and knows she is the Cinderella whose loss the author so touchingly mourns. That night, walking in the park, Watson comes unexpectedly upon his "Vanishing Cinderella," who cannot disclaim the lost slipper, and would not if she could.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 23—"The Telltale Heart"—Released week of May 31).—Jameson, Kennedy's assistant, follows Innocent Inez, one of Wu Fang's confederates, to her apartment where he attempts to question her. She touches a knob in the table carvings and an iron bar swings out from the wall behind Jameson and knocks him unconscious. Inez then sends a gypsy confederate to tell Elaine's fortune, and to incidentally bind Elaine's eyes with a handkerchief holding in its seam a vial containing a spark of radium.

Inez has been instructed by Wu Fang that the proximity of the radium to Elaine's eyes for three minutes will be sufficient to blind her. Kennedy, informed previously by 'phone of Jameson's destination, follows him and when he arrives is assaulted in the same way as was his assistant. Jameson's glove on the floor attracts his attention and he stoops to pick it up just as the murderous bar swings out from the wall to strike him. Inez is overpowered and Jameson is found. A 'phone message to Inez from Wu Fang reveals Elaine's peril, and Kennedy and Jameson arrive at the Dodge home. They are relieved to discover that Elaine, in binding her eyes, substituted her own handkerchief for the one furnished by the gypsy.

Inez is taken to Kennedy's laboratory, where the sphygmograph is applied while Kennedy repeats certain house numbers in the Chinatown district. Wu Fang is known to live in that vicinity and Kennedy realizes that when his house number is repeated, it will cause a quicker pulsation of Inez's blood.

Wu Fang, knowing of Inez's predicament, makes a sensational rescue, but Kennedy "has his number," and the next episode promises thrilling situations.

MADURAH AND ITS PAGODAS (Released week of May 31).—Here we see the quantities of ancient India at its best, beautiful pagodas and palaces, relics of the grandeur of Great Britain's possession in the Far East. The palace of Tirumalai Naik, the Rajah of Madurah in the seventeenth century, is shown in its present well-preserved condition. The entrance to the famous pagoda which was destroyed by the Musselmans in the fourteenth century, and the various gods which are revered by the natives are among the scenes unfolded to our gaze.

STOCK FARMING IN BRAZIL (Released week of May 31).—'Way down in South America men engaged in stock farming are as modern as their northern brothers—and perhaps are a little more advanced in this science. In this release are shown some very modern methods used in the raising of stock. The buildings and enclosures are of the latest type, as are all the other "fittings."

CHUTES AND RAPIDS OF THE SIVASAMUDRAN (On same reel as foregoing).—Tearing down as a veritable cataract, churned into foam by its incessant tumbling, the waters of the Sivasamurdran, that picturesque river of Hindustan, are most spectacular. Winding their serpentine way through the hills, they flow ever onward over a majestic course.

THE NEMESIS (Released week of May 31).—Having served ten years at hard labor, Robert Richards, Convict No. 832, regains his freedom from prison. Resolved to start life anew, he seeks employment, but the world looks askance at him, and failure meets his persistent efforts.

Dejected and discouraged, he makes his way to a bench in a nearby park. A banker, peeved at the close proximity of the shabby man, hastens away. Richards notes that he has left his portfolio behind on the bench. He follows the banker and restores the case to him, receiving his thanks and a request to call at his establishment. As a reward for his honesty, Richards obtains employment. During three years that follow, Richard's' judgment is given much consideration, and his employer reaps great financial benefits. Realizing his worth, the banker takes Richards into partnership. In society, he meets the wealthy widow, Mrs. Gordon, and a mutual interest is awakened. Many pleasant days follow, and cupid finally takes the pair in hand. Richards' happiness is now complete.

Feeling the need of a servant in his new home, Richards engages what he thinks is a competent man. The new servant, a former convict and pal of Richards, discovers the identity of his employer and decides to use the knowledge for his own evil ends. Through threats of exposure he blackmails Richards. Fearful of disclosure, Richards proves an easy prew to the human leech and pays him liberally for his silence. The blackmailer's ill-gotten gains are soon spent, and he returns again to harass Richards. To escape his tormentor, Richards feigns illness and decides to go away to Switzerland for a vacation. The blackmailer follows him and gets aboard the same train. Making his way along the side of the train looking for Richards' compartment, he is swept off the running-board by a passing train. Fate has removed the "Nemesis" of Richards.

WHIFFLES GOES TWO WAYS (Released week of May 31).—Whiffles has but to cast his radiant smile at one of the fair sex and hearts begin to patter. That's why the flower girl succumbs to his winning wiles and seriously considers his ardent proposal of marriage. Her heart beats like a trip-hammer as she shyly whispers a halting "yes." Whiffles, winking slyly to himself, hastens with a fresh bouquet to his real fiancee. But the Gods of Love determine his punishment for trifling with the affections of the innocent maid.

"Oooo! Ouch! Oh! mommer!" Such are the cries of Whiffles as he attempts to arise next morning. For the gout has got him and got him good. Howls of pain greet the doctor who calls to prescribe. Whiffles is sent to a watering place for the "cure." His fiancee follows to nurse him. The flower-girl also decides to remain near him. She gets an awful shock when she sees Whiffles' arms full of another girl's waist and she wastes no time in getting revenge. She confides her story to Whiffles' fiancee and they plan their vengeance.

They certainly get their revenge in a way that will make you howl with laughter every time that Whiffles howls with pain. But his torture ends as suddenly as it began and Whiffles is surprised when he aims a well intentioned kick at the rear end of one of the attendants and realizes that rout of the gout is complete.

WHO PAYS? Series No. 8, "Today and Tomorrow (Balboa—Released week of May 31).—"Do it now" was a phrase that was as meaningless to Julia Monroe as was the word necessity. Rich, idle, pampered, petted, wilful, spoiled, she knew time only as a tedious something that was to be spent as amusingly as her extravagant fancy distated. When love came, it made but one change—her time became to her a precious gift to be spent delightfully in her lover's presence.

Trouble came in the form of old Monroe's discontented employees. Long tedious days of work were broken or followed by no pleasure but what their food gave them, and when that became intolerable, they grumbled and fretted in a way that was a warning to their employer. He sent Lee Payne, his daughter's fiancee, to the city to get food, and get it quickly. In the city Lee met Julia, and when she heard of his mission she disregarded its importance as she always did anything that stood between her and her pleasure.

The minutes grew to hours, and still she petuantly used all of her charm and power to keep him by her side. Torn between love and duty, he betrayed his trust when he needed most to be firm. In vain the men at the oil works waited for the promised food. Night came. Led on by a trouble-making malcontent they broke loose and tried to vent their anger on the employer they believed had lied to them. One spark of flame destroyed his plant. Morning, and the arrival of an armed guard were the only things that stood between the Oil King and the Great Beyond. The "reliable" employee was cast out, a stigma forever on his name, and the girl realized too late the part she'd played in blighting her future happiness and his. Who Pays?

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 4—Two Parts—"The Prodigal's Progress").—After what seemed an age, during which the unconscious form of the fugitive was carried swiftly down stream by the current, Arthur Stanley returned to consciousness to find himself stretched out on the grassy shore. But only for a moment, for he fainted. When he opened his eyes, Arthur was conscious of a soft hand, stroking his brow. It was Esther. Quickly she told him everything, her birth, her parentage, and of how, after being ordered out of Dr. Lee's home by Blair Stanley's mother, she had returned at once to her rightful social sphere—the daughter of Hagar, the gypsy queen. Carefully Esther helped him along the beach to the camp where the fugitive threw himself on a cot in Hagar's tent and was soon fast asleep.

Luke Lovell, a member of the tribe, who loved Esther, by means of the later afternoon paper, recognized in Arthur the man wanted for the murder of Dr. Lee and quickly carried the news of the supposed assassin's presence in the camp to Hagar. Arthur wakened as Hagar entered the tent. For a moment her mother love seemed to get the better of her, but the fact that her own son was a hunted murderer, roused her to a frenzy and, in her rage, she poured into the ears of the astounded youth the story of his life. Protestations of innocence had no effect, and late that afternoon, Arthur left for Richmond, determined to make a name for himself in the world. In a Richmond pawnshop, Arthur, penniless and hungry, finally bargained with the unscrupulous dealer for a loan on the diamond from the sky. The deal completed, Arthur was about to leave, when the familiar voice of his cousin, Blair Stanley, halted him. Turning, he came face to face with his cousin. For a moment his pent up wrath all but got the better of him. But Blair, realizing the seriousness of his predicament, confessed to Arthur the theft of the gem, succeeding in convincing him that Dr. Lee's death was due to shock; that he had not killed him.

The wound inflicted by Arthur during the duel, Blair told him, had been a superficial one from which he quickly recovered and, reaching home, his mother had secreted him, until the wrath of the populace had cooled enough to permit him fleeing to Richmond. Believing him, Arthur agreed to accompany him to the annual ball of the Daughters of the Confederacy scheduled for that evening. As on similar occasions when among the elite of Richmond, Vivian Marston, a woman of beauty but few scruples, ruled supreme. During the evening Arthur and Blair were introduced to this woman, and they were astounded when they noted the diamond from the sky suspended from her neck. In the outer reception room, Hagar, Esther and Luke Lovell, who, through Blake, the Richmond detective seeking the slayer, had traced Arthur to Richmond, watched the cousins. But Hagar's eye centered only on Vivian and the diamond strung from her neck.

Calling Luke aside, Hagar whispered to him. A moment later he stepped into the adjoining hall. Tired, Vivian, who borrowed the diamond for the occasion from the pawnbroker through the strange fascination she held over him, sought to rest in the reception room, and, dropping into a great divan, partly closed her eyes. As the orchestra struck up a waltz and the guests stepped out on to the waxed floor, the heavy velvet curtains strung just behind the divan, slowly parted and the powerful hand of a man stretched forth. A moment later they had closed about the adventuress's throat, then seized and jerked the diamond from Vivian's neck. She screamed. The diamond was gone. As the curtains closed, a crouching figure made its way down the hall, then out into the darkness.

THE MILLIONAIRE BABY (Selig—Six Parts May 31). Valerie Carew is fascinated with the plaudits of the theater, and refuses to leave the stage when importuned by her author husband, Justin Carew. Disgusted with the environment Valerie seeks, and smarting from her taunts as to his ill success in authorship, Justin leaves his wife. Valerie is overcome when she reads Justin's note. The manager, hastening to the front of the theater, requests the services of a physician. Dr. Pool ministers to Valerie and takes her home. When about to leave her apartment, he accidentally discovers the baby garments that Valerie is preparing. Justin Carew, engaged by Philo Ocumpaugh as his private secretary, accompanies Philo westward where he is called by mining interests. Mrs. Ocumpaugh seeks Dr. Pool, the physician. "To retain my husband's love I must secure a child," she tells the physician. Dr. Pool's memory reverts to Valerie Carew. He tells Marion Ocumpaugh that for ten thousand dollars he will obtain a child for her. The agreement is reached.

In the west, Philo is saved from death by Justin. In the hospital he is overjoyed to receive a message reading: "It's a girl." In the meantime, Dr. Pool has worked his hypnotic powers over Valerie Carew, has paid her financial consideration for her newly born babe, has taken it to Mrs. Ocumpaugh, and neither the real mother nor the pesudo mother are aware of each other's identity. In the years that pass, the Ocumpaugh home is made happy for Philo with the presence of the little girl. The child seems to have an abiding love for Justin, and Gwendolyn and the secretary become almost inseparable. It is in reality the call of blood ties.

And then a fortune comes to Valerie Carew, the former queen of burlesque, and now a star in the theatrical firmament. She concludes to retire from the stage, and asks Dr. Pool about her little girl. Dr. Pool with a vision of more illy gotten gains resolves to mulct Velerie just as he did Marion Ocumpaugh. He calls at the Ocumpaugh mansion. He threatens to inform Marion's husband of the secret history of "the millionaire baby" unless she pays him money. Marion refuses. Dr. Pool then tells Valerie that he will return to her her little girl, for a financial consideration. Another agreement is reached. Valerie Carew buys a home with her newly acquired inheritance, adjacent to the Ocumpaugh residence, being, of course, unconscious that Gwendolyn, whom she meets and whom she learns to love, is her long lost and long mourned baby. Marion Ocumpaugh, fearing that Dr. Pool will kidnap Gwendolyn, engages a detective to watch the little girl. The Ocumpaugh's give a children's party. Dr. Pool is present. He resolves to steal the child that night, but is foiled by seeing the detective on guard.

In the meantime, Valerie Carew, through a blunder of Dr. Pool, finds that Gwendolyn is her own. She, too, fearing Dr. Pool's machinations, resolves to take the little one. She creeps into the Ocumpaugh garden in her ballroom gown and her dress catches on a rose bush. Following the departure of the guests, it has been found that "the millionaire baby" has disappeared. All is excitement. The detective is uncertain whom to suspect. Dr. Pool is non-committal, Valerie Carew is frantic, and Marion Ocumpaugh shows great anxiety. Philo Ocumpaugh, in a hunting camp is wired details and offers $50,000 reward for the recovery of "the millionaire baby." The detective, finding a piece of torn dress trimming belonging to Valerie, suspects her. He sees Justin about to leave the Ocumpaugh home and suspects him. His trail leads to Dr. Pool's home. He accosts that scheming physician. He finds that Valerie, also suspecting Dr. Pool, has called upon the physician to beseech him to give up her little girl. As the detective and the physician confront each other, Valerie, in hysterical emotion, divulges the details of the original pact, and she brands Pool as a blackmailer. Seeing that the end of his plotting has been reached, Dr. Pool grapples with the detective. Dr. Pool springs from a balcony, falls and breaks his neck. And when Philo Ocumpaugh comes home his wife tells him her secret. She opens a hidden panel, and there in a secret room in the mansion is found Gwendolyn, "the millionaire baby," and her nurse. Justin and Valerie Carew are reunited and are happy in the recovery of their child. Philo, knowing that Marion's great love prompted her deception, forgives her and the principals vow to keep the secret of "the millionaire baby."

PARAMOUNT.

HOUSE OF THE LOST COURT (Edison—Five Parts—May 6).—Sir Anthony Elliott, an artist, is secretly engaged to Elinore Vane. At the same time that Anthony gets a letter from his brother, Paul, that he is coming to London for a visit, Elinore gets word that her friend, Nina, is to pay her a visit. The arrival of the two guests is marked by a festive event. Paul, who has been in the military in India, produces a ring which he says was given him by a dying Indian. The ring contains a vial filled with the sleep of death. Lady Rosamund, mother of the young men, allows the ring to be placed on her finger. Subsequently, while the four are out on a mountain climbing trip, Anthony rescues Nina, who has fallen over a cliff and caught on a protruding snag. In consequence of the rescue, a strong friendship is engendered between Nina and Anthony. On the other hand, as warm a friendship has arisen between Elinore and Paul, much to Anthony's discomfort. Upon questioning her as to whether she has told Paul of her engagement to his brother, Elinore tells Anthony that she has not mentioned it to him. Rather than cause a breach in the family, Anthony countenances the love affair of Paul and Elinore, and they are married.

In a short time Paul becomes a gambler. In his bachelor apartments in London, Anthony is visited by Nina, who admits her great love for him, and implores him to take her to America with him. She sacrifices all her pride in the manifestation of her affection for him. He repulses her, however, and, hearing Elinore approach, directs her quickly into the next room. Elinore enters and tells Anthony how unfaithful Paul has been to her, and asks him to take her to America with him. Anthony refuses flatly. Elinore then uses invective language, and a paper knife, which Anthony has been handling, stiffens in his hand. Nina gives a startled scream from behind the door where she has been watching through the keyhole. She decides to get even with Anthony and accuses him of the murder of Elinore. Anthony is accordingly sentenced to death for murder, and is found dead in his cell the morning after the trial.

Lady Rosamund leaves part of the Castle to Dolores Edgerton and her mother. One evening, Dolores sees a gondola in the lake near the Castle, and, curious to know who is in it, she investigates and discovers a secret compartment under the Castle, occupied by a man, an artist. She tells no one and visits the place several times. Eventually, Anthony, for it is he, tells her how he was given the sleep of death by Lady Rosamund in the prison, and how he was awakened and rescued, after prison physicians had pronounced him dead. Dolores, now in love with Anthony, through a stratagem, gets a confession from Nina that it was Elinore who killed herself, and Anthony is once more a free man.

STOLEN GOODS (Lasky—Five Parts—May 24).—Margery Huntley, an orphan alone in New York, employed at a dressmaking establishment, is sent by the forewoman to match a sample of lace for a gown. While at the lace counter, standing side by side with Helen North, a wealthy girl who is a kleptomaniac, a piece of very expensive lace is stolen by Helen and missed before she can get away. In a panic at the thought of detection, Helen slips the lace into Margery's handbag, which is open, without Margery knowing it. The fact that the stolen goods are found on Margery causes her to be sent to prison. In the meanwhile Helen goes abroad with her invalid father. Margery serves her full term in prison, and on her release is befriended by the "Prison Angel," a kindly Salvation Army woman who hears the girl's story, believes in her and gives her a chance to be trained as a nurse. Margery graduates and is happy in her work, when the detective who arrested her, while visiting the hospital, recognizes her and tells one of the nurses that she has a prison record. Margery, realizing that her usefulness in that particular field is over, asks the doctor to send her abroad to nurse the wounded in Belgium. Through the war Helen's father loses all his money and dies suddenly in Belgium. Helen is left practically penniless. Her only hope is that she may hear from her father's old friend, a wealthy Mrs. Franklyn, of California, to whom her father had written, begging her to help his daughter. Mrs. Franklyn has never seen Helen, but generously sends her money and a steamer ticket and urges her to join her as quickly as possible. Helen starts on her journey, but is compelled to wait, and suffers the delays and hardships common to all the refugees at that time. Margery has reached Belgium and is working in a Red Cross Emergency Hospital.

Helen and other refugees are driven from the refugee camp by the appearance of two hostile airships. Helen, panic-stricken, runs so far that she is lost and exhausted, and is brought to the Emergency Hospital. Margery recognizes her, but Helen doesn't recognize Margery. Helen tells Margery her story, displaying her steamer ticket and asking how she may continue on her journey. Margery tells Helen: "I am the girl you sent to prison." A shell strikes the Emergency Hospital and Helen is severely wounded and left for dead. The enemy capture the town and Margery is left alone with those of the wounded who couldn't be moved. While arranging Helen's dress and papers, she is struck by their similarity of age and height, and notes the fact that Mrs. Franklyn has never seen Helen. She yields to the temptation to take this chance Fate has put in her way and determines to go to California as Helen North. She leaves the Emergency Hospital in the company of Dr. Richard Carlton, a young American Red Cross surgeon, serving with the enemy who has been so badly wounded that he is invalided home. After Margery's departure, the German surgeon discovers that Helen is not dead, but suffering from a depressed fracture of the skull. He operates and restores her to health. In the meantime Margery has been successful in establishing herself as Helen North. Mrs. Franklyn has become very fond of her and Dr. Carlton is deeply in love with her and wishes to marry her. The real Helen North makes her escape and comes to claim her own. At first Margery only begs to be allowed to go away quietly, but the other woman is so vindictive and so forgetful of the part she played in robbing Margery of her good name, that Margery, angry, determines to deny the truth. She succeeds in this up to the last moment and then overcome by the thought that she is condemning this girl to lifelong imprisonment in an insane asylum, and that she herself has gained Dr. Carlton's love under false pretences, makes full confession, only to find that the doctor loves her in spite of everything.

A WILD GOOSE CHASE (Lasky—Four Parts—May 27).—Two old gentlemen in France are discussing the fact that their daughters married Americans 25 years ago. Each has a photograph of his grandchild, whose names are Bob Randall and Betty Wright. The old Frenchmen deplore the fact that in America young people marry whom they please, and decide that it is due to the honor of their families that their grandchildren should marry, according to the French fashion, the people picked out for them by the older heads of the family. They decide to marry the grand children to each other, and in order to insure the carrying out of their wishes, each writes a letter to his own grandchild, stating that each grandchild will receive 2,000,000 francs upon marrying the other. The scene now goes to America and we see the two grandchildren, Betty being taken shopping by her mother, and Bob as a student in a little country college in the same town. The two have never met. Bob becomes involved in a mischievous college prank, involving the stealing of a cigar store Indian, and is being hotly pursued by the town constable. He rounds a corner in his efforts to escape and sees an automobile standing at the sidewalk, with Betty Wright sitting in the back seat. To escape his pursuers he jumps into the front of the auto and starts it off, driving it out into the country, in spite of the remonstrances of Betty. The car breaks down and the pursuers are hotly upon their trail.

The two young people are much struck with each other and Betty, realizing that it was only a college prank, doesn't want to see the young man get into serious trouble and so helps him hide from the others who come up and take Betty and the car back, before either of the young folks has learned the other's name. On their return home, the letters, from the grandparents are awaiting them—Bob's letter, ordering him to marry a Betty Wright whom he has never seen, and Betty's letter demanding that she marry a Bob Randall, who is unknown to her. The young people refuse their parents' demands to marry the unknown. Pressure is brought to bear upon them, which results in their determining to run away, though neither knows that the other has planned to do so. Betty escapes from her window and joins a little one-horse theatrical troupe, playing "Romeo and Juliet" in the tank towns, led by a certain Horatio Brutus Bangs, a genial but impecunious old actor. The juvenile man and woman of this troupe have just left, because no salaries have been paid, and when Betty, having seen the poster, applies for a position in the company, Horatio regards it as an act of Providence and accepts her. At the railroad station they find Bob, who is waiting for a train, with no definite plans, except to go out into the world and make his fortune. The two young people recognize

??? ARE SOLAR SCREENS DURABLE ???

Alfred L. Simpson, May 24th, 1915.
113 West 132nd St.
Dear Sir:

In answer to your inquiry of even date, I am glad to say that the Simpson Solar Screen which I purchased from you in 1912, having been in continuous use in my New Broadway Theatre, Yonkers, has retained all of the original lustre and brilliancy and is in every respect as good as on the day installed.

I will also state further that this is the third Solar Screen purchased from you for my different houses, and all have given the most perfect satisfaction, and I consider the Simpson Solar Screen to be the most perfect projection surface in the world.

Wishing the Solar Screen the success it deserves, I am,
Yours very truly, JOSEPH P. EAGER."

each other and Bob determines to cast his lot in with the theatrical troupe, because of his infatuation for Betty.

The two young people, having changed their names in order to evade their parents, remain unaware that it is their love for each other which is really causing them to run away in order to avoid marrying each other. In the next town we see the little company trying to give a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" under very adverse circumstances, and finally the Sheriff attaches all their baggage. There is no money to pay the hotel bill and the company is sent to the village lockup, where Bob's romance with Betty commences to grow. Betty's parents trace her and are taking her away when the two young folks discover each other's identity. The company is liberated from prison and starts to walk the ties back to New York, and Bob and Betty surprise their parents by suddenly ceasing their opposition to the match and meekly obeying their grandfather's will and marrying each other.

SOMETHING JUST AS GOOD (World Comedy Star Film Corp.—May 10).—Lionel Armstrong, a blacksmith, is in love with Nellie Sunshine, the village beauty, but Percy Saddlenose, who comes from Philadelphia, fascinates Nellie by his city ways. Percy has bought the village drug store and is a soda water fiend. Lionel's mother, Bedelia Armstrong, is a fashionable invalid, and to cheer her by his presence in the sick room, Lionel does all his fancy iron work in her boudoir. When Nellie visits the invalid, bringing cheer and cabbages, also frankfurters, it is seen that love and harmony exists between the blacksmith, his socially active invalid mother and the village belle. Later Nellie is sent to the drug store by the society invalid. Percy Saddlenose has no pharmaceutical training, but he has "something just as good."

Nellie becomes infatuated with the stranger, little thinking he is addicted to soda water! The city ways of Percy Saddlenose win Nellie's affection from Lionel. The blacksmith, realizing that clothes do make the man, buys a suit of lion tamer's check from Gus, the square Clothier, and with this he receives a dollar watch, gratis! This magnificence of apparel has its desired effect upon Nellie Sunshine. She returns to Lionel. Filled with jealousy and soda water, Percy Saddlenose determines to out-dazzle the village blacksmith in the eyes of Nellie Sunshine. So he goes to the village five and ten cent store and buys a Ford!

Meanwhile, prompted by the soda water, Percy Saddlenose has turned Lionel Armstrong's dollar watch into an infernal machine. It blows up when Lionel is giving Nellie "one minute to decide" between Percy's Ford and his dollar watch. Percy flees in the Ford with Nellie, but, roused to consciousness and action, Lionel pursues on his knife grinding apparatus, which, as his mother tells him, "is a better machine than Percy's". He overtakes the soda water fiend and the infatuated maiden and wins back her affections for good and all, baffling the demon druggist and leaving the latter to his soda water addiction and a life of blighted bachelorhood.

TWO OF THE BRAVEST (Weber and Fields in World Film Comedy—May 17).—Meyer is employed as a traffic cop for the city, leaving his friend, Mike, back in the small town delicatessen store. Meyer arrests speeders and when he discovers the ease with which the Judge extracts money from the offenders, he communicates with his former companion, and they plan to institute a police force and court of their own.

Going into the country they secure a shanty, and Meyer appoints himself Judge and sends his constable out with orders to arrest everything on wheels and bring them before him. Anxious to obey the orders of his superior, Mike bounces upon an unsuspecting gentleman who is wheeling a baby carriage, containing twins, with one hand and struggling with the weight of a rubber plant and many bundles with the other. At the impromptu station house that unfortunate personage is fined and relieved of jewelry, money, etc., by the supposed authorities. The next alleged offender to fall into the clutches of the pretenders is a pickpocket, whom the false judge fines $40, but, finding that the criminal has only $36, he sends him out to secure the other $4 after his own manner.

In the meantime a young lady, afflicted with a winking eye, is pursued by a number of flirts. Mike also mistakes her affliction for a desire to become acquainted and, upon approaching her, receives a slap in the face, following which he arrests her and carries her before the Judge. The young lady is fined. Angry at two disreputable young men, who have been peering through the window of the court room, Mike and Meyer dash out after them. The rag-a-muffins jump on motorcycles and try to escape. Mike and Meyer spring into a small touring car and pursue them, much to their discomfort, for several real policemen in the city arrest them for speeding, and their brief period of authority is ended by a sentence of 90 days in jail.

BUILDER OF BRIDGES (Frohman Amusement Corp).—Edward Thursfield, chief engineer of the bridge building firm of Henry Killick & Company, is building the largest concrete bridge in the world. Employed in the New York office is a young man named Arnold Faringay. Arnold sees an opportunity of using money from the pay roll for a big deal. He takes the money, but the market goes against him. He seeks to borrow the $20,000 from Walter Gresham, his sister Dorothy's fiance.

Dorothy learns from Arnold that Thursfield is the big power in the firm and decides to follow him to Atlantic City where he has gone to look over the site for a new pier. She meets Thursfield at Atlantic City, and playing upon his sympathy leads him to propose to her. The confidential clerk of Henry Killick, has become suspicious of Arnold's accounts, and when Thursfield arrives he finds the errors, and Arnold is forced to confess before Thursfield.

Thursfield is stunned at the thought of his fiancee's brother being a thief and to save her the disgrace he pays over the $20,000. Arnold thanks him and is sent home by Thursfield. He meets Walter Gresham and tells him that his shortage has been made good by a friend. Gresham returns to his house and receives a note from Dorothy breaking their engagement because of his selfishness.

He bursts into the parlor as Thursfield holds Dorothy in his arms and demands to know from Dorothy who Thursfield is. Dorothy introduces him as her fiance, whereupon Walter, realizing who the friend was who paid the money, denounces her before Thursfield. Thursfield demands the truth, and she admits that she did have that purpose, but that she really loves him now. Thursfield refuses to believe and leaves her. Next morning, Arnold sees that copper has made a tremendous jump. He finds that his money has made enough to pay back his stealings. Thursfield, his love for the girl overpowering his resentment, forgives her and calls her back to him.

A clear picture is as essential as a good scenario. Because the basic product is right the clearest pictures are on Eastman Film. Identifiable by the stencil mark in the margin.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

You Owe It To Your Spectators

You are not giving full value, no matter how good your film, unless your pictures are without flicker and brilliant to each corner of the sheet.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses give the film full value and spectators their money's worth.

Patrons appreciate this attention to sharp definition and even illumination, and show it by coming back again and again.

From any film exchange you can secure these lenses —the same as are regularly furnished for Edison and Nicholas Power Machines.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.
566 ST. PAUL STREET, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Largest Manufacturers of Photographic Lenses, Microscopes, Projection Apparatus, Ophthalmic Lenses and other Optical Products in America.

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Exhibitor:

WE honestly believe Anderson and Hetzel lay awake nights thinking up ways to spend our money! Every time a hundred dollar bill pokes its nose out of our cash drawer they pounce on it and say: "Aha! This goes for improvements." And it does! We can't always afford it, either, but we stand for it because we know Minusa Gold Fibre Screens are at the pinnacle of the projection field. Since brains, study, experiment and care put them there, we know the same things will keep them there.

Isn't it better to capitalize energy, brains and devotion for the future than the relics of the past? We sell neither trade-marks nor memories, but the most surpassing projection surface ever devised.

With a Minusa your screen investment is always protected.

Send us the specifications of your house to get a Minusa, the screen "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

THESE STARS Are Now Shining Brighter Than Ever Before

The sky they twinkle from is never cloudy—every story, every setting you see them in, is Thanhouseresquely consistent. So they're ALWAYS brilliant!

THANHOUSER TRADE MARK

WATCH the work of Florence LaBadie in "The Six Cent Loaf," the two reel Thanhouser release for Tuesday, June 8th. A story of starvation and high food prices that will strike home anywhere.

On the single reel for Sunday, June 13th, you will find "Bud Blossom" and "Through Edith's Looking-glass" two charming little subjects in which dinky little Helen Badgley will just steal your heart away, and Lorraine Huling, Carey Hastings and the Benham youngster add the stuff that makes good pictures.

FALSTAFF FILMS

FALSTAFF TRADE MARK

THE Friday Falstaffs are coming along in great shape—nice, genteel comedies that call for more brain-work than foot-work. Just see "His Guardian Auto," released June 11th. One reel, as usual. Ethyl Cooke gets a ride in a machine that carries champagne where the gasoline ought to be. Isn't that original?

And Remember This:

The Thanhouser-Mutual Masterpictures give you the Thanhouser stars in feature work. "God's Witness" was the first and it scored heavily. The second is "The Patriot and the Spy"—they are Masterpictures in every detail.

"Conscience"

A Most Unusual Four Reel Imp Drama with Allen Holubar, Frances Nelson and Wm. Welsh.

In this gripping drama an innocent man is sent to the electric chair on circumstantial evidence, which to the jury seems conclusive proof of his guilt. In a series of remarkable pictures the story is told with a realism that includes many remarkable scenes taken in Sing Sing prison. Later is shown the reopening of the case; some remarkable detective work, the "scientific" third degree and the confession—all too late—of the actual perpetrator of the crime. One of the most absorbingly interesting photoplays ever filmed.

"A Boob's Romance"

A Genuine Comedy. Two Reel Laemmle Comedy Drama with Robert Leonard and Ella Hall.

Here is the real thing. Fun, fast and furious. Bob Leonard is a comedian with a funny personality, facial expressions that fit the scene. There is no slap stick nor dependence on grotesque make-ups in this screaming comedy. Bob is a genuine boob, who when chance offers proves himself a hero and gets a chance to be something more than a boob. Genuine comedy means thrilling, intense scenes where "laughter is akin to tears," and they are there with a punch in this remarkable photo comedy.

"For the Honor of a Woman"

Fourth Adventure of the Gorgeous "Under the Crescent" Series with Princess Hassan.

The apex of photoplay realism is reached in this remarkable release. A sand storm on the desert staged in a real California desert easily leads as a photoplay natural spectacle anything ever thrown on the screen. The efforts of the Princess Hassan to escape from the clutches of her husband, Prince Tousson, son of the Khedive of Egypt, together with Harem scenes that are marvels of scenic embellishment and the beauty of women. A distinct addition to a notable series.

"Circus Mary"

Spectacular Three Reel Victor Drama with Mary Fuller and Matt Moore.

Here is a distinct treat for the millions of movie fans who worship at the shrine of sweet and popular Mary Fuller. The development of the plot reveals Mary taking the role of a circus rider, and in the spangles of the sawdust ring her beauty is more marked than ever. A novel plot and brisk action make this a worthy vehicle for Miss Fuller's marvelous talents.

"Larry O'Neill, Gentleman"

Clever Two Reel Imp Comedy drama with William Garwood and Violet Mersereau.

Larry is a worker in the steel mills. For the purpose of an experiment his "big boss" provides him with money and makes a "gentleman" of Larry. How handsome Larry's innate gentility and fine character develop makes an intensely interesting story. A pretty love story adds to the charm of this splendid feature.

"The Test of a Man"

An Unusual Western Two Reel 101-Bison Drama with Wellington Playter and Marie Walcamp.

They tried to put it over on the young civil engineer just out of college, but even the bullies of a railroad camp were no match for his wits and muscle —"brain and brawn." Introducing a railroad wreck and dynamite explosion in a realistic scene. A corking play.

"Their Secret"

Two Reel Big U Heart Interest Drama with Wm. Dowlan, Allan Forrest and Violet MacMillan.

Their secret marriage seemed doomed to wreck on the rocks of separation, but the darling baby won grandma's heart and all ended happily for a loving young couple.

Thumbs Up for "Graustark" and "The Slim Princess"

In the Roman arena the great public sat in judgment on the gladiators who battled for their entertainment. It gave its approval to a favorite by holding thumbs up. Thumbs down meant death.

The public today guarantees the success of a photoplay or signals for its death just as surely as it disposed of a gladiator in the time of Nero.

The public has sat in judgment on Essanay's great feature releases, "Graustark" and "The Slim Princess." Its thumbs are up. These two plays, the former in six acts, by George Barr McCutcheon and the latter in four acts, by George Ade, have stood the test of public approval.

Essanay has received word from exhibitors from all parts of the country that the public is wild with enthusiasm over these two plays. Theatres where they are being shown are crowded to overflowing.

To you this means big box office receipts. It means that the booking of these plays assures you of great crowds. All you have to do is to count the money.

Book these plays through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E. and reap the profits made possible through Essanay's standard of excellence.

WHEN THE MIND SLEEPS

The fact that Miss Tannehill repeated abroad, in face of the prejudice against players of other than native birth, the successes she scored in this country is an indication of her histrionic ability and personality. Among her Broadway vehicles were "A Pair of Sixes," Longacre Theatre; "Snobs," Hudson Theatre, and "Broadway Jones," Cohan Theatre. Miss Tannehill's London successes included "The Fortune Hunter," Queen's Theatre; "Broadway Jones," Theatre Royal, and "Sealed Orders," Drury Lane. VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX-SHEET POSTERS.

WHAT THEY ALL SAY

Toledo, Ohio, May 24, 1915.

Vitagraph Co.

A note of appreciation from an exhibitor who has hesitated for some time because of being a woman and one unusually young to be in this business alone, but with the help of the General Film Co. of Detroit and back of them the excellent program put forth by the several companies on their list I have made a success of my house, where the men before me failed.

I have and still am using every Vitagraph produced and would not give up one single reel for a great deal.

CLARA M. DE GRASSE,
The Pastime Amusement Co.

Canton, O., April 22, 1915.

Vitagraph Co.

We want to let you know that we appreciate very much your effort to help the exhibitor. We are using about 8 reels of your make per week.

Yours very truly,
THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE.

New York, May 8, 1915.

I wish to express my pleasure over Roy McCardell's "Jarr Family" which I see has proved a huge success as a moving picture. Hope that it will continue in public favor as long as it has in the New York Evening World.

Facts and Comments

THE spectacle of justices of the peace in rustic Jersey overriding the Supreme Court of the United States on points of law has been eclipsed by the Common Council of Yonkers, which, in the face of the plain opinion of the highest appellate tribunal of this state, has passed an ordinance to close the motion picture theaters on Sunday. Of course this ordinance will be fought in the courts. In view of the uncertainty of all litigation, it would be rash to make any predictions, but it certainly does look as if the Yonkers statesmen had ignored the plain language of the Court of Appeals. The thing to do now is to concentrate the united opposition of exhibitors on the Mayor who urged the Common Council to pass this preposterous ordinance and on the misguided Alderman who introduced it. If these men seek any further political honors let the exhibitors of Yonkers give them a lesson in the power of the slide as a political agent.

WHEN we said the other day that the war in Europe had seriously interfered with the supply of film and that England alone was sending us films at this time, we referred, of course, to the belligerent countries only. There is one source which has never been affected by the war and that is the studio of the Great Northern in neutral Denmark. This old pioneer firm, which has always kept pace with the progress of the art, is today one of the most potent factors in the import of European film.

THE delusive and at times the positively deceitful poster is still causing much adverse criticism. To be perfectly fair and just, we must bear in mind that the exhibitor owes it to his public to let them know just what they may expect to see inside. He might, of course, content himself with exhibiting a plain printed program in a frame, but that would be a counsel of perfection and it might prove fatal to his business. No one more than we oppose lurid and misleading posters, but all posters are not such and the public do expect to see a display in the lobby or in the front. There are exceptions, of course, some of the big theatres have dropped the poster entirely, but the average motion picture show can scarcely do without them—not just yet.

THE superintendent of schools in a Western city, according to one of our correspondents, says, "that it is impossible to secure the kind of films desired for schools." We would like to suggest to him to write to George Kleine, 166 North State Street, Chicago, for a catalogue of educational moving pictures. Then there is a Pathe catalogue, a Gaumont catalogue, an Edison catalogue. The Pharos Film Company, a new concern which uses Eclair film and of which Claude Patin is a prominent official, may be addressed at 126 West 46th Street, New York If the superintendent will tap these sources he will have no trouble in getting what he wants. We might also suggest Mrs. Catherine Carter, of 170 Madison Avenue, New York.

OUT on the coast the judge of a court of inferior jurisdiction has just upheld the findings of a local censor board denying an appeal to a jury from the decision of the board. Curiously enough, the film in dispute was a comedy. Aside from the legal aspects of the case, it is interesting to note that comedies are the most frequent causes of a profound difference of opinion. The reason is obvious. Opinion and taste are convertible terms when it comes to a question of humor. There are people absolutely devoid of any sense of humor. Others have their sense of humor developed to an abnormal extent. Hence these irreconcilable differences.

LAST call for the Reading convention. We cannot imagine any Pennsylvania exhibitor who is interested in the cause of organization missing this convention. The Keystone organization has done great things in the past. It has dealt a blow to censorship and to Breitingerism. It has put the exhibiting body of the state on good terms with the state officials and with the powers that be. We hope to see an enthusiastic and well-attended convention, which will strengthen the organization in its own state and be an example to every other state.

Detective Stories*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WONDER has been defined as the effect of novelty upon ignorance, but there would appear to be rational delight in novelty, especially in the presentation of something entirely new to the mind, something that arrests attention because it is strange, that holds intelligent attention until it is understood. A form of intellectual pleasure may be aroused in reaching an explanation of the unusual, or of the extraordinary, in a story, particularly when that story offers the mystery of a crime for solution. A low order of mind can hardly be that which enjoys making deductions from premises, or which becomes easily engaged in watching how an author reaches the intelligible essence of a difficult situation. On this very account, however, because the form of entertainment provided by a detective story depends upon its appeal to a combination of wonder and reason, there is peril in every step of its construction. That an author may not slip and fall down at some danger point in such a story, is not a bad idea for him to have his subject matter well in hand.

Strange as it may seem, the story of crime mystery is fast degenerating to one of stock properties. We know exactly what is going to happen when a sharp-visaged gentleman in a steamer cap appears on the scene armed with a pipe and a pocket lense. "Hist!" This inscrutable individual will detect a button, a finger imprint, a wisp of hair, a stray tooth, or a thread from the murderer's garment. It may even be discovered that the fatal bullet is of such peculiar design that it only fits the guilty man's pistol. A weapon may be found which belongs to the hero, one neatly engraved with his monogram, and when this marvel of creative ingenuity appears on the screen we are spared much agony of mind by advance realization of how the hero will escape. We know that the real criminal will accurately time his dying confession so as to spare the unjustly accused an ignominious execution by a hair's breadth.

One is at a loss to explain the fascination of mystery well concealed, if it is not to be ascribed to a form of intellectual pleasure. We know that the author is deliberately throwing us off the track at every stage of development, but we set our wits against his and resolve to guess the riddle before he tells us the answer. Magnificent human egotism is responsible for our studious attention. We settle upon a solution of our own and await confirmation with a degree of interest that rivals concentration upon a game of chess. Such is the case, at least, with minds not primitive.

That noble sense of superiority which dignifies each grown man as a god in his own estimation leads him to untangle a string for a child and, at the same time, demonstrate to his wife how easy it is to overcome difficulties when one has a preponderance of grey matter over osseous formation in the cranium. There is a suggestion here involved. If the writer of detective stories expects to demonstrate his superior ingenuity, it might not be a bad plan for him to disentangle rather than cut, his Gordian Knot. Far from being satisfactory to people of intelligence, the arbitrary determination of a difficult problem is apt to prove as mildly disappointing as the enthusiasm of an orator who forgets the point he intended to make. There exists an arduous necessity of reaching a well-grounded conclusion before launching Act I, Set 1, Scene 1 of the scenario.

Story visualization lends itself particularly to a form of clairvoyance which is rarely used, that of getting at the mental aspect of a suspect by close observation of seemingly unimportant details and by a process of reason which leads to discovery of the criminal. The guilty betray themselves unconsciously. The innocent may easily become confused under examination, or sullen, or indignant, but cold and brazen defiance is the weapon of guilt. Police officers learn the signs, though it must be admitted that they are not unfailing, and they acquire the habit of studying conduct for indictation of hidden motive. "She did this and she did that," ponders the detective, action easily visualized, incidentally revealing his methods of getting at motive. "Therefore," he reasons, and his conclusions can be shown. What a treat to view his spectacular induction!

Every man mentally out of his teens and able to discount his bills has been pleased by the flattering attentions of friends up to a certain point, then he is jarred with a sudden realization that so much kindness and consideration is rarely extended without an object in view. From that moment he becomes a detective on his own account as a measure of self-protection. Lacking woman's keen susceptibility to impression, that which occasionally enables her to get at the truth by intuition, man enjoys discerning motive through conduct, and on this account he is more deeply interested in the plot than woman—she is chiefly concerned about how it will turn out. To him the value of detective stories lies almost wholly in their ingenuity. Once ended, there is little or no after effect, no lasting impression made, no line of thought stimulated, no fine emotions aroused—a riddle has been answered, and that is all.

Inasmuch as there are many skilfully-constructed detective stories shown today on the screen, it would seem as though the inventive genius at work might advance beyond merely contriving a good plot, especially in those numerous cases where the frame-work of explanation is entirely too slight for the heavy ground-work of mystery. The intellectuality involved might strain a point to weave strong human interest into the narrative by swift characterization. Conventions and laws are the delight of essayists who dig them out of the past performances of successful writers, but authorship precedes criticism—it has the right of way and may set its own pace. In the face of all that has been said on the subject, there still remains no convincing reason for believing that the idea is of minor importance, that the plot is paramount. However skilfully it may be contrived, it is nothing more or less than a formulated scheme, usually of complicated incidents, an instrument to promote an object, one wholly at the author's service.

Audiences grow weary of the conventional—they are ever on the lookout for something new, something different from what has been steadily served to them, the latter including gross and stale exaggerations of melodrama. The author of independent viewpoint may avoid futile methods of expression by not depending wholly on ingenuity of plot in this or in any other form of story, by reaching out with his ideals and by using his depth of insight to portray character, so that when the play is over the audience may feel that it has glimpsed an interesting phase of life, even if that phase be made over in the crucible of creative imagination.

AS OTHERS SEE US

The Moving Picture World, Seeking to Serve Its Great Army of Readers Faithfully, Does Not Lack Appreciation — High Standards, Impartial and Reliable Reviews, Special Features of Usefulness to the Exhibitor, Wake a Grateful Chorus of Praise and Approval

THE test of a newspaper's value is the approval of its readers. Readers as well as advertisers pay for service; if they fail to get it they do not subscribe, neither do they advertise. The best and the most unmistakable approval is the prompt renewal of the subscription. Money talks. When a man pays for service and keeps on paying the presumption is strong that he is satisfied. The most concise, but by no means the least eloquent testimonial to the worth of the paper is the short and formal notice: "Please renew my subscription for another year." One does not have to be a master of logic or an expert in hermeneutics to draw the right sort of conclusion from such a communication. It means that the subscriber likes the paper and that it is of value to him on pretty nearly every day in the year. Judged by these renewals of subscriptions The Moving Picture World has as many friends as it has readers. They come unceasingly like flakes of snow in an Alpine storm or like the leaves of Vallombrosa. If they were translated into sound and interpreted as applause even the most conservative of critics could afford no less a word than "thunderous."

Now there are many, many readers of The Moving Picture World who are not satisfied with merely sending in the renewals of their subscription. So lively is their sense of appreciation that nothing less will gratify it than a letter of praise and approval. We gladly confess that this ever-increasing chorus of "well done," coming as it does from all parts of the country and from every branch of the industry, has been, and we hope, always will be a deep and precious source of inspiration to the management and to every member of the staff. Much as we prize every kind tribute we take special pride in the endorsement of the exhibitor. There are two reasons for this: One is the remembrance of the founder's policy. It was one of Mr. Chalmers' sayings that the "exhibitor was the man for whom the paper was made." The other reason is to be found in the style and manner of the exhibitors' endorsement. It is specific and discriminating. The exhibitor gives us the reasons why he likes the paper and tells wherein he finds it useful. There is nothing perfunctory about these appreciations. Ofttimes the word of praise is mixed with a little friendly advice for which, as our readers know of old, we are always particularly grateful.

If we were to attempt printing all this wholly unsolicited endorsement we would cumber the pages of The Moving Picture World and displace matter to which the exhibitor is entitled and for which he has a right to look. Indeed, we did not have to look very closely at the huge pile of these letters of the past few weeks only to feel that it was simply out of the question to print them all, even if we tried to scatter them over several issues. We have, therefore, taken only a few, and we feel justified in printing these, not merely because they attest the loyalty and affection of our readers, but because they give all our subscribers and advertisers a true and honest picture of the purpose and the mission of motion picture journalism. We think the letters of great value to advertisers who, by reading them carefully, may form an idea of the ability and intelligence of the clientele they address in their advertisements. In making a critical selection of the letters we wish to prove that The Moving Picture World stands every test of fair and honest journalism and that its gospel of service is more than mere verbiage. It is an aid to the newcomer as well as a faithful and constant guide to the oldtimer. IT IS READ FROM COVER TO COVER.

Its reviews of films, written by competent, practical and experienced men, are taken very seriously by the exhibitor, who depends on them for the composition of his program and his program is his daily bread and butter.

"NOW I DON'T MISS A PAGE."

A highly successful exhibitor who recently moved from Elmira, N. Y., to Pittsburgh, Pa., to take charge of larger interests, tells us "that he feels lost without The World" and then continues: "When I first subscribed all I looked at was the schedule of the pictures and next I got interested in the advertisements and now you have me right, I don't miss a page." To attract interest then to increase it and finally hold it altogether is one of the well-known acid-tests of journalism.

"FAIR AND FEARLESS."

An exhibitor in Northern Jersey writes: "The Moving Picture World is the most fearless and the fairest to its readers of all the trade papers of one kind or another that I have seen and I have seen a lot of them. Too many are run on the box office principle and it is a relief to find one that aims conscientiously to instruct and benefit its subscribers."

"WITHOUT PRICE."

Here is the opinion of an old subscriber in Wisconsin: "Please find enclosed check for the renewal of my subscription. I would not think of trying to get along without the M. P. W. Without any of its reviews of the pictures it is worth all the exhibitor pays for it, but with them, in their truth and fearlessness, uninfluenced by advertising it is without price in its help to the exhibitor."

"ONE FOR MY THEATER AND ONE FOR THE LIBRARY."

From a state in the Far West comes this letter: "Please find enclosed six dollars covering subscription for two copies of The Moving Picture World; one copy to be a continuation of our present subscription and the other to be sent to the public library, Great Falls, Montana. We have arranged to have this copy placed on the shelves of the local library for the reference of all who are interested in keeping in touch with the latest developments in motion pictures and particularly for the benefit of several of the local clubs which have evinced an especially keen interest in the productions we are showing in this theater. I find in The Moving Picture World one of the most valuable aids and would not think of attempting to run an up-to-date, high-class moving picture house without The World."

"APPRECIATED AND CLOSELY READ."

A well known service bureau in close touch with exhibiting work all through the West writes from Chicago: "We are enclosing our subscription and I want you to know how much The World is appreciated; also how closely it is read. The little notice concerning our work which you had in a recent number has brought us many letters from all over the country. The thing which impressed me most was the many varied sources from which came the letters."

AN OLD READER'S TRIBUTE.

A very busy exhibitor out in Mississippi contributes this praise in a nutshell: "I wish to compliment you on the way you are conducting your magazine. Through seven years I have had a chance to watch your paper and find it growing better with each issue."

"WHAT HE CONSIDERS THE BEST PART OF THE WORLD."

A well known Ohio firm of exhibitors write to say: "What I consider the best part of The World and the thing I look for first is 'Film Comments.' I never put on a picture and advertise it unless I first look up what your critics have to say about it and cut it out. If the subject is not a strong one I do not advertise it as such."

PLEASED WITH ANOTHER PART.

A prominent Cincinnati exhibitor says: "Your index stories of the films is the best and handiest thing possible for the live exhibitor, especially those getting out a weekly program with a short synopsis as we do."

FILM REVIEWS MOST VALUABLE.

This letter comes from Los Angeles: "Enclosed please find check for $3 renewal for 1915. Allow me to congratulate you on the trend of your film reviews. It is well to remember that a paper that prostitutes itself to its heavy advertisers is valueless to the exhibitor and as soon as the exhibitor recognizes this fact the paper is then valueless to the advertiser, but a paper that has the financial and moral backbone to condemn a poor film of its heaviest advertiser will be so supported by the exhibitors that the advertiser must make use of it. Then, too, the managers of to-day are somewhat of a different type of men than they were some years ago."

What a magnificent text for an honest talk on advertising; what a fine illustration of the modern exhibitor and his way of thinking. "Delicatessen for the mind."

KEEPS IN TOUCH WITH ALL THAT IS IN THIS GREAT INDUSTRY.

Here is a letter from a man who has charge of fourteen houses owned by a big amusement company in the South. He writes from Greensboro, N. C. This is what he says: "I find The World without doubt the greatest asset to me in my work. Without The World it would be impossible for me to keep in touch with all that IS in this great industry."

GUIDING THE STEPS OF THE BEGINNER.

Every avenue in motion picture life points toward the Moving Picture World as the one great representative journal of the industry. Hence new men entering the exhibiting ranks soon hear of its usefulness and hasten to become subscribers. Here is a characteristic tribute from a progressive exhibitor in Sacramento, Cal.: "Enclosed please find our check in payment of subscription. This is the biggest three dollars' worth we are receiving as we cannot begin to tell you what a help The World was to us in starting in the picture business."

THE WORLD MAINTAINS HIGH STANDARDS.

One note in this concert of praise recurs with striking frequency. Exhibitors unite in complimenting the paper on its high standards, which many times have resulted in the exclusion of objectionable films from the advertising columns. It is easy to preach clean methods and slap the editorial chest in gleeful pride at moral preachments, but it is quite another thing to carry conviction into the business department and practice what you preach. An exhibitor in a small city near Philadelphia writes: "Your paper is of untold value to us in the promotion of our motion picture entertainments and we wish to commend the high standard and excellent ideals that you hold up for both producer and exhibitor."

From Ohio comes this tribute: "We wish to congratulate your noble journal upon the advancement of this industry the credit of which we feel belongs largely to you. Keep up the good work you have started and especially in the fair and unbiased criticisms of the pictures, as they are a wonderful help to us. With best wishes we are, yours very truly, Wellman & McMahon, Gem theater, Ironton, O."

From Northern Canada we have this appreciation running much in the same vein as the other two: "Your publication is so valuable a work of reference that we consider it essential to our business to always have a complete file in our office. We have pleasure in expressing our highest praise for all you have done and are doing for the advancement of pictures. Sydney Amusement Company, Sydney, N. S."

A VERITABLE DELUGE OF KIND WORDS.

Gazing upon the pile of letters still before me I feel that taking off these few samples has made hardly any impression upon the great mass still before me. It is space-devouring work and I must be content with just a line or two from the big assortment beside my desk. "I enjoy your book, The Moving Picture World. It is splendid, especially the column allotted to the Photoplaywright. I could not get along without it.—A. A. Cavill, Syracuse.

"We congratulate you on the high quality of your magazine, which we could not do without."—T. M. Mackey, Great Falls, Mont.

"The writer might as well acknowledge with enthusiasm that he could not be without The Moving Picture World; it has everything that an exhibitor would like to know."—O. K. Holland, York, Ala.

"Your valuable journal, The Moving Picture World, is the greatest aid we have in our business. Accept our compliments on your efforts to supply the trade with all that is up to date in our great industry."—W. R. Fairman, Bryan, Tex.

"I wish to say that the journal is worth more than its weight in gold."—J. Rodney Good, Lancaster, Pa.

"Please renew my subscription to the best and most valuable trade paper published, The Moving Picture World. I would not be without it for twice the price."—Arthur Wyers, Bellefontaine, O.

"I find The World a great help to me in the picture business and could not be without it."—R. G. Markell, Ellis, Kan.

"I take pleasure in enclosing my check for renewal of my subscription to The Moving Picture World. As water is to the weary traveler of the desert so is the M. P. W. to the live exhibitor."—N. E. Chaney, Hillsboro, O.

"As a man turns to his 'three squares a day' and expects them, so do I turn to the ONLY (underscored in the original) weekly devoted to the industry."—Wm. Leyser, Buffalo.

Here is a tribute from across the sea. George H. Kenyon, proprietor of the Princess theater, Colwyn Bay, England, says: "We find your paper most interesting and helpful in many ways and one that every manager and operator should subscribe to who wishes to be up to date."

O. F. Langworthy of Sistersville, W. Va., writes: "We thank you for the great help your journal has been to the exhibitors in general and the writer in particular; we would just as soon think of trying to run without a machine as without The World."

"Enclosed find check for $3.00 for another year's subscription to the moving picture man's friend, The Moving Picture World. I am as thoroughly convinced as ever that this splendid periodical should be in every picture house in the world. Have seen many a single item that was well worth the price of the entire year's subscription. I don't want to miss a single issue."—C. W. Clabaugh, Pretty Prairie, Kan.

Almost all of this comes to us on exhibitors' stationery. All of it represents but a few weeks' selections and the reader is safe in accepting my word for the statement that if we went into printing appreciative letters as a regular department of the paper we would have to fill about a page every week.

WOULD SOONER PAY FOR THE WORLD THAN HAVE IMITATION FREE OF CHARGE.

This is what a well known theater manager in Philadelphia writes: "By an odd coincidence my subscription expires at the same time as a three months' free trial to another trade journal. I have no need for two, so the fact that you find check enclosed is all that need be said regarding their comparative value to me."

J. D. Ross, manager of the Variety theater, Canton, Ill., writes: "Kindly find enclosed check for $3.00 for which please send World for one year. Please send back numbers beginning with November, 1914, up to present time. I take two other motion picture publications, but find I cannot rely upon them like I can on The World."

Sam Landry of Norway, Me., writes: "It's impossible for me to get along without The Moving Picture World; there are many magazines published, but none compare with The World. I hope you will keep it up to its standard."

S. E. Wall, of Columbus, O., says: "Herewith enclosed find check for $3 renewal subscription for 'the Exhibitor's Bible.' It may interest you to know that we could not think of getting along without the 'Comments on the Films' as they are the most authentic advance information available."

THE REASON OF IT ALL.

We might go on with this ad infinitum, but why should we? It's as bootless to throw perfume on the violet as it was in the day of King John. The lesson we want to draw from all this vast cumulative proof of The Moving Picture World usefulness and superiority is plain enough. The Moving Picture World stands for service and for principle. It specializes in all the ramifications of the industry. It is the constant companion of the exhibitor, aiding him with practical suggestions, helping him to improve his projection, to balance his program, to advertise his show, to fight his enemies and to win public favor.

Nothing that pertains to motion pictures is strange to The Moving Picture World. It advocates the organization of exhibitors for mutual protection and profit. By insisting from its very birth on high ethical and artistic standards it has helped to gain a good reputation for the motion picture. It has from the beginning encouraged the educational picture. The Moving Picture World prints the news, but it will never be satisfied with merely printing the news. No motion picture journal that contents itself with just a record of what is happening in the industry will ever attain a high degree of usefulness to the exhibitor. The exhibitor needs service. The World's reviews and all its special features are based on the principle of service. Because this service is performed by experts it is intelligent and reliable. It is this policy of service which has given The Moving Picture World its unique standing among the trade journals of the world and it is this policy of service which has gained for The Moving Picture World a circulation easily surpassing that of all rival publications put together.

ROLFE BUYS DYREDA.

A very important deal in film circles was completed Thursday, May 27, when the Dyreda Art Film Company was purchased by the B. A. Rolfe organization. The Metro Film Corporation, through which Rolfe distributes its productions, owns a part of the Rolfe Company, and consequently the Metro is now directly interested in both the Rolfe and the former Dyreda organization. The Dyreda Company was organized by Frank L. Dyer, former head of the General Film Company; J. Searle Dawley, former producer for the Famous Players and with Edison before that, and J. Parker Reeds. The name was made up from the names of the three founders

Later new interests bought into the company and they leased the property at 61st street and Broadway, where they had one of the finest studios in the city, it being especially desirable because of the central position. This studio now passes into the hands of the Rolfe organization. C. M. Maddox, of the Rolfe Company, becoming general manager of the new organization.

CENTAUR ELECTS OFFICERS.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, N. J., held on May 22 in the company's offices, the following officers were elected: David Horsley, president; James Horsley, vice-president; Chester Beecroft, secretary; J. T. R. Proctor, treasurer; George J. Lounsberry, assistant treasurer.

The semi-annual report showed a remarkable advance in business transacted over the previous report. Three new inventions of David Horsley's viz the Double Exposure Camera, the Horsley step printer and the full reel duplex printer with automatic light shift were reported completed. The financial report showed that the assets of the Centaur Film Company had more than doubled within the year. Chester Beecroft was reappointed as general manager.

Berst Condemns Official Censorship.

General Manager of the Selig Polyscope Company Favors the Methods of the National Board—Talks of Selig's Plans.

FILMLAND'S authorities considered it "big news" when Mr. J. A. Berst became affiliated with the Selig Polyscope Company as vice-president and general manager. Students of the animated screen sat up and took notice. Immediately it was of general opinon that again Mr. William N. Selig had put one over in filmland and had engaged for his great business enterprise a man without a peer in knowledge of the motion picture world in all of its ramifications. It was the greatest compliment in the world to Mr. Berst that he was engaged by Mr. Selig to aid in guiding the destinies of the Selig Company and to lift some of the administrative burdens off the shoulders of Mr. Selig, who had uncomplainingly carried them for so long.

It was confidently expected that things would happen in startling succession with the advent of Mr. Berst. They remembered Mr. Berst's long and distinguished affiliations with motion picture enterprises; they recalled his great work with another motion picture manufacturing company; they distinctly remembered the Berst power wielded in the inner councils of the General Film Company at a time when wise counselship was an essentiality. They hastened to congratulate Mr. Selig on the acquisition of a powerful right arm.

It is not often that Mr. Berst talks for publication, but when asked to say something he revealed the subject that was receiving much of his attention—the question of censorship.

"I am in favor of motion picture censorship," said Mr. Berst, "but I am not in favor of unfair censorship. I do not believe in the state, county or municipal censorship which in all of its ramifications cannot but be unfair to the manufacturer and to the exhibitor. And it should be noted that it is the exhibitor who ultimately pays the cost of upkeep of all these various censor boards.

"The National Board of Censorship was formed in the correct way and I wish to add my testimony to the careful and proper methods that have been employed by the National Board. Selected with a personnel of enlightened men and women, serving without financial remuneration, their rulings, for the most part, have been consistent and beneficial."

J. A. Berst.

"Are you a supporter of the idea of a Board of Censorship selected by the National Congress?" was asked of Mr. Berst.

"I am not in favor of such a censorship body," was the emphatic reply. "One reason is that politics may enter the organization of such a body; another reason is that a Federal Board of Censorship would have little power over the states and that the State Censors would flourish as of yore and the situation would not be remedied in any detail.

"There is another angle to this censorship question that has not been seriously considered, to my mind. It is this: Certain manufacturers cry to high heaven against the rulings of the censors; they write essays, grant interviews, foster legislative opposition and then they turn right around and release an occasional motion picture that razes the structure of opposition that has been so carefully upbuilded. In other words, their theory and practice is dissimilar. Motion pictures fostering race prejudice, encouraging undue familiarity with the underworld, containing suggestive actions and scenes, these motion pictures ought to be censored!

"The way to combat unfair censorship, the method to foil politicians, the way to free the exhibitors and the public from unjust taxation, the manner in which to pave the way for an object lesson showing that censorship in many of its forms is useless and ridiculous, is to produce motion pictures which are free from doubtful detail. Until this is accomplished we will have a swarm of censors in cities, counties and states, most of them poorly equipped to perform most important duties.

"Mr. Selig and I have endeavored to release productions which cannot be criticised in any detail from a standpoint of censorship. That we are succeeding will be proven by the fact that the Selig releases contain a minimum of cut-outs in Chicago, the most difficult city in the world in which to please the powers, and also in Canada, where censorship is unusually strict.

"We are working night and day to make the Selig productions worthy. During the past few months such distinguished stars of the spoken drama as Tyrone Power, Harry Mestayer, Otis Harlan and others have been added to our companies of artists. Such well known directors as T. N. Heffron, Colin Campbell, Marshal Neilan and others are working on meritorious productions and, other than these, many versatile actors and actresses have been engaged to make the Selig plays worthy.

"We have engaged the services of the best writers, in fact the Selig Company claims a 'corner in authors.' Such writers as Anna Katherine Green, Meredith Nicholson, Louis Joseph Vance, Edward E. Rose, Rex Beach, Robert Hitchens, Mary Roberts Rinehart, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Gilson Willets, and others, are contributing to the worthiness of our stories.

"We are also devoting careful attention to our releases in three, two and one reels, and we are not sacrificing the general excellence of these productions in any way, shape or form.

"The new Selig Diamond Specials in three reels at present have all my attention. The exhibitors are certainly getting unusual value in these productions. Originally planned as features, we thought that the merit of these Diamond Specials would prove to the exhibitors that our regular program is being consistently upheld. 'Pals in Blue' and 'The Quarry,' Selig Diamond Specials, were recently shown in our projection room to exhibitors, and they were very kind, indeed, with their compliments.

"The favor with which our Red Seal Plays are being received is indeed gratifying and supports us in our theory that if time, care, thought and expense are all crowded into a production, that the action will be appreciated. 'The Carpet from Bagdad' immediately became popular and prints cannot be issued fast enough to supply the demand. 'The Millionaire Baby' is a strong six-reel drama, released May 31st, and is a great big production handled in a great big way. 'The Rosary,' a wonderful picture directed by Mr. Colin Campbell, and 'A Texas Steer,' featuring Mr. Tyrone Power, and a great number of other Red Seal Plays, are to be released one every month. We have directors who have made a specialty of dramatic subjects, and from our many players it is always possible to select suitable types."

Aldermen Flout Court of Appeals

Yonkers "Statesmen" in a Second Desperate Attempt to Close Motion Picture Theaters on Sundays.

THE Common Council of Yonkers, New York, gave a public hearing on Tuesday, June 1, on an ordinance introduced to close the motion picture theaters on Sunday. The ordinance is intended to circumvent the decision of the Court of Appeals which only a short time ago held practically the same ordinance unconstitutional.

The exhibitors of Yonkers, a most intelligent and progressive body of men, were present at the hearing almost to a man. Their side of the argument was presented by John J. Finn, the attorney who had guided them through all the previous litigation; Lee A. Ochs, the president of the New York State organization; George Martin, an exhibitor of Yonkers and New York, and W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World. Mr. Finn thoroughly covered the legal aspects of the case, making it plain that the new ordinance which confined all motion picture licenses to six-day permits would most surely be knocked out in the courts. He said the language of the courts was unmistakable, and then attacked the logic and the motives of the Mayor who was behind this new ordinance. He denied that there was any real public sentiment behind the new measure, pointing to the fact that motion picture theaters were patronized by no less than 15,000 people on Sundays in the city of Yonkers. Mr. Ochs urged the aldermen to consult their legal adviser before flying in the face of the courts of the State. He pointed to New York as an example of orderly and decent Sunday opening. Mr. Martin made a short but very able address showing what great good the motion pictures did on Sundays as well as on week days, and giving interesting incidents that came within his own experience as an exhibitor. W. Stephen Bush declared that the Common Council of Jamestown, N. Y., had intended to pass a Sunday closing ordinance, but had abandoned the idea after consulting the corporation counsel. He called attention to the fact that the Sunday exhibition in all the cities where he had been had never led to the slightest disturbance of the peaceful character of the day.

"In every city where the motion picture theaters are closed," said Mr. Bush, "we see disconsolate and sad-looking groups of men standing on the corners either staring into vacancy or staring at passersby and annoying respectable women. I feel sorry for these men. It's Sunday and they have no place to go. For some reason the churches do not seem to attract them. Their pastors are probably too busy opposing Sunday shows to give these men any attention. If these poor idlers and loungers had a motion picture theater to go to they might after a while learn something and become useful to themselves and to the community. They are not all idlers by any means. Many of them are men who work hard all week and who are condemned by the Puritan blue laws to mope away the one day in the week that might be used to entertain and instruct them. In cities where the motion picture theaters are allowed to open these knots of unhappy men holding down the street corners are not to be seen. Exhibitors in Yonkers conduct a clean wholesome show and no sane man can understand why they should be stopped on Sunday. Aside from all the legal points I believe that Sunday exhibitions with the right sort of programs are a benefit and a blessing to every community."

At this one of the reverend reformers arose and wanted Mr. Bush to declare himself as the paid agent of the moving picture men. Mr. Bush replied that he had not asked or received any pay and that it was characteristic of reformers to impugn the motives of men who did not agree with them.

Rev. Mr. J. Mayhew then led the array of ministers opposed to Sunday opening. "We admit all that Mr. Bush claims for the educative value of the films," he said. "We deny, too, that we want a Puritan Sabbath. Our protest is against the commercialization of the Sabbath. This is the thin end of the wedge. If you give the motion picture men permission to open on Sunday every other business will open too." Two other ministers also spoke in favor of the ordinance.

There was no discussion by the board, and the ordinance received a majority of the votes.

It is expected that the exhibitors will immediately apply for an injunction against the city authorities. Mr. Finn, the attorney of the exhibitors, has no doubt as to the defeat of the ordinance. The theaters will no doubt remain open on Sundays after an injunction is granted.

Edward C. Taylor

EDWARD C. TAYLOR, whose success in technical screencraft has been one of the causes of a most marked advance in the Edison production, gained his years of apprenticeship unknowingly in travel and adventure in this country and in England, France, Canada and Mexico. With a receptive imagination and a retentive memory, Mr. Taylor, in his twenty-four years, has gained a broad equipment for creative work, and his keen insight affords a knowledge that finds a most effective expression through his present post—Stage Managership.

Edward C. Taylor

Born on July 19, 1890, at De Soto, Wisconsin, he served his preparatory term at Winthrop, Mass., and then studied art in both England and France, also under the famous artist, Robert Henri. It was while he was writing and illustrating his copy for a publishing firm in Boston, Mass., that he heard in the click of the camera a call that he answered with striking results. Soon after his advent in filmdom with the Florida companies of Lubin and Kalem, where he acquired his initial knowledge inside the camera lines, he developed such a decided talent for set perfection that he attracted the favorable attention of Director Richard Ridgely, then stationed with an Edison company in Jacksonville, with whom he advanced in the span of a few months from assistant director to road manager and technical director, in which capacity he brought the company back from Florida. Later he climbed the studio ladder, becoming casting director. Later he was appointed stage manager. Every step in Mr. Taylor's career has been identified with a studied progressiveness that can obtain only in a nature that is at once adaptable and productive.

Mr. Taylor can base his claim to stage managership on his unique skill of blending a commercial discernment with an artistic sense. Capitalizing a traveled experience, he calls upon a boundless imagination, and the result is an effect that is fast making a unique impression in filmland.

IRWIN AND SEELYE ON THE ROAD.

This week, General Manager Walter W. Irwin, of the V-L-S-E, and Assistant General Manager C. R. Seelye, will leave New York to look over the New England territory. It is the intention of Mr. Irwin to confer with C. H. Webster, Boston branch manager, in regard to the situation in Boston proper, while Mr. Seelye will assist in the perfection of the service and sales organization and then continue over much of the northeast territory on a visit to many of the most prominent exhibitors.

"While our Boston branch has been but recently opened, and not yet fully organized, its business has been really remarkable," said Mr. Irwin, "and with only five features actually working, and these not yet in full swing, the records show an amount of business that is exceedingly gratifying. We are carefully selecting the men to represent us in the field, and as this requires time, we have at present, comparatively few men on the road; and when this is considered, the volume of booking on our features is phenomenal."

"The service department we are organizing will give to exhibitors the greatest possible cooperation, and when in proper working order, with a full complement of competent representatives in the field, a new era in picture play exhibition will be in full bloom."

"We are gathering together men that are the flower of the industry, and the principal quality that we look for in our representatives is not merely a knowledge of films, but the ability to intelligently discuss local conditions with each exhibitor and advise him of the best means to obtain the greatest financial benefit through the exhibition of our features."

Author of "The Broken Coin"

Universal's New Serial Written by Emerson Hough, Who Has Given Much to Literature.

THE date of the start of the Universal's next serial, "The Broken Coin," is now rapidly approaching, and though interest in "The Black Box," now current, which is at fever heat, as is natural with the climax of any story, the public is very curious to know all about the new story. The public already knows that it will open on June 21st and that Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will be featured in the production. They know, too, that Mr. Ford will direct the production and that the story was suggested by Miss Cunard.

Emerson Hough.

There is another factor, however, which is one of the most important in any serial, and that is the name and fame of the man who is going to write the newspaper story for the syndicate. The Universal has been very fortunate in the selection of all the men who have written its former serials. Such names as Louis Joseph Vance, John Fleming Wilson and E. Phillips Oppenheim, are as mighty in the literary world as are those of Ford and Cunard in the motion picture world. Now comes the announcement that "The Broken Coin" will be written by Emerson Hough.

Through his writings there is no American writer who is better known at the present time. His magazine stories in the monthlies and weeklies have made him a lasting and widely known name in themselves, to say nothing of his novels. Some of the most successful of these latter are "The Mississippi Bubble," "54-40 or Fight," "Heart's Desire," "The Way of the West," and "Curley" and the "Willy Lou" stories.

Like every player who enters the pictures, every great author is also an object of interested curiosity to the millions of moving picture enthusiasts who will see the story on the screen and read it in the hundreds of newspapers which run the serial in the syndicate. The Western Newspaper Union will syndicate the story which Emerson Hough writes for "The Broken Coin," and as he is one of the most interesting figures in American letters to-day, though one of the most retiring, these facts about his work, his aims and personality, will be very interesting to the millions of people who have been admirers and who will read his first moving picture story.

In the first place the name Hough is pronounced as though it were spelled Huff. He comes of a proud Virginia family, and his father settled in the little town of Newton, Iowa, when the West was young. His father was a giant in stature and strength and was one of the most trustful and God-fearing of men. It was a great hardship to send the son to the State University of Iowa, but he did it and also prepared him for the law, which was his ambition for his son. He had an absolute abhorrence of writing for which the boy had a secret ambition, and inherited a taste. A struggle of many years ensued between the author's desire to please his father and get into a remunerative business and his desire to gratify the ambition to write which was burning within his breast. This combat naturally did not lead to an early success in either direction, but it gave Emerson Hough a world of information in directions and in life which it would be impossible for him to acquire any other way.

His acquaintance with the life and hunting of big game is one of the most extensive and thorough of any man in this country, and he is one of America's best known authorities on the subject. There are sections of the country and stratas of society about which he has a knowledge at first hand possessed by very few men.

In connection with his hunting it may be of interest to know that Emerson Hough was the first man to take moving pictures of certain parts of Alaska, namely that portion of the province north of the Fort Smith and Great Slave River Portage. In the year 1913 a party, of which Mr. Emerson Hough was one, took the first moving pictures ever made under the midnight sun in that portion of the world. Mr. Hough's experience in this trip was undertaken simply in the interest of sport and adventure, and not for commercial profit, although certain of the magazines have printed some of his stories regarding that little known country. Product of his own camera, he brought back some 350 negatives, practically all of them excellent, and said to be the best amateur collection of pictures ever taken in the north. It was his fortunate experience to photograph the midnight sun, not once, but many times, and his amateur negatives of the midnight sun are very interesting indeed.

When the writing of "The Broken Coin" was broached to Mr. Hough, the picturesqueness of the local and the romantic atmosphere of the whole story were the factors which appealed to him most. The antique and the picturesque are hobbies with him. In his home you will not, for instance, find any example of modern furniture whatever. Long ago Mr. Hough became interested in antique furniture and objects of art. He always said that the Colonial time of America was the one simple and dignified era of our national life, and that had he been consulted about the matter, he would rather have been born a generation ago than in the present one. Therefore, he has sought to make amends by going back to earlier generations for the articles which he has kept about him in his daily life.

"Silent Bill" Haddock

WILLIAM F. HADDOCK is one of the very first men who ever directed a moving picture, beginning way back in the early days of the Edison Company. He is popularly known as "Silent Bill" and was born in Portsmouth, N. H., sometime between the close of the Civil War and the breaking out of the Spanish-American War. He was raised in Boston, and got his schooling there, including a course in Burdette College. While at college he was well up in athletics, principally in football and running. How he came by the nickname of "Silent Bill" has not been explained, but he must have received it in a boiler factory through his inability to make the men hear him talk while at work. As a moving picture director he needs no megaphone.

William F. Haddock.

His first professional appearance as an actor was at the Castle Square theater in Boston in the old stock company with which he played two years. His experience there enabled him to learn his profession and become a full-fledged actor. He started out with road companies playing juvenile parts and for a number of seasons was the leading juvenile with "The Man from Mexico," "Sign of the Cross," "Lover's Lane," and "Alice of Old Vincennes." It was while playing in a vaudeville sketch at the Colonial theater, New York, that Mr. Haddock was asked to take a company of actors south for Edison.

Mr. Haddock was two years with the Edison Company, after which he joined Gaston Melies. He later became identified with the Eclair Company for a number of years. Since the feature productions came into vogue he has not confined himself to any particular company. He has been producing pictures at a contract price for various large manufacturers. For the All-Star Company he produced "Paid in Full," a dramatization of Eugene Walter's stage play. For the Life-Photo Film Corporation he produced "The Banker's Daughter" which has had a very large sale in Europe and America. At the present time he is directing for the Gotham Film Company.

For the past three years Mr. Haddock has been president of the Actor's Society of America. He is also a member of the Masons, the Elks, the Odd Fellows, the Screen Club and a number of other organizations.

Instruction by Motion Pictures

Method Followed by the Pennsylvania Railroad to Teach Use of Apparatus and to Examine Engineers in Signal System.

By C. L. Harrod, of the Signal Department.

THE Pittsburgh Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, at the suggestion and under the direction of the writer, has, since October 1st last equipped an experimental instruction car to show the operation of signal apparatus by the use of motion pictures and slides.

The motion picture has been used very extensively to show safety methods, in safety first campaigns, but has not been recognized universally as a factor in the instruction of technical subjects. As an entertainment proposition the motion picture has had a phenomenal rise and it is the opinion of the writer that, once the value of the motion picture is recognized along educational lines, its application will be found to be without limit.

In addition to instruction on signals the making of motion pictures for other departments has been contemplated. It is the idea to show methods of construction and maintenance which will be of particular value where foreign labor is employed. To examine engineers, on signals, by showing them a motion picture taken from the front of a train, over the road with which they are familiar, seems the most logical method available. The time element involved in the quickness of decision can be obtained as well as the accuracy of vision, together with his knowledge of what aspect he would expect to receive on arriving at the next signal.

In order to acquaint the men with all types of apparatus and to show their operation, the motion picture offers an ideal solution. To have the actual apparatus for instruction purposes is not only expensive but would require a permanent location. The motion picture car can be taken to various districts and not only show apparatus that is now considered standard but obsolete types as well. The film can also be kept as records which would be available at any time.

It is possible by this method to reproduce on the screen all types of apparatus in use, showing the various consecutive functions necessary to obtain a certain end. As an illustration, the semi-automatic home signal has, in part, been pictured on the screen with the following titles.

(1) Home signal in stop position.
(2) Operator reverses signal lever.
(3) Signal control circuit completed through circuit closer by movement of lever.
(4) Train passes under signal.
(5) Block indicator opens, signal control circuit through indicator is broken.
(6) Signal returns to stop position.
(7) Signal lever returned to normal position.
(8) Block indicator picks up.
(9) Home signal remains in stop position.

With the above motion picture, the cycle is completed on the screen in approximately two minutes, and in such a way that the operation is readily understood by the student. In connection with such a picture story, the analysis of a circuit plan is at once seen to be related to such operating conditions as make it necessary.

In the same way all operations can be filmed to show their relation to one another. The apparatus can be taken to show the movement of each part in detail and, in this respect the following subjects have been made to reproduce the apparatus in motion at close range.

(1) Type T^2 D. C. low voltage mechanism, showing the operation of the slot and circuit closers.
(2) Mechanical switch movement, showing the operation of the detector bar in connection with the plunger lock.
(3) Electro pneumatic switch movement.
(4) Polyphase relay.
(5) Galvanometer relay.
(6) Direct current polarized relay.

In connection with construction methods, several pictures have been made to illustrate the right and wrong way of handling tools, making adjustments, and to show good arrangement of apparatus as compared with poor arrangements.

To illustrate the right and wrong ways of removing insulation from wire, by a practical demonstration, a motion picture was made with the following titles:

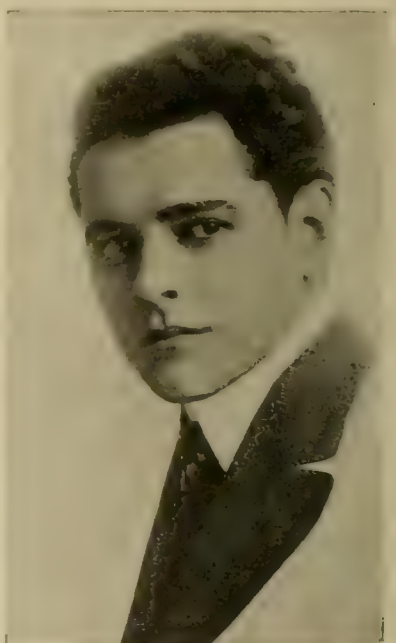
(1) The Wrong Way—Insulation is wrongly removed by cutting perpendicular to the wire, leaving a square cut in the insulation.
(2) The Right Way—Insulation is correctly removed by drawing the knife to cut a taper of approximately 60 degrees.

The car equipped to show the motion pictures was formerly a passenger car, having an inside length of 44 feet. The screen is mounted on a spring roller and is 7x7 feet, allowing the size of the projected picture to be 5x6 feet. The machine is mounted on a platform 18 inches above the floor, allowing the pictures to be projected over the heads of a seated audience. The screen and machine are portable and so arranged as to be readily removed from the car and set up in any room or hall where electric power is available. The machine is interchangeable to show either slides or motion pictures and uses a standard size film.

The car is equipped with folding chairs, and has a seating capacity of forty persons.

Webster Campbell

WEBSTER CAMPBELL, the versatile young leading man of the American Beauty Company, has been the author of several Mutual plays. He was born in Kansas City in January, 1891, and says he remembers how white and cold the night was and how the wind howled. Such a vivid memory as that should be allowed to speak for itself. Mr. Campbell continues:



Webster Campbell.

"It is seventeen years later. I have graduated from high school in Kansas City, and have developed a propensity for lights, bright lights, footlights, limelights. I go to college, to the University of Michigan, to Ann Arbor. I don't like higher mathematics, or Greek, or Latin; I am very fond of English, and history, and beer, and Detroit (seventy-five cents away).

"Three years now elapse. I wouldn't study. They let me go without notice. 'Good bye, Ann Arbor.' I go to a smaller university, my own state university, Missouri. Hundred dollar bills are lucky for some people, not for me. I produce a musical comedy called 'Hundred Dollar Bill.' It makes a hit. The college boys like it, not because it is staged and lighted beautifully, not because it is better acted and sung than 101 per cent of amateur college plays, but because the chorus girls (composed of the fairest of fair co-eds) are scantily costumed. For the same reason I am summoned to the president's office. He thinks that the academic spirit of the campus will be far more academic if I will hie myself away.

"I join a stock company in the Middle West. My first professional appearance is as Jed Woodsis in George M. Cohan's 'Fifty Miles from Boston,' and later I drift into picture work on the Pacific Coast."

LAST CALL FOR READING.

The Pennsylvania Convention Promises to Be a Record-Breaker—An Ambitious Program Arranged by the Indefatigable Ben Zerr—Reading Is Ready for the Film Men.

UNLESS all indications fail, June 7, 8 and 9 will be red-letter days in the history of Pennsylvania filmworld. The three days mentioned are the days of the State convention of the Pennsylvania organization at Reading. The convention which will be held in the Auditorium will receive all the hospitality for which Reading is justly famous. Among the well-known players coming are Mary Charleson, Lillie Leslie, Rosetta Brice, Eleanor Barry, Florence Williams, Justina Huff, Ruth Bryan, Frankie Mann, Patsy DeForest, George Soule Spencer, Josephine Longworth, James Daly, Percy Winter, Bernard Siegel, Peter Lang, George S. Trimble, James Cassady, Walter Law, William Cahill, Clarence Elmer, Kempton Greene, Francis Joyner, Jack Standing, Alan Quinn, Douglas Sibole and Octavia Handworth.

A number of the Lubin officials, as well as some of the directors and players, will attend the convention proper and the banquet.

While the convention is being held in Reading one of the Lubin companies will also be there making exteriors for forthcoming photoplays, utilizing the picturesque scenery in and around Reading.

The special children's performances to be held each afternoon during the three convention days will be very interesting. One of the boys will imitate Charles Chaplin and the other Ford Sterling. These affairs will take place at Rajah Temple, on the second floor.

The first floor of Rajah Temple will be devoted to an exhibit. This will not include the industry accessories alone, but a number of local firms have engaged booths.

The ball will give the Reading public a lifetime opportunity to view some of the most gorgeous gowns ever worn at any social function.

G. Harel Gundry has been selected as master of ceremonies. He will have charge of the dancing contests for the visiting players and the out-of-town exhibitors. Among the trophies will be the valuable silver cup donated by the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Silver cups for the ball have been donated by the Reading Eagle and News-Times. The Reading local will also give a prize.

Another silver cup has been secured from Peter Klein, manager of the Berkshire Hotel, for the out-of-town local having the largest representation of exhibitors.

One of the unique features of the convention will be the producing of a two-reel drama by the Pyramid Players of the United Film Service. This photoplay will be directed by the writer, Edwin August, who also will appear in the scenes. He will be supported by Ruth Blair, Iva Shepherd and Bill Bailey.

CINEMA CLUB MEETING.

Bronx Exhibitors' Organization Holds Large Gathering at Model Theater—Wants Children's Law Changed.

THERE was a regular meeting of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Bronx at the Model theater, Freeman street, on the night of Tuesday, May 25, at which forty-five exhibitors were present. As has long been known to readers of the Moving Picture World, the Cinema Club, as the organization is best known, has long dominated the trade in the Bronx. Of the fifty-two theaters in the Bronx the majority are enrolled as members of the Cinema Club. That the members are in hearty accord with their offices was shown by the unanimous vote of confidence passed upon the motion of A. Bauerenfreund.

The officers of the organization are John H. Wittman, president; Mr. J. Coleman, vice-president; Mr. Pollak, treasurer, and Mr. Allen, secretary.

The question of better laws regulating the attendance of children was discussed at some length. Other matters concerning the trade came up for consideration.

TO REORGANIZE CINCINNATI LOCAL.

Plans for the complete reorganization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cincinnati, on a basis which is expected to bring into the League virtually every exhibitor in and around the city, are well under way, with every prospect of meeting with complete success. The reorganization arrangement has been perfected by what might be called a non-partisan committee, consisting of Messrs. John Weinig as chairman, H. G. Kruse, William Howard, A. L. Emmert, Charles Weigel and A. G. Hettesheimer, this committee being about equally divided between "insiders" in the League as now organized, and "outsiders" who felt that their interests were outside of the organization. This committee, which was formed some weeks ago, largely through the instrumentality of Messrs. Miller & Foster, legal representatives of the League, succeeded in devising a constitution for the organization which struck all interests as being entirely satisfactory, and general expressions to this effect were heard at a meeting of representative exhibitors, including many not now in the League, recently held at one of the hotels. With assurances of support from all quarters, work is now going on with a view to a complete reorganization, and those who are fully familiar with the extent to which the exhibitors seem willing to get together declare that from 75 to 90 per cent. of local exhibitors will be represented. The reorganized League will make no attempt to dictate to its members on matters of individual policy, but will confine itself to things concerning the general welfare only; and it was by reason of a clearly-indicated intention to this effect that the reorganization plan was so generally approved. This being the case, it is not anticipated that the several organizations which have been formed recently for the purpose of assisting their members in getting better feature service, and for like purposes, will find any conflict between their purposes and those of the League.

SANDAHL VISITS WORLD OFFICE.

A. A. Sandahl, of Great Falls, Mont., paid a visit to the office of the Moving Picture World Wednesday, June 2. Mr. Sandahl has taken a 12-year lease on a 1,170-seat theater in Great Falls, and will open it as a high-class moving picture house in a week. About a year and a half ago the theater was devoted to vaudeville, but as this form of amusement did not take with the public it closed shortly after it was opened. It remained "dark" until Mr. Sandahl leased it, and it is now being renovated for a picture theater. Mr. Sandahl says that he will show only first-run subjects, and that the program will be changed every day. He has made a faithful study of the picture business and is prepared to give his patrons an entertaining and diversified show. A. M. Sandahl, his son, will be in charge of the house. The place will be fitted with up-to-date equipment including Baird projection machines and a Fort Wayne Compensarc. While in New York City, Mr. Sandahl completed negotiations for the Montana agency of Baird machines, and renewed his subscription to the Moving Picture World, without which he says it would be absolutely impossible for him to get along.

HOW TO GET FLORENCE LA BADIE'S PHOTO.

As there are many requests for the photograph and autograph of the Thanhouser player, Miss Florence LaBadie, that young lady requests all who wish such a memento of her to send postage. Miss LaBadie does not sell her photos, but she is willing to send her autograph portrait upon request and at her discretion and convenience, provided that postage is enclosed. She does not say how much, but send enough. Her address is Thanhouser Studios, New Rochelle, N. Y.

American Pictures For Canada.

Many Will Be Released Direct to Canadian Exchanges and Not by Mutual.

THE American Film Manufacturing Company, producers of the famous "Flying A" dramas, American "Beauty" films and American Master Pictures, offers Canadian exchanges opportunities to obtain exclusive provincial rights to the releases above mentioned.

Beginning with the releases of June 14 and thereafter, these regular American releases will not be distributed in Canada by the Mutual Film Corporation, as has been the custom for some time past. The Mutual, however, will continue to distribute "The Diamond from the Sky," the American's continued photoplay, and any other special material for which the Mutual may contract.

The regular American releases affected by this announcement are as follows:

2-reel "Flying A" drama every Monday.
1-reel American "Beauty" every Tuesday.
1-reel "Flying A" drama every Wednesday.
1-reel "Flying A" drama every fourth Friday.

American Master Pictures, as announced in trade press after June 14th.

Application for territorial rights in Canada on these regular releases should be made to the American Film Manufacturing Company, 6225 Broadway, Chicago, Illinois. John R. Freuler, first vice-president of the Mutual Film Corporation, explained the new arrangement:

"It must be borne in mind," Mr. Freuler asserted, "that the Mutual Film Corporation will continue to distribute 'The Diamond from the Sky,' produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company. Also, the Mutual will contract for special productions and distribute them as heretofore. The Mutual exchanges in Canada will continue operations, distributing the vast amount of valuable stock on hand. The change affects only the regular American releases and American Master Pictures subsequent to June 14."

Some Notable Subjects

Seven Screen Stars and Two Stage Favorites in V-L-S-E June Releases.

An analysis of the features scheduled for release during the month of June on the V-L-S-E program shows the same even balance and variety of subjects that characterized the April and May releases, and, in addition to seven of the screen's most popular stars, Viola Allen and Rose Coghlan, the distinguished stars of the speaking stage, will be seen in the leading roles.

The first release of the month is Lubin's "The Sporting Duchess," with Rose Coghlan, Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer in the principal roles.

For the week of June 14 the Vitagraph's "The Sins of the Mothers" introduces Earle Williams, Anita Stewart, Paul Scardon and Julia Swayne Gordon. This production is from the winning script in the Vitagraph-Evening Sun $1,000 prize contest. It was produced under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Essanay's "The White Sister," with Viola Allen, the world-famous star, in the leading role, a portrayal she made famous on the stage, is scheduled for the week of June 23.

"The Rosary," Selig's five-part production, released the last week in the month, is from Edward E. Rose's soul-stirring drama of the same name, and features Miss Kathlyn Williams.

METRO AT READING.

In addition to the magnificent sterling silver cup which the Metro Picture Corporation presented to the Reading Convention Committee, seven important Metro stars will attend at state gathering at Reading during the three days beginning Monday, June 7. Emily Stevens, Irene Warfield, Orrin Johnson, Jane Grey, Valli Valli, Lois Meredith and Florence Reed will be in attendance at the Metro booth at different periods.

Handsome souvenir photographs of Francis X. Bushman will be distributed at the exhibition rooms to visitors. Mr. Bushman autographed over twelve hundred of these, and they are being shipped this week to the committee.

The silver cup donated by Metro stands thirty-four inches high and is engraved with the signatures of the various permanent Metro stars. It will be given to the visiting exhibitor participating in the most events. The value of the cup is said to be two hundred dollars.

The cut and the souvenirs have been on display in the windows of the leading shoe store at Reading for several weeks. Harry Reichenbach will represent Metro during the convention.

Zukor Leaves For Los Angeles

President of Famous Players Will Remain at Coast for a Month with Important Purpose.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous players Film Co., left Saturday, May 29, for the Coast studios of his company, accompanied by Mrs. Zukor and his son and daughter, Eugene J. and Mildred Zukor. It is said that Mr. Zukor's object for the trip is a very important one, and the fact that he contemplates remaining at Los Angeles for about a month lends an added significance.

Mr. Zukor's purpose is to purchase a large tract of ground in or about Los Angeles for the erection of three separate studios. The Famous Players Film Co. has maintained a studio on the Pacific Coast for the past year, where most of the recent Mary Pickford subjects were produced. The satisfactory photographic and scenic results obtained by the western company, it is inferred, have now encouraged the Famous Players to expand their producing activities in Los Angeles.

Under the management of Albert A. Kaufman, who has been acting as western manager since the Famous Players invaded Los Angeles, the studio resources of this company have steadily accumulated to such an extent that but for the physical space required, the Famous Players' western organization is now fully equipped with lights and incidental paraphernalia to occupy two or more studios. It is to obtain the ground whereby to fill this need that caused Mr. Zukor to undertake this trip.

It is possible that in the future several other companies will be sent to the coast, and the original plans for the western productions are now being magnified to take in the added possibilities that will thus be supplied.

Albert B. Ladick

THAT ENGLAND, despite war conditions, is still a strong film exhibiting country, is evidenced by the buying activities of Albert B. Ladick, American representative of the American Film Releases, of which organization Richard S. Edmondson is proprietor.

Albert B. Ladick.

From his office, Suite 1005, No. 220 West 42d street, N. Y. City, Mr. Ladick has recently plunged on American features of merit. Among his recent purchases were: "The Three of Us," a Rolfe feature; "A Daughter of the People," by Dyreda Film Co.; "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," by the Masterpiece Film Co.; Salisbury's American Wild Animal Pictures and California M. P. Co.'s "Mignon." All of the feature products of the Life Photo Film Corporation and the Conness-Till Film Co., of Toronto, are handled by Mr. Edmondson abroad.

Ladick says that he is in the market for high-class dramas of four and five-reel length, Broadway successes and adaptations of famous books being particularly desirable.

Edmondson is a widely known figure in European circles and has exploited some of the biggest productions with highly remunerative returns.

Though an Englishman by birth, he began his film career in California. His plant there was wiped out by the San Francisco fire in 1906. With what remained of his capital he invested in a motion picture theater, after which he embarked as a manufacturer, filming the Nelson-Wolgast contest. On the profits of this he formed the Great Western Film Co. of California. Edmondson was also interested in the films of the Johnson-Jeffries contest in Nevada in 1910.

The Main continental offices are at No. 118 Shaftesbury avenue, London, where Mr. Graham Edwards is in general charge under Mr. Edmondson.

Another Picture Recruit

Hazel Dawn Abandons Stage Permanently to Appear Exclusively in Famous Players' Productions!

THE camera has made another successful invasion of the legitimate stage! Moreover, this latest conquest of the screen is of a permanent nature, and provides the silent drama with a lasting acquisition of rare artistic and general importance. This most recent coup of the screen in general and the Famous Players Film Co. in particular is Hazel Dawn.

Hazel Dawn.

Closely following the announcement that the Famous Players had secured the exclusive motion picture services of Pauline Frederick for a number of years comes a statement from that company that it has induced Miss Dawn, who made her screen debut under its management, to abandon the stage permanently and devote all her time to the production of an elaborate series of features under its direction.

Hazel Dawn attained popular prominence as one of the foremost of the younger stars of the American stage through her charming impersonation of "The Pink Lady," her world-famous triumph, and more recently completed a successful tour in "The Debutante." After her first film characterization, as "One of Our Girls," she attracted such wide popularity that the Famous Players at once re-engaged her for a second screen appearance, the phenomenally successful results of which have now impelled this concern to place her under exclusive contract.

A number of important dramatic and literary successes are being secured by the Famous Players as screen vehicles for Miss Dawn, notable among which are "The Fatal Card," in which she will co-star with John Mason, "Clarissa," based on Ronald MacDonald's strange story, "Gambier's Advocate," and "The Dainty Boss," a unique comedy-drama appropriately suited to the capabilities of the star.

METRO HAS DENVER OFFICE.

The sole remaining territory of the United States, as yet uncovered by the Metro Pictures Corporation, is now being opened by that concern with offices located in Denver. Arrangements for the opening of the offices is now going forward under the direction of Harry J. Cohen.

Perhaps the most novel method of opening an exchange is the method assumed by the Metro Company for the opening of their Denver branch. Mr. Cohen arrived in Denver this week, taking with him prints of all the Metro releases to date and invitations have been sent to exhibitors throughout Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Nevada to attend one of the first-class houses in Denver, which has been leased by Metro for the week and continuous performances will be given from 10 a. m. until 9 p. m., during which time the Metro productions will be shown.

The Denver office will be opened within the forthcoming week and some local man of experience and acquaintance in the territory will be put in charge of the office when arrangements have all been completed.

THE SELIG MONTHLY HERALD.

William Lord Wright sends to us a copy of the new Selig Poliscope publication, "Selig Monthly Herald." It is attractive looking and a good advertisement for the Selig product, being a formal house organ dealing especially with descriptive matter relating to the coming releases of that brand in the same way that the loose leaflets heralding Selig pictures of the past. Beside the synopsis of the pictures, there is in this issue an editorial invitation to visit the Selig plant in California and also a program of releases for quick reference. On the cover is a large and pleasing likeness of Harry Mestayer, the Selig player.

BIOGRAPH COMPANIES COMING HOME.

After a sojourn of six months at their Los Angeles studios, the Biograph producing forces, seven companies strong, will leave the California city on Monday, June 28, en route for home. The Biograph special will pull out of Los Angeles at 3 p. m. and will arrive in San Francisco on Tuesday morning at 9.30. The 125 persons in the party, including directors, actors, the scenario staff, stage mechanics, etc., will spend two days at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, as guests of the Biograph Company. The special will leave San Francisco on Wednesday evening at 11.55, and will arrive in New York on Monday, July 5, at 7.30 p. m.

During the absence of the producing forces on the coast, the studios in the Bronx, New York City, have been thoroughly overhauled, and a number of interesting installations made with a view to enhancing the efficiency of the studios and laboratories. Immediately upon the return of the Los Angeles party, work will be resumed on several important forthcoming releases, in addition to the five Biographs each week. Special plans have been made for the production of the three-reel Biograph, to be released every other Wednesday in the regular service, beginning with "Under Two Flags" on July 21.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS HONORED.

Miss Kathlyn Williams has been the recipient of many honors, but she was accorded a new one recently. Without her knowledge, the Selig actress was "adopted" in faraway Honolulu by a small army of Uncle Sam's soldier boys, who organized a "Kathlyn Williams Club," built a clubhouse and are working for the betterment of motion pictures, all in the name of their fair patroness. The first knowledge Miss Williams had of the honor extended to her was upon the receipt of a letter sent from Schofield Barracks, Honolulu, H. T., and dated April 25, 1915.

Florence Hackett With United

EDWIN AUGUST announces that Florence Hackett, the well known motion picture actress formerly with Reliance and Lubin, has been acquired by the Pyramid Company, and will in the future appear in two-part photoplays with him.

Florence Hackett is a motion picture actress of no mean reputation, having starred with Arthur Johnson at the Reliance Company and then Lubin for five years, and having won a name for herself as an emotional artist on the legitimate stage even before that. She is tall and graceful, with handsome features which photograph magnificently and a feminine charm which makes for a fascinating screen magnetism. She has also won for herself the title of "the best-dressed woman in pictures."

Florence Hackett

Florence Hackett was born in Buffalo, N. Y. When she was 15 years of age she was brought by her mother to New York, where she attended St. Cecilia's Academy. She had no special dramatic training, but her natural abilities and her love of acting stood her in such good stead that when she tried out for a part in "Dora Thorne" she won instant popularity and was given the role. "The Traveling Salesman" was the last play in which she appeared before joining the Reliance Company. She played with James Kirkwood, Henry Walthal and Marion Leonard and Arthur Johnson, with whom she went to Lubin at Philadelphia later.

Some of the photoplays in which Miss Hackett will be remembered are "The Road of Strife," "Beloved Adventure," "The Intriguers" by George Terwilliger, "Rainy Day" by the same producer, and "The Path to the Rainbow" which has not yet been released.

Miss Hackett will be a valuable asset to the Pyramid Company which will start work with her advent at the new studio at Ridgefield Park, N. J.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Censorship Barring "The Birth of a Nation" Creates Great Wave of Protest.

IN my letter, in the issue of May 29, it was announced that "The Birth of a Nation" had been barred in Chicago by Mayor Wm. Hale Thompson. His action was based on the assumption that the screen presentation reflected on the colored race, and on the representation that it had led to riots in the East.

The mayor's decision was given out Saturday, May 15; but since then there has been such a tide of public protest, expressed both editorially by the daily press and by letters from prominent citizens, that he has expressed a desire to see the photoplay for himself.

"I have not seen the film, and all I know about it is that many negroes objected because of the prejudice which they said the pictures had raised against them," the mayor has stated. "I believe the negro is entitled to protection from class hatred. I shall be glad to see the picture if the producers ask me."

The incident, whatever the outcome as to the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Chicago, is extremely gratifying to a close observer of whatever affects the progress and material welfare of the moving picture. Especially has the incident been prolific of good in that it has enlisted powerful public opinion on behalf of moving pictures. I mean pictures that are right from the moral and the artistic standpoint. The people who have learned to like and admire good moving pictures and to estimate their true value to the great masses of the people are up in arms against any arbitrary measure that will tend to impair their usefulness. They have suddenly become jealous of any exercise of authority that seeks to treat them as children, who have not yet learned to discern between good and evil.

As I have often written before in these columns, there are certain picture subjects that may be unfit for minors to see, and that are yet eminently fit for adults to see. In my opinion "The Birth of a Nation" is one of them, in an eminent degree.

But read what the Chicago Tribune has stated editorially on the censorship of moving pictures in connection with the case at issue. It is an able, comprehensive and conservative treatment of the whole matter.

The moving picture play, "The Birth of a Nation," is, in our opinion, the greatest piece of work done for the films by American producers. It ranks with "Cabiria" as a tremendous spectacle and for the American temperament it has points of artistic advantage over the D'Annunzio photoplay.

In Chicago it has thus far been barred from exhibition. It is not immoral or coarse. It does not offend for any of the reasons which usually cause the prohibition of picture plays or the elimination of scenes from them. It is in all essential episodes grounded on historical fact, representing the struggles of that terrible time in the South when the whites, back from war, saw their government taken over by the newly enfranchised blacks controlled by the northern carpetbaggers.

What happened with the negro ascendant and how the white re-established his supremacy is shown with obvious natural sympathy for the South, and no doubt with such heightening of effect as dramatic art has a right to employ. It presents what the South says and the North of our day, at least, is inclined to believe to be truth.

The exhibition of this photoplay is prohibited in Chicago. The book from which the scenario was taken was not suppressed. It could not be, although it was violent. The play made from the book was not suppressed, although it, also being violent, there were requests that it be. The photoplay alone gets the subject into such form that a prohibition is ordered.

Here is a question of freedom in expression which will give any thoughtful person cause for reflection. We assert our right to such freedom within the obvious bounds of common decency and morality. "The Birth of a Nation" does not offend against either. This film draws upon veritable pages from the history of the country, embodies men and women of whom the pages treat, and they re-enact their struggles. We then say that citizens may not be permitted to see it.

The Tribune has been and is opposed to interference with freedom of expression, but it confesses that the subject here involved has complexities which do not yield to the application of ordinary rules. The terrible concrete reality of the moving picture is the disturbing factor and the consequent emotional response of the spectator is the disturbing result. The sin of the film is its effectiveness.

A lecturer with ability to touch men's susceptibilities might take this subject and do his emotional best with it, and we doubt that a voice would be raised to stop him. Such people as might go to hear him would have their feelings made more acute, might have their prejudices heightened, but in the end the chief result would be that they knew more about the days of reconstruction.

The moving picture not so much makes its spectators know more about the period; it makes them live through it, vicariously but intensely, and the city government has said, in effect, that the citizens of Chicago ought not to live through it, and they ought not, as a matter of public policy, to enter a theater from which they must come with prejudices and race hatreds inflamed.

If the validity of this argument be questioned, as it is bound to be, let the consideration of the subject go further. We may suppose that one producing company has selected the time of the Spanish inquisition for film purposes, or that another has taken the persecution of the Irish Catholics by Cromwell, and that either play or both, done after the manner of "Cabiria" and "The Birth of a Nation," were put in Chicago theaters. Assume that these plays kept to historical accuracy. Query: Would it be public policy to permit the productions?

All censorship is an infringement of that perfect freedom of thought and expression which is dear to the liberal as an ideal if not always acceptable as a fact. Where we concede any restriction it is extremely difficult if not impossible to justify it on other grounds than those of expediency. Censorship of information and of debate is allowed only in extreme cases, as under martial law. Censorship of literary expression also is permitted only within relatively narrow limits. The field broadens, however, with restrictions upon other forms of art, especially where their appeal is to emotion rather than reason and effects of public consequences are feared.

But here it is necessary for us to resist a tendency easily extended in the general name of expediency or morality. Not all cases are as clear as those we have cited, and restriction is often the result of the organized zeal of minute minorities rather than an expression of the consensus of a community's opinion. Also there is always a disposition to use power when it is created.

Censorship often accomplishes concrete benefits and may be conceded to be necessary. But we ought never to lose sight of the fact that, if necessary, it is a necessary evil which we are right in regarding jealously.

The Chicago Examiner states editorially:

The American people are justly uneasy at the institution, new to us, of censorship.

We progressed fairly well without it until the advent of the moving picture, and our press and our stage have been cleaner and more moral than those of countries where an official has to pass on everything published or shown.

A department of censorship inevitably seeks for something to prohibit rather than something to permit.

Just now there is a question whether one of the most important film productions ever attempted, "The Birth of a Nation," should be shown in Chicago. The same sort of agitation has preceded its exhibition in every great American city, and the verdict has been uniformly in favor of the production.

There is no matter of immorality involved; it is simply a question of whether a play based largely on the reconstruction period following the Civil War would give offense or engender disorder.

The Examiner frankly suggests that this question does not come within the reviewing power of the censor.

There is no possibility that the performance would endanger public morals. The scenes and incidents, based on history, carry a story of high purpose with dramatic intensity; but there is no wantonness, nor naked brutality, beyond what the theme demands.

There was no suggestion of suppressing the book that is the foundation of the film, nor is it likely that if the play was given in ordinary theatrical guise there would be any thought of stopping it.

Why should a picture play require special restraint?

Everybody knows what the play is about. If anybody does not care to see it he does not have to attend.

Recently we had a play dealing with German spies in England. Presumably Germans would not care to witness a stage production in which their people were pictured as treacherous blunderers, inevitably circumvented and defeated by astute English heroes, but nobody suggested that the theater was not within its rights in giving such a performance.

How much less is it justifiable to apply censorship to a play based on our own history, so long past that most of us were unborn at the period described?

The founders of our country realized that there was more danger in the abuse of censorship than in the abuse of freedom. Jefferson's comment that he would rather have a country without government and a free press than one with government and an enslaved press reflects the jealousy with which any trespass on the people's right to know and learn was regarded when our country was in the making.

The libel laws and the statutes against indecency have always been a sufficient safeguard against gross abuse of the privileges of literature and the press.

We are told that it cost $150,000 to prepare the spectacle now under consideration. No producer is risking such an amount on a production so offensive that the sentiment of the community would repudiate it, and if the officials of Chicago are not supposed to obey the dictates of the community it is a new note in American government.

The whole plan of censorship is contrary to the spirit of our country.

If an official can impose his views on us in the moving-picture house, the next attempt will be to tell the theater what it is allowed to show, and from that it is only a step to telling the press what it may print. That would spell an end to criticism of public acts and public men. It would substitute personal interest or personal prejudice for the truth as the standard in determining the right of publication.

Read what the Chicago Post has printed editorially:

Speaking generally, we believe in censorship—but on one condition. That is, that the public shall be the censor. The public can delegate its sovereign power of self-government to representatives, and has to, although the results are probably not as satisfactory as they might be. But the public cannot delegate its aesthetic taste. The minute it begins to let an official or a board or a group of volunteers decide what it shall see or what it shall not see it has abdicated a right more fundamental than that of political self-government. For even in bureaucratic countries where the citizens prefer to be governed efficiently rather than misgovern themselves, their tastes are usually left free, and any effort to control those tastes would be resented by the most politically submissive.

In such a country, however, the political aspect of a work of art embracing such a burning public question as that of race might cause the picture play in question to be prohibited. In America we assume that burning questions are just the questions that should be discussed publicly and fearlessly.

Are we to draw back from that attitude just because the discussion of one question is apt to be a little too noisy? Suppose it to be true that this play, by the very artistic merit it possesses, by its actuality and detail, may do harm. Then let us take the harm rather than risk the loss of the good that freedom brings. The censorship, once applied to this play, makes a precedent when some other debatable topic is treated in art. There are enemies to every good cause, and there may come a day when friends of the negro—who may also be friends of other progressive causes—may find the weapon that some of them are now invoking against this play used against themselves.

That the public is stupid and may be inflamed by what it sees in this, that or the other form of art is no argument for the suppression of all art that does not happen to be peaceful in content and bland in its presentation. The only thing to do is to educate the public. If that is too long and dangerous a course, with too little hope of success, then let us advertise for a competent dictator and end the whole democratic farce. But we cannot possibly run the ship of state with sails of democracy in fair weather and haul them down and stoke up a little auxiliary engine of despotism every time we strike a squall.

The weight of these opinions will have a far-reaching effect on the future of moving picture censorship. Some good men and women, who think themselves divinely appointed to determine what is and what is not intellectual pabulum for their fellows, may be led to see that though some may think they are called to lead, few are chosen; and that in the many —the great majority—lies the hope of a nation or a race.

At the last moment on Monday, May 31, Mayor Thompson made a new proposition to the manufacturers of "The Birth of a Nation."

"I suggest to them that they get thirty or forty colored ministers and let them pass on the picture," said the mayor. "The only question I have in my mind is whether it will arouse race prejudice. If the colored ministers say it won't, I have no objection to the picture being shown."

As no one representing "The Birth of a Nation" could be found in the city at the time, on Monday, it is not known whether the mayor's latest proposition will be accepted or not.

Chicago Film Brevities.

C. A. Frambers, president of the Photodrama Club, this city, writes that the date of the banquet to be given at that club is June 19. This was announced at the last meeting, at which Mr. Frambers addressed the members on "The Birth of a Nation," which had been viewed at a private exhibition in the Illinois theatre. Mr. Van Patten read an excellent paper on "Odds and Ends." He pointed out that most scenario writers are so intent on some plot far removed from their sphere of life that they overlook excellent ideas at their very elbows. As an illustration he referred to "strap-hanging," so familiar in all big cities, which required Vitagraph's "Boobley's Baby" to show how to make a comedy out of it. The next and final meeting of the club this season will be held on June 14, when President Frambers will present each member with a book on "Building a Plot" and "What is a Plot?" All members are urged to attend so that their names may be "put in the pot" for the banquet. Thus far, three members of the Photodrama Club have announced their intentions to go to California on the Selig Exposition Special, July 8.

James Craidon, operator at the Illinois theatre, Chicago Heights, Ill., called at the World office and subscribed for the World. The Illinois at present seats 700 people, but plans are under way for enlarging the theatre so that it will seat 1,000 people. An admission of 10 cents is charged for six reels of licensed pictures. On Sunday 10, 15 and 20 cents is charged for three reels of pictures and five acts of vaudeville. The Illinois is managed by S. J. Gregory. Mr. Craidon reported fair business.

H. E. McManus, proprietor of the Southern theatre, Oak Park, Ill., called at the World office last week and subscribed for the World. The Southern has a seating capacity of 550, and charges an admission of five cents for a feature program of the General Film, or the Mutual, or Paramount. The Southern is operated only six days a week, all amusement places in Oak Park being closed on Sundays.

Peter L. Myers, owner of the Myers Opera House, Jamesville, Wis., the oldest established theatre in the State of Wisconsin, which has played in its time Barrett, Edwin Booth, Modjeska, and other famous stars, was in the city last week. Mr. Myers stated that his house is now running feature moving pictures at times, and, at others, vaudeville and combination. Mr. Myers told me that he had played "The Spoilers" three times since it was released, the present run being the third. The admission charges on the first two engagements were 15 and 25 cents, when capacity business was the result. For the third engagement the prices will be 10 and 15 cents. Mr. Myers stated that business was excellent and expressed special satisfaction with his programs obtained from George Kleine and the Metro Features. Mr. Myers subscribed for the World before saying good-bye.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, made a brief stay in the city last week. During his stay, Mr. Selznick was interviewed by a Chicago Tribune representative, and concluded with the following paragraph: "The film business is the biggest and most disorganized one in the world, and I'm going to consolidate it, or make our own company so big that it will knock all the others out of business." Or what? Mr. Selznick omitted to state the second alternative.

H. A. Rubens, manager of the Crystal theatre, Joliet, Ill., paid a pleasant visit to the World office last week. The Crystal seats 700 people, and charges an admission of five cents for five reels of licensed pictures. Mr. Rubens reported good business. The Crystal, together with the Lincoln and Princess in Joliet, and the Fox in Aurora, are owned by the Rubens Bros. enterprises. The Lincoln seats 1,400, the Princess 1,200 and the Fox 1,800. Mr. Rubens stated that "Uncle Sam at Work" was shown at the Fox theatre, at an admission of 25 cents, to fine business. "The Spoilers" has also played return engagements to capacity business. M. M. Rubens, booking manager for the Rubens' circuit of theatres, who makes headquarters at the Princess theatre, Joliet, also called at the World office during the week. He is well pleased with the present outlook for business.

John Edward O'Toole, Chicago manager of the Kriterion Film Service, in the Mallers Building, this city, advises us that his office was broken into Sunday, May 16, and the following single reel Kriterion comedies stolen: "Domestic Revolution," "Percy Got Married," "Boob's Elopement," "Beating Father to It," "Blown Upon" and "Resourceful Billy." The police were promptly notified and Detective Sergeants Malone and Harrington have been assigned to look out for the stolen films.

I omitted to state in my last letter that a race film bill introduced by Representative Jackson, one of the two colored Republican members of the House at Springfield, hailing from Chicago, was passed by a vote of 111 to 2. "The Nigger" and "The Birth of a Nation" are barred from exhibition in Illinois by this bill. The measure prohibits the exhibition of any film that shows a lynching, or unlawful hanging, and is based on the theory that the presentation of such pictures tends to race hatred and rioting.

The press agent of the United Photo-Plays Co. informs me that Wilmuth Merkyl, a light opera star, has signed a contract to play opposite Miss Gerda Holmes in some of the productions of that company. It is stated that the first photoplay in which he will appear is "The Victory of Virtue," in six reels, by Penelope Knapp, now being produced under the direction of Harry McRae Webster. Mr. Merkyl has starred with Mizzi Hajos in "Her Little Highness" and in "Sari," and with Hazel Dawn in "The Debutante." He has appeared in photoplays with Betty Nansen in "A Celebrated Scandal," Hazel Dawn in "Niobe," Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green," and Helen Ware in "The Price."

The Star theatre, 1453 Milwaukee avenue, was broken open and the safe robbed of $600 early Monday morning, May 31. O. F. Krueger, the manager, said that the safe was robbed a little over a year ago and about the same amount of money stolen.

E. A. Westcott, manager of the Minneapolis branch office of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived in the city Tuesday morning, June 1, to meet W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the company. Mr. Westcott reported excellent business.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

A LIVELY comedy, "Meet Me at Seven," heads the list of pictures at the Vitagraph theater this week. It was written by Eugene Mullin and produced by C. Jay Williams, the cast including Charles Brown, Kate Price, Hughie Mack, Anna Laughlin, Nicholas Dunaew and John T. Kelly. A comedy mix-up, which is not untangled until all the characters meet in a police station, is responsible for most of the fun. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams and Paul Scardon are presenting the Fifth Chapter of "The Goddess." Celestia becomes separated from her millionaire friend and visits the East Side of New York City.

A two-part feature, "The Little Doll's Dressmaker," introducing Lillian Walker, Evart Overton and Frank Currier, is another dramatic offering. The shorter pictures include "What's Ours," the principal characters being enacted by Muriel Ostriche, Anders Randolf and Louise Baudet; and "Mr. Jarr and Love's Young Dream," Number Twelve of Roy L. McCardell's Jarr Family Series.

Mary Pickford in the Strand.

Mary Pickford in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," the Frances Hodgson Burnett play in which Eleanor Robson starred so successfully a number of years ago, is this week's leading feature at the Strand theater. Miss Pickford's performance of the London street waif is finely conceived and executed, and the entire picture is worthy of unqualified praise. Travel pictures of Switzerland and Italy, and educational film, showing glove making in France; a Universal comedy; the Strand Topical Review, and a complete change of musical program fill out the bill.

Broadway Theater Program.

John Mason is making his motion picture debut at the Broadway theater, this week, in "Jim the Penman," the famous drama by Sir Charles Young. Mr. Mason, whose support includes Marguerite Leslie and Frank Perry, is giving a powerful characterization of the title role. Other features are a South American Travel film and the Broadway Animated News.

WARNING.

Our readers in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York are hereby once more cautioned against paying any money to anyone whatever who claims to be an agent for this paper and who offers subscriptions at less than our regular rate of $3.00 per annum. We have just been advised by an exhibitor in Mamaroneck, N. Y., in regard to the operations of a swindler who is offering subscriptions to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and one or two other moving picture magazines and who is also claiming to represent the Kraus Manufacturing Company and some of our other advertisers. We understand he is a young man of rather short stature and fair complexion, well dressed, wears a diamond ring and is a good talker. In Mamaroneck he was using the letterhead of a business firm in Philadelphia and was offering the Kraus post cards at about half price and subscription to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD at $2.00, etc. It is needless to say that the man is an impostor and should be promptly arrested for swindling. We will be glad to appear against him if he is trapped by any of our readers.

It is a good plan to pay no money to unknown parties for subscriptions to magazines at any time. Either send your check or postal money order direct to the publishers or subscribe through your local newsdealer or any of the well-known subscription agencies. The safest and most direct plan at all times is to send your subscription for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 17 Madison avenue, N. Y. C.

Simone Leaves Centaur

CHARLES SIMONE has resigned his position as secretary and supervising director of the Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, N. J., in order to devote his time to directing productions.

Mr. Simone had been with the Centaur Company, of which David Horsley is the founder, since its inception, over six years ago. When Mr. Horsley began producing Nestor comedies Simone went along with his old employer, acting in the capacity as general manager for the Nestor company. With the reorganization of the Centaur Film Company about two years ago Mr. Simone became secretary and supervising director, which position he held until last week.

Charles Simone.

During the last year Mr. Simone has directed most of his attention to producing special feature pictures of a dramatic and educational nature, but inasmuch as the Centaur Company will not make any features, for the present at least, Mr. Simone decided to make a change to a place where he might carry out his plans. Among those pictures he has directed and produced are "The Gypsy's Revenge," "Il Trovatore," a five-part version of Verdi's opera, etc.

He has received offers from several producing organizations to direct productions, but so far he has accepted none of them. It is quite likely, however, that within a few days announcement will be made of his connection with one of the big picture corporations.

A REQUEST FROM "OLD IRELAND."

Valentine Grant, who is gathering much fame in photoplays right now through her work as leading woman with Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot," has just received from Ireland one of the most unusual requests ever demanded of a star in pictures. Several families of Irish boys who worked as extras in Sid Olcott's pictures which were taken in Killarney last year, have joined in a letter penned by Patrick O'Sullivan, keeper of the Beaufort Hotel in Killarney, requesting that pieces of film be cut out of the Olcott Irish pictures and enlarged to regular size "stills" so that the faces of these lads may be kept green in the memory of fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers. Mr. O'Sullivan writes that several of the same boys who had the time of their lives working in the pictures with Miss Grant have been killed in the trenches in France.

Boniface O'Sullivan, in his letter to Miss Grant, says that numerous little wooden crosses have been placed along some of the hedges which formed the immediate background for the scenes in which the Irish boys appeared. Miss Grant has already asked Mr. Olcott for the photos, and as many of them as are fit will be sent to the families of the young soldiers.

SELIG'S NEW LONDON OFFICE.

In order to accommodate its continental business, which, despite the European war, is increasing, the Selig Polyscope Company has opened new offices and show rooms at 93 and 95 Wardour street, London, England. E. H. Montagu is the sole agent for Selig Polyscope Company picture plays in England.

A beautiful new building has been acquired in the heart of the business district. This building is four stories high, is built of stone, and contains every facility and convenience for exhibitors and others in England with whom the Selig regular program and Red Seal plays are justly popular. The new Selig building was occupied by Mr. Montagu and a force of assistants on Monday, May 17.

Doings at Los Angeles

MANY ARE the doings here this week. First we have had the glorious sunshine since hardly no one knows when, for they are all at work and have almost forgotten the rain which bothered us so much a few weeks ago. Lee Daugherty, of the Biograph plant, when asked if he was rejoicing on account of the prolonged good weather smiled hurriedly and said "Too darned busy to rejoice." That's it everywhere.

Winfield R. Sheehan, manager of the William Fox Corporation, has left town for the east after doing thousands of things here, the most exciting being the waylaying of Allan Dwan who directs Mary Pickford, R. A. Walsh, of the Mutual, and Oscar Apfel, of Bosworth-Morosco, three popular directors who are to leave in a few days for the east to make Fox pictures.

William E. Wing, scenario for Selig's firm, has been made editor-in-chief of the Script, the official trumpet of the Photoplay Author's League. Guess he ought to be fitted for the desk, as he has had a quarter of a century in the newspaper game.

Charlie Chaplin and his S. & A. players invaded Venice on Saturday night and enjoyed the dancing in the pier pavilion. The management of the miniature Italian city has a photomen's night every two weeks, and this one was the biggest of the season.

* * *

At Glendale, the municipal fiesta and flower pageant was well backed up by the Kalem and Selig Western players. The Elks club of that city is mainly supported by Elks of Kalem fame, and they were out in their best.

This week, Trinity auditorium is showing to full houses and homefolks who go to see the kiddies in the municipal school films, seven reels in length. The youngsters will be put on the canvas at the Exposition in a week or so.

Jack Pickford has departed for New York, and will work at the F. P. studio there, having departed this week, the next day after receiving a wire to hurry back. He will be missed by the filmers here.

Fred Kley reports the first run of "Chimmie Fadden," the Lasky feature which stars Victor Moore. He says it is really a funny story, and as a picture, is worth while. He is a truthful man. Frank Reicher has started "The Secret Orchard," with Blanche Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell starred, this being his first picture here. In one of the reels a whole house is used, with angle shots, and the entire building was built in the glass studio, including the hall, living room, dining room, drawing room, pantry, kitchen, and—wine closet. Two rooms upstairs and the mammoth staircase made the set a really big one. Fifteen hundred pieces of bias cut wood were used in one room. No wonder Mr. Goldfish says "The Lasky company is raising the standard of moving pictures."

Ten directors are now working at the Selig zoo, the latest additions being Marshal Neilan, L. W. Chaudet, George Nicholls, Lloyd Carlton and Guy Oliver. Frank Beal, formerly of the Eclair, also has a company here. George Larkin of "Trey 'o Hearts" fame has also joined this firm and is working in a film called "Bound by the Leopard's Love," with Vivian Reed opposite.

There was a big "night" at the famous Ship cafe in Venice the other night when a bunch of film men gathered to pay their respects to Ward McFadden, who has reenlisted as captain of the ship after an absence of many months. Among the big ones who were there the names of Charlie Chaplin, Charlie Murray, Roscoe Arbuckle, Baron Long, Al Levy and Johnnie Powers the baseball man. The evening was one of real merriment.

George Magie is by this time in your city, to confer with Carl Laemmle. He was wired for to look after the Universal exchanges. H. P. Caulfield, auditor for the Big U for some time, has replaced Mr. Magie as manager, and is busy up to his ears in work at the plant.

Memorial services were held here simultaneously with those held in New York and other cities for the late Charles Frohman. Among the many legitimate actors who attended were a number of film men including Raymond Hitchcock, Tyrone Poyer, Henry Woodruff, John Emerson and Charles Mariott. Mr. Woodruff spoke impressively, having been a close friend of the late theatrical man. The big Mason opera house was packed with stage people and admirers of the great man.

Harry Haskins, who at one time was a canvas man here, being director and technical man for the Vitagraph and Universal firms, and who is at present producing the Mission Play, which is viewed by thousands of tourists, has added several new features to the play. He discovered an old song and a new dance which he has worked in with the play. Haskins went fishing up the San Gabriel river recently and caught a few rainbow trout, between shows.

The cutting rooms of local film companies will be busy, if this ordinance is enforced to the letter. The following from a daily paper tells in full:

> Los Angeles was given a more drastic motion picture censors' ordinance yesterday when the council by unanimous vote, under suspension of the rules, adopted the revised motion picture censors' ordinance as prepared by that board.
> Under the new ordinance a permit must be obtained by the motion picture exhibitors to show any film on the screen, and the censors will have the power to prohibit the showing of any objectionable pictures.

"Charlie Fuller," the giant ape or chimpanzee, who has appeared in numerous films, and who is owned by E. W. Knowlton, a Pasadena millionaire, is the centre of a law suit for $50,000 which is being pressed by a woman who suffered severe nervous shock when the big brute entered her home some time ago and grabbed a baby from her arms and dashed it to the floor. The woman is still suffering, according to the papers, and stands a good chance to win the suit. The monk is the pet of the rich man and is receiving a course of taming.

David Mansfield, in honor of his grandfather, an attorney in Illinois, is the name of Rollin S. Sturgeon's latest addition to his household and studio. The little man, now nearly two months old, is a "fat and sassy" little chap and if he is as clever as his dad, will some day be a big actor man, and producer.

Two new script writers have been recruited by the Big U. They are G. E. Jenks and W. E. Mair. This picture city entertained 200 members of the California State Press Association last week, and now they are making joy for 3,000 Elks who are at their annual picnic.

Does the war have any effect on moving pictures? Well, I should say so. At Lasky's studio they have a German property man. There was a scene done the other day wherein Franch newspapers were used. The Teuton saw the papers; someone said something about the allies and the French shooters. The papers were found torn to shreds when wanted for the scene.

Gene Pallette has moved from the Mutual to the Selig lot and is busy in a big picture. This firm is preparing to stage or rather screen "Mizpah." Tyrone Power will be the big man, with Kathleen Williams starred, and a cast that will be made up of well-known players. They are already building sets and streets for this picture in the barren San Fernando Valley.

Since the Lasky corporation is to build a new plant here, they have decided to improve their rancho in the valley, and a lot of building material is ordered for stages and dressing rooms so that big exteriors can be done there with the greatest efficiency and saving of transportation.

The Selig zoo is soon to be opened, and everything is rounding into shape for the initial unlocking of the big iron gates. Many new animals are on the way to the beautiful park, including 6 orang outangs, a herd of llama, and many other beasts.

Working at night in a graveyard for "The Secret Sin" Hobart Bosworth, who recently joined the Universal, did scenes by light that will be a revelation in night photoplaying, according to the men who tell what is going on at the picture municipality.

Al Kaufman, manager of the Famous Players, is flirting with death, but he does not think so. He says aviating is just like riding in a limousine nowadays, and dips and somersaults are only like racing in an automobile. He went up 2,700 feet with Aviator Glenn Martin this week and made a volplane of nearly that length in only 22 seconds, one time attaining the miraculous speed of over 125 miles an hour. Thrilling, yes. And Little Mary, the lovable champion canvas star, went up also. And she begged for more height and speed. She said it was the most exciting experience she ever had. The F. P. is finishing the aviation picture. Mr. Kaufman will go up with Martin and another passenger, Lieut. ter Porrten, head of the Netherlands aviation corps, in an endeavor to fracture the U. S. record for altitude, which stands at 11,400 feet. Martin has a new 160 h. p. motor which will push the plane at the rate of 112 miles an hour. He is confident of breaking the high record. Our best wishes to the little manager of the F. P.

Miss Jane Novak and Frank Newburg were united in wedlock here this week. This is a strong union of the Universal and Biograph companies as the two young people are both well-known players, the former being with the Universal and the groom with the A. N. Best wishes!

* * *

The first run of the initial film put out by the National Film Co., which was recently started here, was given this week in Tally's Broadway house. The four reels of fun film are crowded with good action and much comedy. Many press and film people saw the pre-view of the multiple reel picture.

Thursday night of this week the old standpatters from the Photoplayers club gathered together for an evening of frivolity at a downtown cafe which they go to most of the time. Two weeks ago there was a lively time and it was eclipsed this week. Carlyle Blackwell was at the helm and the people he called on were the best in the business.

Harry McCoy was the first filmer up, and he led out with the national song, leading the big orchestra. Rena Rogers was next, followed by Jerry Gerrard, Dick Smith, Myrtle Stedman, William Rock, Julian Eltinge, Ruth Roland, Raymond Hitchcock, who gave the evening the proper comedy climax. He produced a Keystone scene with Dell Henderson directing. The big director of course ordered a retake, much to the surprise and approval of the vast throng. Vast throng being a gathering of film admirers, who had heard of the dinner. The place was practically all reserved by outsiders, although many prominent canvas people were at side tables. Photoplayers only were allowed at the two long tables.

The same night P. A. Powers arrived in town and was expected to have been present at the dinner, but he was delayed and did not get in town until late, but his plate had been reserved.

* * *

G. P. Von Harleman, of the World, also arrived in town that evening and started in the next morning to see the celluloid circuit.

Samuel Goldfish, of the Lasky Compay, is busy at the big Hollywood studios of that company preparing great things for the coming film season. He is not saying much at present, but it is a hunch that there is something in the air.

* * *

The house dressing room which is being built at the Lasky studio for Geraldine Farrar, who arrives early next month, is rapidly nearing completion, and already the palatial furnishings can almost be seen in the cozy little studio house. There will be every convenience imaginable, and many late inventions and appliances for the personal comfort of the great woman who is to appear in these films. Her special car will be welcomed here by the industry and everyone in the southland.

CLARK IRVINE.

KLEINE TO GIVE PRIVATE EXHIBITION OF "THE SPENDTHRIFT."

The doors of the Candler theater, New York, will be thrown open Monday morning, June 7, at 10.30 a. m. for a private exhibition of George Kleine's latest feature, "The Spendthrift," which is scheduled for release June 21. The performance will be given for the benefit of exhibitors and their friends, all of whom are invited to be present.

"The Spendthrift" was recently completed at the Kleine New York studios. It is founded on the celebrated stage drama by Porter Emerson Browne and features an all-star cast, including Irene Fenwick, Cyril Keightley and Malcolm Duncan. The subject has been made in six parts.

DARWIN KARR.

DARWIN KARR was a traveling salesman when he heard the call of the stage. He had had no great ambition to be an actor in his youth. He was discharged for being a poor salesman. Stranded in a small town he met Fred Raymond who was owner and manager of a little production known as "The Missouri Girl." He gave Karr a chance as advance man and later called him back to the show and made him play the heavy part on short notice owing to the sudden departure of the regular villain.

Darwin Karr.

This was the beginning of Karr's career. He made good with Raymond and the next season had his own show. He then went into repertoire as leading man for four seasons. Next followed stock engagements in Providence, Chicago and Newark, N. J. After that he played the lead with Florence Bindley in "The Street Singer," and finished up his stage career by playing two seasons of big time vaudeville as a headliner. He went into pictures in 1911, starting at the bottom as a super with the Edison Company. He quickly became leading man for Mary Fuller. The Solax Company engaged him and featured him for two years. He is now with the Vitagraph Company where he has been for nearly two years.

MARSHAL NEILAN WITH SELIG.

MARSHAL NEILAN, who recently joined the Selig Polyscope Company, has had a long and distinguished career in motion pictures, both as a director and as a leading actor. He will be featured occasionally in Selig Red Seal plays under the direction of Colin Campbell, when he completes the production of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," a rural comedy series to be released by the Selig Company.

Mr. Neilan was the author, originator and producer of the first fifteen of the "Ham" comedies and was also recently featured in several of the Famous Players productions, besides playing "The Country Boy" for Lasky on the Paramount program. Mr. Neilan henceforth will direct the Selig comedies and they promise to reach a yet higher standard in popularity.

Marshal Neilan.

As leading man opposite Blanche Sweet, in K. & E. productions, Mr. Neilan won many deserved compliments. He also wrote and produced many comedies and dramas for the Biograph Company.

He is the author of hundreds of successful pictureplay plots, has directed many hundreds of meritorious productions, and has appeared in many of the leading picture plays as a leading actor.

"I am very pleased to have become identified with the Selig Polyscope Company," remarked Mr. Neilan, when seen. "Affiliation with this company means every facility for artistic work and I hope to accomplish much successful work while with them.

Reminiscences of a Studio Manager

PART II.

By Julius Stern, General Manager Eastern Universal Studios.

IN THE first chapter of my experiences I mentioned how the old Imp came to make the first American-produced two-reel feature, "At the Bottom of the Sea." Since I wrote about this, I have thought of the names of some other now prominent picture people whom I cast for small parts in the film. They were Eddie Lyons, who is now considered in a class by himself as a Nestor comedian out in Universal City, and who directs Victoria Forde, Harry Pollard, who is a director for the American, and E. J. LeSaint, the Selig director. Another Selig director from the old Imp school is Francis J. Grandon, under whom Murdock MacQuarrie had his first part in "The Aggressor." MacQuarrie is today a Universal City star and, like Eddie Lyons, directs his own company besides.

Speakinng of "The Aggressor," I should mention that I persuaded Director Grandon to use in this a little girl who had never been in a picture before but whom I instantly determined was a player of promise. This little girl was Ethel Grandon, who now stars in her own feature films. Indeed, with the exception of Florence Lawrence and King Baggot, most of my Imp-Universal stars were not stars when they came to our studio. Jane Gail, for instance, had been a capable actress at the Lubin studio when I secured her services, but she was by no means in the star class then.

I am always watching for fresh talent, and if I think I see promise in a person, absence of past reputation doesn't count an iota. Not only that, but having given a man a chance I will not discard him if his first effort is not all that I expected of it. Under this system I have given many of the "big lights" of the business help in their early picture days that I know has been fruitful of results. Pathe Lehrman, for instance, was in the scenario department when I encouraged him to do a picture. It was a slapstick comedy and I must admit that it wasn't well thought of at the time of its premiere, about four years ago. That was because Lehrman was ahead of his time: slap-stick of the same order is today the demanded film of the business. And today Lehrman is on the road to fortune as one of the owners of the L-Ko comedy brand of the Universal program, and Billie Ritchie is working for him at a phenomenal salary. I also took Herbert Brenon out of the Imp scenario department about this time to put on a picture which was his very first. His last Universal production of note was "Neptune's Daughter."

Then there is Frank Crane. He, too, is with one of the special feature companies and is considered a peer among feature directors. Crane had been an actor at the old Imp and then, seeing a chance to make a great deal in Canada, joined a new company of which he became producer. This company became financially embarrassed, I understand, and Crane made a very few productions. But, hearing that my ex-actor had these producing aspirations, I had him come back from Canada and gave him an Imp company to direct. Everyone who has followed moving picture history knows the rest. A similar case was that of George Loane Tucker, who had been an actor in the very first Imp stock company and then had gone to the Majestic, where he directed some pictures without any conspicuous success. I made this ex-actor an Imp director and was rewarded a year later with some of the best photoplays that King Baggot has ever appeared in.

Just a few months ago I raised to the rank of director Stuart Paton, who a year ago was an extra man at the Imp-Universal studio and the three recent "mystery" productions from that studio. "The House of Fear," "The Black Pearl" and Bombay Buddha," that caused a genuine stir among exhibitors, were made by this man.

The Original Imp Company of Players.

It is interesting for me to look back through the years and bring before my eyes various "big lights" of the industry when they first presented themselves for employment to me. Just a few of them were even ragged looking! They say that rags go with genius, but you ought to see these same geniuses today. Even their chauffeurs are spick and span!

As a matter of fact, my plan of giving aspiring persons a hearing and an opportunity has netted me as fine results as it has those persons. It has brought new, forceful ideas into the production end, and new, popular faces into the acting end. I do believe, however, in strict discipline at a studio—to which the biggest star and director should adhere. A film producing studio, in my eyes, is just like a big business office, and while there are certain conditions that make office rules useless in a studio, I do believe in a firm and rigorous general system. You can operate a studio more economically under it.

Julius Stern.

I went to Europe a couple of years ago with King Baggot and a company, to make "Ivanhoe" and "Absinthe" (two features that broke sales records at the time), and while I was on the continent I found opportunity to visit the Pathe, Gaumont and Eclipse studios for purposes of comparison. Of one thing I am sure: American actors are better and speedier workers than their colleagues of the continental studios. I was never, at any point of my inspection trip, impressed with European studio work as against American methods, even though it is true that the European studios got a big start on our own. I shouldn't be surprised, however, if they aren't ahead of us in film factory work, and I think that this is the result of that aforesaid "start." In their factories I found that the majority of the employees have been engaged in their particular line for a dozen years or more.

To get back to the old Imp, I would like to say that we plugged along in a slow but sure way, increasing our releases from one weekly to three weekly, and becoming, finally, the best selling brand on the old Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company program. In the preceding chapter I have described how the Sales Company came to be formed.

Well, when in the spring of 1912 prominent western film men started the formation of the Mutual, they came to Mr. Laemmle with a splendid offer for the Imp brand; but with Mr. Laemmle, Charles O. Bauman and William H Swanson I had entered into conference about the gigantic Independent manufacturing combine which shortly developed into the Universal idea. I liked the latter plan so well that I am sure that it was through my vigorous persuasion that Mr. Laemmle entered heart and soul into it, and since without Mr. Laemmle many people feel the Universal would not have achieved its present huge success—that is one accomplishment, at least, which I need not fear to set forth! Indeed, I jumped right into the Universal work myself with all the energy at my command. We started the Universal idea rolling in three small rooms that Messrs. Kessel and Bauman's New York Motion Picture Company conveniently vacated for us in the building at 1 Union Square, New York! Those were the busy days! Besides taking charge of eastern Universal productions, I was a director and assistant treasurer of the organization and that meant at least half of my working time to be spent in the Universal business office.

About this time Mr. Laemmle, to avoid a breakdown, went to Europe and then I had his personal affairs to look after besides. I am glad to say that this unusual condition did not exist very long. I wouldn't have lived to say it if it had existed very much longer! At the present time I am devoting almost all my time to studio management again.

Since my connection with studio management, many "new stunts" have come in. For instance, the "big figure." When I first went to the Imp studio, the "big figure" was pretty much a rarity and used mainly by Mr. Griffith on his little Biograph stage at historic 11 East Fourteenth street. The "close-up" then was also almost unknown. Casts were never given on the screen, although occasionally the printed synopses, distributed by the theater manager, contained 'em. I know that my own productions, at least, today give not only the cast but the name of the director and the scenario writer as well. And four years from now there will be still other improvements that we never guessed of today! "Night photography," considered a novelty now, should be very common then. When Mr. Paton brought in the other day some splendid "night photography" scenes in "The House of Fear," most of the studio workers who saw the first print gasped in amazement. The achievement that causes surprise one day in this business causes hardly a comment the next, and is succeeded by some new achievement the third! That's the trend of this most wonderful business on earth!

Lillian Hamilton

IF YOU ask Lillian Hamilton, the dainty and attractive little leading lady of the Premier Company at Santa Paula, Cal., whose deeds of daring before the camera for the United Program have held many an audience breathless, what is her greatest ambition in life, she will answer without hesitation "to make people happy, to make people laugh and forget their worries." And that is just what Lillian Hamilton has been doing for "years and years" (she won't tell us how many, but at least five) ever since she went into the motion pictures and before.

Lillian Hamilton.

Miss Hamilton began her career of emanating happiness and good cheer in South Haven, Mich. Her home was near Chicago, and even as a child, when she was taken to the city to see children's plays, she longed for the day when she would be able to make people laugh and cry as the stage children did. It was not so very long before she was to have her chance.

Before Miss Hamilton was very much older her parents moved to Los Angeles. One day a friend of her parents—a man who was prominent in the pictures—and who thought that the girl's attractive face and winsome manner would make for an unusual screen magnetism, offered her a position as an extra in a picture which was being made. This first engagement was with the old Biograph company and her first character was that of a school girl, with a good many other school girls in "The School Teacher and the Waif." D. W. Griffith was the director of the picture. Since her days as an extra she has forged ahead, her charming personality and quickness and wit making her a delightful screen companion for the lonely man or woman who wants to drop in a motion picture house to while away the time.

Although Miss Hamilton had never ridden a horse until she went with the Premier Company, she is now an expert horsewoman, and undergoes all sorts of risks for the realism of the pictures.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

Because the city of Las Vegas, New Mex., has taken the trouble to tell the motion picture world about the advantages of the scenery surrounding it, it is to have two companies of players working under the banner of the Selig Polyscope Company, one headed by Tom Mix, the dashing cowboy actor, whose feats have thrilled the world, locate there.

Manager Thomas Persons, of the west coast Selig studios, visited Las Vegas last week and, after carefully considering the adaptability of the country surrounding the city to motion pictures, decided to move two companies from the Los Angeles plant. June 1 is the date selected for the change and the stay of the two companies will probably be of indefinite duration.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

ACRI'S THEATER, MARIETTA, PA.

Another Picture House in a Town of 2,200 Population Doing Good Business—S. A. Acri, Manager and Owner.

HUMAN NATURE is a particularly hard problem to understand, but when one becomes a good student of this interesting trait of character and gauges his journey in life by his knowledge of the idiosyncrasies of mankind he will find that there are less obstacles to overcome and will meet with a considerably greater degree of success. A lack of this knowledge is due in a great many cases to the failures of exhibitors, whether they be situated in a metropolitan city or in a small country town. Human nature is the same the world over, and an exhibitor, no matter where he is, should make a close study of the exacting demands of his patrons. When once he has acquired this material, success is partly assured.

Undoubtedly that's why S. A. Acri, as well as many other persons who enter the exhibiting branch of the motion picture industry, has been so successful with his theater. Mr. Acri is the owner and manager of Acri's theater in Marietta, Pa., a town with only 2,200 population. This picture house has a seating capacity of 500, and a stage 30 by 36 feet in size. The structure occupies a lot measuring 36 by 140 feet, and is built of fireproof material, concrete and steel forming the component parts of the skeleton. The height of the auditorium ceiling is 22 feet, and the interior walls, as well as the lobby walls, are of plain white sand finish. All electric fixtures are of brass, and both the indirect and direct currents are used. The interior can be plentifully supplied during the summer with fresh air from the five double-hung windows on each side of the structure. Special precaution has been taken to allow of easy and quick egress in case of emergency. There are three six-foot exit doors on each side, three exit entrances of the same size in the rear and another three in the front. There is another big exit door in the rear, 8 by 12 in size, but this one is used mostly for the removal of scenery. The glass in the exit doors and side windows are translucent and has been cut in star-like effect. The entrance doors and transoms have been fitted with leaded glass. The ticket office is situated to the right of the lobby, and to the left is the stairs leading to the operating room which is over the lobby. All doors are provided with panic bolts. In the ceiling of the auditorium there are three big ventilators which draw off the foul air, and another large one in the operating room. The size of the picture projected is 13 by 16½ feet. At each side of the building there is a five-foot alleyway. The program consists of General Film Company service and features. On Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, three reels of General Service are shown for an admission price of 5 cents, while on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday General Film and feature pictures are advertised. The admission on those days is 10 cents. Occasionally a 15-cent show is booked.

THE GARING THEATER, GREENVILLE, S. C.

Public Welcomes New Picture House—Program Consists of Feature Pictures Only.

OPENED under auspicious circumstances, the Garing theater at Greenville, S. C., was dedicated to the public. The event took place on April 19, and everyone of the many hundreds of patrons who managed to gain admission to see the initial program came away from the theater with a pleased look on his face. Some of them voiced their opinions and said that if the bill was the precursor of future shows to be given at the Garing it was safe to conjecture that the theater will have a very prosperous life and that handsome dividends will be declared for its sponsors. The Garing is one of the most beautiful picture houses in this section of the state of South Carolina, a result which can undoubtedly be attributed to the aesthetic instinct of Mr. Garing, who is a high class scenic artist and proprietor of one of the best scenic studios in the south.

Garing Theater, Greenville, S. C.

The interior embellishments are of soft luxuriant beauty, and are in perfect harmony with the prettily decorated lobby. The floor of the auditorium has a gradual but effective incline to it, and from everyone of the 450 seats an unobstructed view of the screen can be had. Mr. Garing says that there is plenty of room in the structure for fully 700 seats, but that he realized the inconvenience his patrons would be put to in trying to get in or out of a crowded row if the rows of seats were near one another.

In the operating room there are two motor-driven Power's projection machines. The indirect lighting system is used, and the screen is made of fiber painted with a coat of platinum. John L. Stephens is the operator. An orchestra, composed of five pieces, supplies the musical accompaniment to the pictures. The price of admission is 10 cents, no matter how big the production or productions. C. N. Garing is the dominant spirit in directing the destiny of the new theater.

JEFFERSON CITY GETS $20,000 PICTURE HOUSE.

Bartholomous & Jones opened on May 29 a $20,000 moving picture theater in Jefferson City, Mo. The building occupies a lot 50 by 120 feet and the auditorium has a seating capacity for 1,000 persons. The depth of the stage is 15 feet. There is a balcony with seats for 200 persons. The operating booth is situated at the back of the balcony and contains two latest model Simplex projectors, a spot light, and other modern equipment. The interior is prettily decorated, and is fitted with two singers' recesses. The electrical power is furnished by a D. C. 6 K. W. lighting plant, and the illuminating fixtures are of the indirect type. On one side of the lobby is the ticket office, while on the other side is a refreshment shop. In addition to the 10 big side wall ventilators, 8 big ceiling exhaust fans and 11 oscillating fans keep the air fresh at all times. The exterior is brilliantly lighted.

PRINCESS THEATER, MEMPHIS, TEXAS.

Harle's Cozy Little Picture House Earning Good Weekly Profit—Is in Competent Hands—Seats 350.

WHEN we were kids and read fairy stories we became accustomed to the idea that princesses were pretty, dainty and popular, therefore the idea continued to stick with us. Perhaps that's why Samuel Harle calls his Memphis house the Princess. It is an institution that is appreciated by the 3,500 population of that city. So strong is the demand for motion pictures in this little city that another picture house besides the Princess is making a good weekly profit. The building in which Mr. Harle's theater is situated is built of brick and is two stories in height. It has a lobby 10 by 25 feet with tiled flooring. The walls of the lobby are decorated with five-foot mirrors, and the woodwork is finished in cherry. The box office is in the center, and the doors leading into the auditorium are paneled with mirrors.

The size of the auditorium is 25 by 90 feet, and conveniently arranged in this space are 350 comfortable chairs. The seats are cherry finished. The seating plan is divided by two aisles. There is a good pitch to the floor giving a clear view of the screen from any seat in the house. The screen, which is 9 by 12 feet, is at the front of the house, and it is surfaced with silver. Under the screen is the orchestra pit. The walls are paneled in tan and terra cotta, and the indirect lighting system is employed.

The operating room is 6 by 8 feet. Its walls and roof are made of sheet metal and the floor is of concrete, six inches thick. It is outside of the buiding proper with a nine-inch stone wall between it and the auditorium. The observation ports are fitted with automatic fire shutters.

Princess Theater, Memphis, Texas.

The Princess uses a Power's 6a motor-driven machine with 110 volt A. C. current but it is the intention of the managers to change this current in the summer to 110 volt D. C. generated by their own producing plant. Meniscus bi-convex condensers are used. The Princess has been open a little over six months.

The shows at the Princess are always entertaining and diversified. Three reels of Universal pictures and two reels of United Film Service are given each night with the exception of Saturday when six reels form the program. A World Film Corporation feature is booked for each Saturday while the Universal serial, "The Master Key" is shown each Friday night. Two complete entertainments are offered each night. The prices of admission are 5 and 10 cents for all shows except those given on Saturday when 10 and 20 cents is charged. Two full matinees are advertised for each Saturday afternoon. A six piece orchestra is employed whenever a big feature is booked.

The house manager is E. C. Johnson, and M. J. Holmes is the business manager. Mrs. Charles McCrary is the musical director. If the reader will look closely at the accompanying photograph he will observe standing on the left a handsome gentleman. He is Mr. Johnson, the genial house manager. And see the other man standing on the right!—the man carrying around about 300 pounds of avoirdupois!—that's the benign, affable, courteous and complaisant Horace L. Williams, the operator at the Princess. We include the adjective "affable" because he is a corpulent "feller," all fat "fellers" being in our opinion more affable than persons with a less degree of adiposity. Probably that's one of the reasons why the floor of the operating room is made of concrete, six inches thick.

WEST END LYRIC, ST. LOUIS, MO.

J. W. Cornelius and Wife Own Beautiful Picture Theater—Employes Carriage Caller—Admission 10 and 20 Cents.

THE West End Lyric theater, at Delmar and Euclid avenues, St. Louis, Mo., is less than a year old, but it stands to-day as one of the best known and most talked about amusement enterprises in St. Louis. The theater is not a very large one, the seating capacity being but eleven hundred, and its prominence has not been gained through any extra effort after publicity. The house has simply advertised itself by sheer merit and the excellence of its management and program. The theater is controlled by J. W. Cornelius and his wife, who also own the Lyric, at 114 North 6th street, St. Louis. The West End Lyric is the especial pet of Mrs. Cornelius. She has designed and carried out a scheme of decoration and furnishings which gives the theater a distinction all its own and that goes far toward making it the success it is, and adds incalculably to the appearance and comfort of the place.

The reception lobby of the West End Lyric is one of its most striking features. There are two box offices and a wide stairway leading to the balcony; in that respect it is like the lobbies of hundreds of theaters, but there the simile ceases. The floor, instead of being bare, or covered with matting or strips of fibre, is ornamented with a number of rugs, real rugs, warm hued, soft toned, and of a quality and pattern that could be used in the library of any home. Three or four of these rugs are scattered about on the floor. In the center of the lobby is a big Roman urn with a five-foot spread at the top; this urn is kept full of ornamental plants and trailing vines and other greenery in winter, and in hot weather it is replaced with a fountain. Smaller vases, some on stands and some of the self-supporting kind, are scattered around in the lobby. These are kept filled with fresh cut flowers, replenished daily. The glass in the doors that form the inclosure that shields the lobby from the street are draped with cable net curtains made especially for the theater, and bearing its name embroidered in the center.

Mrs. Cornelius says that when she planned the furnishings of the lobby she worked with one end in view, the comfort of the patrons of the theater. "If they have to stand up in the lobby and wait for their turn to see the show, I want them to have as nice and comfortable a place to wait as they would have in their own homes." The main auditorium of the West End Lyric seats 650 and the balcony 450. The entire house is equipped with everything that can possibly be put in a theater for the comfort and safety of its patrons. Comfortable seats, retiring rooms, wide aisles covered with real carpets, and every stitch and thread of the furnishings are in perfect good taste. There is not a loud or jarring note anywhere. Eighteen attendants, wearing grey uniforms, are employed, in addition to a carriage caller on the pavement in front of the theater. Ten and twenty cents admission is charged, and a first-class orchestra and a Victrola furnish the music. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius give the theater their personal attention, and divide their time equally between the downtown and the west end houses.

Kell on the Rack.

PUTTING up something for a rainy day is the latest from the Thanhouser theater, New Rochelle. It is a coat rack devised by John William Kellette, that is used only in wet weather. On dry days the check room inside suffices, but when a thunderstorm comes along a lobby rack is to be used. This is hinged to the wall. When it rains it is pulled out and up, a couple of braces are set and the rack is ready. It seems to be a good idea to be passed along. The best plan would be to make it of galvanized three-quarter inch pipe; just the oblong frame with a cross piece through the center with the hooks set into place. With the braces swinging into the frame the entire device need not extend into the lobby more than two inches when not in use. If desired light picture frames might be built on what is the top when the device is open and then the hanger will be ornamental when not useful. It can be adjusted in a couple of minutes. Better than hooks would be the regular wooden coat hangers. These could be stored in some handy place and run out when needed. Coats hung up wet will get out of shape if simply put on a hook. The hanger will ensure comparative freedom from wrinkles.

Fooling the Folks.

Another recent Kell stunt was worked with some of the Thanhouser players who are stockholders in the house. They made up a player as Chaplin, borrowed a spare camera and went out. They would pull up on the street and the director would rehearse a scene in which the Chaplin impersonator was bumped by an automobile. After several rehearsals the director would suddenly remember an effect and take a card from the auto. That read "Charles Chaplin in a Jitney Elopement. At the Thanhouser Theater Today." Then someone would hang similar signs on the sides and back of the car and run along to hunt fresh victims. The whole town was talking of the stunt and naturally big business was the result. Almost any small box with a crank and a lense can be used, and Chaplin impersonators are to be found in every town. A sell like this advertises the house as well as the current film and makes for good business when played right. Kell manages to keep New Rochelle awake, and it takes a lot to rouse that town from its lethargy.

Form Letters.

The National theater, Cleveland, seems to fancy form letters. J. J. Harwood sends in a couple and writes:

> We are very much interested in the page entitled "Advertising for Exhibitors" as well as the balance of the excellent journal that you publish for our benefit. I have intended at times to send in samples of our advertising and I am enclosing our publicity letter for the last two weeks. We have a mailing list of 500 and in addition we place these letters in racks in the theater. Since taking over the National we have increased the business 120 per cent. This looks big, but it is, nevertheless, true and we are not done yet. We also read your Advertising Helps to get pointers therefrom and if we can benefit our brother exhibitors with any helps we will be glad to do so. We might add that our opposition directly opposite our house runs four to six reels for a nickel. Ours is a dime every night and will never be less.

The sheets are six by nine and a half, white and drab paper. The type heading and lines at the sides and bottom are done in a good, strong red. The running text appears to be multigraph work. It is run on both sides of the sheet and is a straight running story with a list of each day's releases in tabular form with the number of parts. They run from six to eight reels for a show, and have six amateur acts on Friday. There is no particular splurge to the text. The patron is credited with having common sense and being able to know subjects without circus phrasing. They tell it interestingly and forcefully but without piling on the agony. It is good stuff and where a regular clientele is to be catered to it is better stuff than any other form. No effort is made to suggest that it is a personal letter. You are presumed to be interested in the house programs. You are told about them. It is more intimate than a printed circular but not familiar.

One thing we like is that the paper is suited to the job. They picked out stock that would work best in a reproducing machine and so they get a clean, readable impression. They probably could afford a better grade of paper, but they could not buy paper that would give better results. They seem to have looked at both sides of the question.

Paid on Account.

The Motion Picture Exhibition Company, of Newark through Ralph Harden, writes:

> Am enclosing two advertising tickets I thought might interest you.
>
> Our work is done mostly for the churches and society organizations, and although these tickets were gotten out for a church show, see no reason why the idea should not be used in connection with a regular house.
> Have gotten many useful hints from your department and would like to return the compliment.

The enclosure is a pair of tickets in a regulation theater ticket envelope. The only advertising on the outside is that for a local dry goods concern. It might seem as though this gave the other fellow the best of it, but this is not so. The chances are that the absence of advertising is precisely what will lead persons to believe that the contents are of value. Anything about the show would be read, but the envelope might not be opened, but here are two tickets in a regular envelope. They must be of value and they are read through to find that "This ticket and ten cents" is the proper combination. It is in regular ticket form and with a coupon; a workmanlike job throughout. Novelty advertising for church affairs is rather new. This is also good. Almost any big department store or other business will be glad to advertise on the back of a ticket envelope that is to be mailed out to a select list. They will at least cover the cost of stock and printing, leaving the house whole on that expense, and an envelope aids materially in the deception.

Uncertain Aim.

We think that the Broad Street theater, Elizabeth, is shooting at some other house when it runs this matter:

FIRST RUN PICTURES

> A favorite expression with many managers is that their productions are "first run"—as for example, first run Keystones, first run Paramount, etc. Do you know what first run really means? It is an experiment. What is commonly called in reference to the drama, a "try out." The motion picture of real merit, is the picture that has been thoroughly tried out and tested, and it is the wise manager who selects the film that has been proven popular with the public. For the public is uncertain and difficult to please.

PROJECTION, MIRROR SCREENS.

> The intense harshness sometimes noticed in the projection of a picture, where the intensely black figures are silhouetted against intensely white backgrounds is the result of the so-called mirror screens. True projection aims to get color, atmosphere and perspective in motion pictures—a clear and proper blending of lights and shadows. In other words, to get "color" even though the picture may be in monotone.
>
> Projection is one of the features that the Broad Street theater prides itself on. Its pictures are always clear and sharp, full of color and perspective, without that harshness that so frequently hurts the eye by its glaring contrasts.

It is not a good line to follow.

Improved.

The second number of the Theater Review, Tampa, Fla., shows evidence of more careful preparation of copy. It looks like a "comer" that could be developed into a second class mailing proposition in time.

Well Planned.

The Mutual Press Bureau has sent out the details of the Runaway June contest in excellent form. The contest for a state wide prize is an intricate proposition, but this is so simply planned that a small boy can master the idea in no time at all.

Hardly Good.

We don't care much for the opening announcement of the Strang theater, Sacramento, Cal. It is a four by six private mailing card on manila stock. It is a good advertisement as it stands, but not good enough for an opening announcement. Here pains should have been taken to do something a little out of the ordinary. A house breaking in must attract attention to itself and this does not suggest the class that should be the keynote of opening work. The card is well worded, particularly a line that reads:

> You will find in the Strand a theater with plenty of exits, well ventilated in summer and well heated in winter.

For the opening a formal announcement in shaded type on bristol card and as first-class mail would have been better. Manila cards should come later. And in getting out cards it is well to note that the card just a trifle larger than the average letters is almost certain to be crushed in the mails. It will be bundled with letter mail and the top will be bent over in tying up.

Another V. P.

A. I. Randall, of the Empire theater, Whitman, Mass., sends in a couple of vest pockets printed on white stock in black and bordered with one point rule in red. One is for the home house and the other for the Peerless, of North Abington. They are practically duplicates.

The size is convenient and the general idea is good, but the advertisements seem to have been more carefully considered than the program proper. Three-fourths of the front page is given to outside advertising, the house card being at the top. Not more than half of the front page should be sold, the house name should be set in a plainer face and the house card run in the centre with white space above and below and framed in rule heavier than that used for the advertising.

Inside the program is cut off into days with the same rule used to separate the advertisements; a single exception is page three of the Peerless program. If Mr. Randall will note how Bags of Gold stands out above all the rest, he will appreciate the value of white space. As it is, this is the only program box to be played up. The rest can be told from the advertisement only by catching at the lines. The trouble is that the program boxes are set too much like the advertisements. They should be given a different form, and should be framed with different rule. They should be made more prominent than the advertising. The program days should not be divided by the same rule used to separate the advertisements, but by a lighter face, save at sides, top and bottom. The cut shows the sameness of the make up. The program can be saved either by changing the style of setting it or by boxing it in with heavy rule. In this case it would seem that the best plan would be to box in with three point rule and divide into days by underscoring the different dates with one and a half or two point rule.

Quinn Queries.

James C. Quinn sends in another form of that Chaplin time table and says:

> What do you think of this idea? Does it strike you as being worth the cost. The Isis management usually has 3,000 of them printed at a cost of about $8.00, the distribution costing another $6.00, the pictures running a week, as stated, in the flyer.
> Here's how to your advertising book—I know it's going to be a winner. Consider my bid for California rights. It's surely up to all the exhibitors to get real busy and help you with photos, etc., to make it a top-notcher.

The new issue discards the railroad time table idea for a two column list of showings and comment. This suggests the idea:

10.08—MY FIRST SHOWING.
(Then I see "Millionaire $100 bill" and "Girl at Lone Point," on same program.)
11.28—MY SECOND SHOWING.
(Luncheon.)
12.48—MY THIRD SHOWING.
(Then out arranging for my next comedy.)
2.08—MY FOURTH SHOWING.
(Start scene of my new comedy.)
3.28—MY FIFTH SHOWING.
(Finish scene. Shown at ISIS SOON.

It probably costs less to set than the railroad style, for the latter is tabular work at an extra cost for composition. Possibly that is what made three thousand cost eight dollars. The six dollars for distribution probably means mailing out a part of the run, but we think that the cost could be cut a little and the rest be charged as an investment that brings interest, for, if the stuff has any pull at all, that railroad time table will pull better than anything else, because it is informative at a glance.

The slip is 3½ by 5½ folded once to get four pages. The back page could be sold for one large or two or three smaller ads. The front page can carry the present legend and still let in two ads, top and bottom, each three-fourths of an inch deep, and there is room for half inch strips, top and bottom, inside. That space for three thousand circulation should be worth mighty close to the eight dollars, and still give the house its proper publicity. The time table scheme is excellent; about the best thing we have struck lately for a continuous house. It is worth holding on to and training patrons to consult it each week.

We appreciate Mr. Quinn's comment on the book, but it is too late for photographs. By the time this gets into print we shall probably be drifting back to town with printer's copy. It is all done but the revise and copying. And exhibitors have helped. They have helped for the past three years.

Reverses.

T. W. Cannon, of the Majestic, Greenfield, Tenn., reverses the usual rule to box in the program. He lets the program run wild and untrammeled in a sense, but he tied up the advertising with two point rule. And he uses moderation in getting the advertising. There is one cross page on the inside and two at the top as well as two on the front page, top and bottom. They stand out well, yet there is not the slightest danger of one mistaking them for program. He dates his days very nicely and runs them between parallel rules—double line rules. The effect is unusual, but neat and orderly. He has just one sort of type for titles, a condensed eighteen point, one for sub-captions and a body type. The result is that the issue looks like a program instead of an experiment. You don't shudder at the thought that you must read all that. It does not suggest a task at all. And on the front page he has the name of the house in a large, readable letter, and he pushes the ads up out of the way. The only thing we can tell a man like that is to run a nice, chatty semi-editorial story on the back page and make that work for him, too. The rest is all right as it is, except that we might make more use of the players' names and set these in italic where used. The title alone gives the exhibitor less than half of what he is paying for. Mr. Cannon has a good printer, and that helps a lot, but he seems to know himself. He needs only to get that chatty back page stuff.

Good Work.

Earl Tinker represents the World Film Corporation in Maine. He has been getting out some "selling letters" that probably sell. Here is a short form essay on advertising that is worth reading:

> The exhibitor is nothing more nor less than a merchant. But does he use the merchant's methods? Very few of them do. They buy promiscuously and without regard for system, and sell in the same way. Do you suppose John Smith, who may run a grocery store in Squeedyunk, would advertise Deerfoot Farm Sausage this week, and Moosefoot Farm Sausage the next week? Not much he wouldn't. He knows that Deerfoot Farm Sausage are the best. He pays the price for them, and naturally he realizes that the more he sells, the more prestige he will gain in his community. New sausages with attractive names may be offered him. He may carry a side line of them, but he will still stick to Deerfoot Farm. That is what might be called good selling. The above, coupled with a continuous advertising campaign, would make this man's sausages known from one end of the town to the other and when sausages were mentioned everyone would say Deerfoot, the same as you say Fels Naphtha. Impress upon your people that there is only one kind of feature worth seeing and that must carry the World Film trademark. This can be done without knocking, and the less you knock, the better off you are. Or I too, for that matter.

It would be better still to get the reputation for being an expert on sausage and always having the best, but the exhibitor is a merchant in amusement. He is selling the public just as is the grocer and the butcher. And there are exhibitors who fail because they give short weight and sell stale goods, and who misrepresent just as does the butcher who sells butter for thirty-five cents that would be cheap at thirty.

And the short weight grocer gets found out and fails just as does the exhibitor who runs his stuff through so fast that the players in the first scene get mixed up with the tail piece, and the man who offers junk at feature prices goes out of business as surely as does the butcher who sells chuck steak at porterhouse prices. Be a good merchant, whether you sell pork or pictures, and you'll be a successful one.

Getting It Cheap.

George A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., is one of the early birds. He writes:

> By my paying for the matt service, a trifling weekly sum, the "Inquirer" gladly took on the Chaplin cartoons to run daily.
> The full page announcement herewith cost me not a penny. That these Chaplin cartoons will increase the popularity of the films and add to their drawing power is certain.
> Exhibitors in other small cities should arrange with one of their dailies likewise—that is, such as show the Chaplin comedies.

The full page is the announcement that the Owensboro Enquirer will run a daily cartoon of Chaplin, this being supplied in matrix by the Essanay Company through the Chicago Herald. Mr. Bleich pays for the matts, and gets the daily publicity that the running of straight stuff brings. He gets the Chaplin films and by using Chaplin cuts in his own advertising he connects the house with the series in the minds of the readers.

Spreading.

The Grand theater, Johnstown, Pa., sends in a quarter page advertisement of a gala week. It is set to suggest a straight reading notice, but does not quite carry out the suggestion. There is a two line, four column headline with four lines of twelve point caps. The human eye has to fight to get across nine inches of twelve point, particularly in capitals. The cut arrangement, too, is a bit too formal, a two column cut in the center page and four one column cuts, one in each corner. Breaking up this regularity would have been more like a news story and would have caught the eye more quickly. The matter is all in body type, a seven or eight point, and is easier to read than a succession of display boxes would have been. In this the move was good, but a two column head with a turn into the third or fourth columns would probably have worked harder for the house.

All See It.

R. Clayton Diggins, of the Gladstone theater, Gladstone, Mich., writes that he reads this paper first and then the operator, pianist, cashier and doorman all get a chance at it. That's a good plan. Keep them all posted and they'll work better and help to make fans. He sends in a couple of samples of his program, a vest pocket or news stock. We do not altogether like the ornament on the first page, though its light lines save it from being too pronounced. A smaller one would be better. Inside the space is divided to suit the copy instead of the copy being divided between the days. Days are dated and cut off with two point rule, no border. An eighteen point is used for a couple of features, but most of the titles are in ten point bold Gothic. One box announces "a fair show," to keep down expectation. Names of players should be in italic.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Cutting Down Expenses

Every time some big mechanical effect is used we get a lot more like it and a lot along the same destructive lines. Joe Smith goes to the theater and sees a boat blown up. He goes straight home and writes that story about a house blown up that he was afraid to write before. If they will blow up a ship they will blow up a shack. The story comes back time and again and Smith can't understand it. They blew up the ship, why not the shack?

The answer is simple. The ship went on the beach. Her back is broken and it will not pay to get her off. The insurance company pays the loss and salves the material. If there is a motion picture company in reaching distance they are asked if they want a chance. If they do, instead of stripping the ship and then blowing her hull apart by degrees the company gets the junk price for rigging and dynamites the ship as a whole. She is on the sand at low tide, but at high water she is apparently afloat but riding high. The picture looks all right. The salvors have the junk and the picture men a good negative with the deck scenes played on the same boat that is seen to be blown up and with the escape in the boats and all the rest.

Another picture will be made the next time they can get a cheap ship, but a house is another matter and there are the fire and police departments to be coaxed, the risk of damage to spectators or property and all that.

Almost always you can write stuff out of your script as well as write it in, but you must be careful to do it well. If you trick an auto accident by cutting until the car can be overturned, it will look faky, but if you have the train just miss the car there is a large margin of safety. You will not get such a visual punch as the tossed car, but you will have a story that can be worked. But if you discard the time-worn combination of train and automobile and have the villains mine the road, then you can get the real punch of the explosion and yet not lose the car if the mine is run off a second late because the second assistant heroine or the soubrette cuts in with a terrible struggle with the man who is to work the plunger of the detonator.

It is nice to have a shipwreck in your story to get the hero and heroine and the villain on the desert island, but it is better to get something that can be more easily worked to account for their presence there. Anyone can write in a shipwreck or a train wreck or a balloon on fire so high up in the air that the camera man has to stand on tiptoe to work the crank, but the really clever man, the man who is wanted around, is the man who can get the same effects more easily and at smaller expense. When you get a story with a shipwreck, keep on thinning it over until there is no longer a shipwreck.

Have all the railroad stories you want, but do not muss up the trains. Have all the boats you want, but do not scratch the paint or take them too far from the studio. Leave the actual destruction to the people around the studio who know what can be destroyed at the least expense. When the time comes for you to write that sort of stuff, you'll be in a position where you can know, too.

Paged Scenes.

A Los Angeles correspondent writes that lately he saw a book adaptation in which each scene and even each sub-title was written on a separate page. He wants to know if this is the studio practice.

In the same spirit Emmett Campbell Hall writes that he is trying to work out a new and more simple script with a scene to a page. Louis Reeves Harrison not only writes a scene to a page, but he gives in the margin the cast, the costumes and all similar detail and binds the script into a loose leaf book that all the scenes in one set may be taken out and worked at one time.

The page to a scene idea is all right where the author knows that the story will be done precisely as written. It does not pay the outside author to go to all this pains because his script is seldom followed to the letter. It is only a matter of time when the fuller technique will be in demand, but even then the scene to a page and page to a scene should be left to the studio writer.

Risky.

Lately a man wrote that he had been given a copyrighted sketch that he was authorized to turn into a film play, but that later the man who gave him the right told him that the copyright had been lost. Copyrights are not lost. The record card may be lost, but the loss of the card does not nullify the copyright, and a new card can be had for a small fee. The probabilities are that the generous donor had no right to the sketch and when cornered took this way out of it. The situation would be of no interest did it not remind us that lots of people get into trouble through accepting ideas from generous friends. For some reason, or no reason whatever, the G. F. presents an aspiring author with an idea. The author does not recognize it as a steal, writes it out, submits in good faith, and is marked by the studios as a cheap thief, an undeserved, but none the less lasting reputation. Only the other day one of our pupils sent in a synopsis that was really a vaudeville sketch we used to be able to recite backward. When taxed with the offense the friend who gave it admitted the source of the idea, but "didn't suppose that mattered." It does. You are required to state on your honor that the idea is yours. That is was really given you by a friend is no excuse in the eyes of the law should a company decide to prosecute you, as an example to others, for obtaining money under false pretenses. If you cannot think original plots, do not look to your friends. Wait until you can think up plots before you try to sell. And selling or trying to see a joke so old it is common property and could not be copyrighted is no palliation of the offense. Perhaps you never heard that particular joke but most editors know why a hen crosses the street, and about the monkey that was the target for brakemen on passing coal trains. Don't do it.

Sonorous Leaders.

Albert L. Stillman rises to argue in favor of the flowing leader in place of the short, sharp and over-harsh sentence. He calls it writing screen poems with poetical leaders. He is writing for a company that seems to want "andante tempo with a poetic touch," and he says:

> Curiously enough, such line of work seems to do away with the idea of avoiding leaders or putting them in crisp sharp language, and has forced me to attempt poetic expression. The idea is that such expression puts the audience in harmony with the piece, and helps their appreciation of stuff where tense situation and gripping melodrama are practically absent. Of course it means extra footage, but if I attain what I am driving at it will be well worth while.
> Take your article on "Getting it Over" in the last World. Supposing the story to be a screen poem, and it reads very much like one to my mind, I should probably with malice prepense handle it this way:
> 46 * * * John is about to replace when he sees message—stands irresolute—Cut in
> "For shadows dark and evil flee the beacon light of Love."
> 46a. Close up of John's face, registering complete change of mental and moral attitude.
> 46b. Back to 46. Action as before.
> Remember I'm not offering the above as an attainment, but simply a shot in a certain direction. There are certain advantages. Stock expressions as "Later," That Night, etc., have no place in the screen poem. And if leader or insert have to do with subsequent action, they simply hint at it without giving away the entire story before it is acted out.
> Furthermore, I think it advantageous that such inserts or leaders should scan correctly if possible.
>
> Take another illustration—A Screen Poem involving the Civil War. Stock pictures of a battle which lasts all day, ending in defeat of the Confederates. Two inserts would naturally be used—A DESPERATE BATTLE ALL DAY, and THE CONFEDERATES RETREAT. Suppose we used the following respectively:
> FROM SUN TO SUN UNCERTAIN POISED SUCCESS, and * * * AND CROWNED AT EVE THE PENNONS OF THE BLUE. * * *
> Is it improved? I think it is, provided the picture itself is poetic in spirit. If the picture is melodrama the poetic leader becomes just so much rediculum—like "Jove in a thatched house."

Mr. Stillman wants to reserve this to screen poems (which are, by no manner of means screened versions of poems), but there is a wider scope. It is possible to give rhythm and cadence to even leaders for melodrama. It is all in scanning the lines.

If the type machines were geared to give metrical marks there would be a succession of lines and curves over these words, but suppose you imagine them. They are used to place the accent. If you read the marks instead of the words and let "de" represent an accent and "da" an unstressed word, you would get something like this:

da de; da de; da de; da de;

Now read the line.

The Curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

You'll get the same accents that are represented by these word symbols. It represents each alternate syllable emphasized. You may find other measures that will give the accent to every third syllable, as de da da: de da da: de da da; de da da:

Read the first verse of The Bridge of Sighs:

One more unfortunate gone to her rest.

For leader work you can devise other meters to suit yourself so long as they retain the rhythm of repetition. To use a simple illustration the rhythmic leader is like the sound of men marching in ordered step; a steady, measured footfall, where the chance leader is like the tread of a mob, irregular, unmusical and unpleasing. Give a swing to your words and whether or not you know your rhetoric you will be able to give cadence to your phrase. It is not, of course, always to be used. It is valuable only when a certain richness of phrase will harmonize with the subject of the story. You cannot say:

"The maiden saw and seeing fell his slave."

When you are writing a farce comedy in which the better leader would be:

Aggie falls for Angus.

But neither would you use the latter form for an idyl to which the first leader would be better suited.

Boiled down it all means, "Pay attention to your accents, have them fall in regular order and you will obtain a smooth sounding leader," but it is useful to remember this when you want that sort of leader.

Comedy and Tragedy.

When you get an idea that is so tragic that you know it will not sell, why not make it over into a comedy and get rid of it?

There is only a narrow step between drama and comedy, a space so narrow that sometimes you fall unknowingly from one to the other. Nothing can be more pathetic than the sight of a mother weeping over her dead child. But suppose we know that the child is not dead but has been spanked and that the wails come from the child and not the mother. We create a character who overlooks the scene, spreads the story of the death of Mrs. Jones' little Jonnie and all come to condole to be driven away by a broom wielded by the irate Mrs. Jones who thinks they have come to censure her for whipping the child. Hamlet is one of the greatest tragedies in our language. Hank Stephens pretending to be crazy to get away from a breach of promise suit brought by the village old maid is not so impressive as the story of Hamlet and Ophelia, and yet there are few essential points of difference beyond the actuating motive.

Prices Abroad.

Bannister Merwin has helped a lot to build up prices for scripts in England, but France is still in the dark ages. The other day a man who is in close touch with the French sales—such as they are—told of some of the prices actually offered. One Italian company offers as high as $20 for the best work, a story with a tremendous punch and a dozen crises, but this is unusual. The general top price with the French companies is ten dollars and the average nearer five. Of course it sounds better expressed in francs at five to the dollar, but even at that the price is small, the market being even smaller.

Both Right.

Answering an inquiry in the Chicago Herald, Mrs. Parsons tells a correspondent that "Sargent and Wright are both right," in some minor points of difference. She might have taken the two line reply as a text for the entire column, for this is one of the rocks on which so many craft are wrecked when steered by novice captains. The matter in question was that of scene plot. Mr. Wright's scene plot is very like our own, so like that we cannot understand what the query was about, but some quibbler found some small variation and right away becomes puzzled. They are studying technique and not photoplay writing. They are building up a mechanical form without providing for material to use in that form.

No intelligent editor is going to refuse a story that is really good just because it is provided with a single spaced scene plot instead of double spaced or vice versa. The fact that the story is written on thirteen inch paper instead of eleven inch length will not affect the value of the plot. That isn't even real technique. It is merely form. It is very helpful to the author to be able to get his story out in such form that the first impression pleases, but it is better that he should have the technique that permits him to plot the story into scenes of action to the best possible advantage. All writers differ somewhat in the minor points of technique, but all good ones agree on the main points. If one writer tells you to say "leader" and another "sub-title" call it whichever you please, and spend your time worrying about the absolutely perfect polish of that leader or sub-title. That is what counts.

Create.

Try to originate ideas. If you see that a certain type of story is making a hit, don't write that type of story. All the others who cannot think for themselves are doing the same sort of stuff, whether it be girl detectives, girl railroaders or girl lawyers. Figure it out that hundreds of stories along that line are flooding the studios, particularly the studio that created the type. Figure that the editor will groan, remark that it is another one of those things, and shoot it back. Think along other lines and be among the select few. Anyone can follow a leader. You blaze your own trail.

Why Not?

"Can you kill a lion in a picture? I have a story with a lion killed, but I don't want to work it up unless I can sell it."

Now it's foolish to write stuff you know you cannot sell, but why take the position that unless you can kill the lion you will have no story? You would not say you could not write a story in red ink and had no black writing fluid. You would go get some brunette ink. In the same way, if you cannot write the story with a lion assassination, go get some other plot factor. Of course it could be done this way.

73—Jungle—Paul raises gun—takes aim.
74—Jungle—Lion crouched for spring.
75—Jungle—Paul fires. Turns, calls, Bess runs in—they exit to lion.
76—Jungle—Lion lying dead—Paul and Bess run in.

That could be done, because, if they have no lion trained to play dead they can chloroform one or the press agent can put him into a twilight sleep. But it is possible to get rid of the lion shooting entirely, unless it is the sole punch of the story, and if that is all the punch you have it is not a story at all, but a mistake.

Not on the Job.

A. W. Thomas, in spite of his suggestion of "personal" instruction, is not on the job, it would appear. A recent letter, returning a fee, following a complaint to the postal authorities, and signed by G. E. Still, manager, says:

> We are very sorry indeed that the proposed arrangement between us has of necessity come to an end. We did feel that Mr. Thomas would be able to take care of the work for you in a thoroughly efficient manner and had the hope and belief that your working together would develop (!) to a point where you would be most gratifyingly successful and into which success we would enter and share.
> We are frank in saying that the reason for this falling down on the part of the Association is because shortly before Christmas Mr. Thomas' health received quite a blow resulting from a long stretch of overwork and while we aided him by giving him additional assistance of high class ability along the required lines, through doctor's orders we were forced to let him take a trip to the Pacific coast with the anticipation that an absence of three weeks at the outside would put him in shape to handle with such assistance as necessary the work laid out for him. His recovery has not materialized as fast as we expected and because of this we have been obliged to relieve him of some of the extra pressure work such as yours would have called for because we could not feel the security of giving excellent measure of service by him in these particular cases, as well as take care of the rest of the work that is entailed upon him.

Evidently the "assistance of high class ability" was not that of the consulting editors, for of these Bennie Schulberg is the only one who has not come out flat-footed to deny the connection, and he is not doing any work but merely permitting the use of his name uncontradicted.

Some high-class ability might be spend teaching the typist to spell and punctuate properly and smoothing down Mr. Still's labored expression. Nothing in the numerous circular letters sent out by the Association definitely states that Mr. Thomas will give his personal service in instruction, but all of the letters suggest that he will do so, and doubtless many enrollments are gained through this suggestion, and yet the manager of the Association admits that Mr. Thomas is too sick to perform his duties—though he does not change the wording of the form letters.

Gives Them a Chance.

When you have genuinely good reason to believe that a script of yours has been used and not paid for, don't mail the offending company a cyclone of abuse and sarcasm. Take it for granted that the company wants to pay and you're likely to find that they do. Twice lately authors have asked advice as to a supposed theft, have been given this counsel and have found that the company wanted to pay but did not know where to send the money. Once the single address had been torn from the dog-eared script in the course of production and in the other instance no address had been supplied, save on the return envelope, which had been lost.

Don't fly off the handle until you are assured that there has been an intentional theft and usually you'll find there was some mistake. Get a company sore and they will pay for the script, but they will not feel inclined to send a fat check in return for abuse.

Animal Stories.

There seems to be an unusual lot of persons writing stories with menageries in them right now. At best there are few companies using this sort of stuff and they set their standards so high that little from the general market is accepted. It does not pay to write this special stuff unless you have a direct and definite arrangement with some producer of such material.

Keep to stuff that may be made by almost any company. Then if you fail in one place you may win at another. Of course it would be nice to tell your friends that you wrote the story where the lady is almost eaten by the lions, but think of all the paper and stamps and nervous energy you are consuming.

Recognizing Plots.

A writer wants to know what is to be done if, while she is working on one plot a second comes into her head that seems to be stronger and better. She has been working to get one plot down before she passes on to another, but the thing to do is to note the lesser of two plots and to give the moment to the stronger and more vivid idea. It will probably be found that this latter idea is the better if for no other reason than that the mind, for the moment, is attuned to the second idea and not to the first, which may have been held over from a previous sitting. Get the best plots you can, no matter how you have them come to you. If your original plot has a hard time against a newcomer idea, help the newcomer kick the plot out of the way. The real plotting trick is to make a note of all plots but to work on the one that seems best suited to the mood of the moment.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 88.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Would there be any considerable difference in current flow as between using 10 inches of ⅝ inch cored upper and 6 inches of ½ inch solid lower, and a 4-inch upper and a 3-inch lower, same sizes, carbon in your lamp? Is the resistance of a hot carbon higher or lower than when it is cold? What is the difference between ordinary standard arc lamp carbons, such as are used in street lamps, or flaming arc carbons, and projection carbons?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 82.

There were a number of excellent replies to Question 82. In fact, it was again a rather difficult proposition to select the best one. I think, however, everything considered, probably the reply of Tacoma, Washington, is best suited for publication, though I must compliment Baltimore, Maryland, on the very excellent drawing he sent in. Viewed as a drawing it was worthy of a professional draftsman, but viewed from the point of understandableness in explaining the answer, I believe Tacoma's is somewhat better. Brother Solar also sent in a very good drawing, made on tracing linen.

The Roll of Honor consists of the following: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. C. Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; Tacoma, Washington; Baltimore, Maryland; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana; William Lee, Fort Worth, Texas; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Maine; A. H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Ontario, and Brandon, Manitoba (no name signed).

Reply to Question No. 82.

By Tacoma, Washington.

The Question:

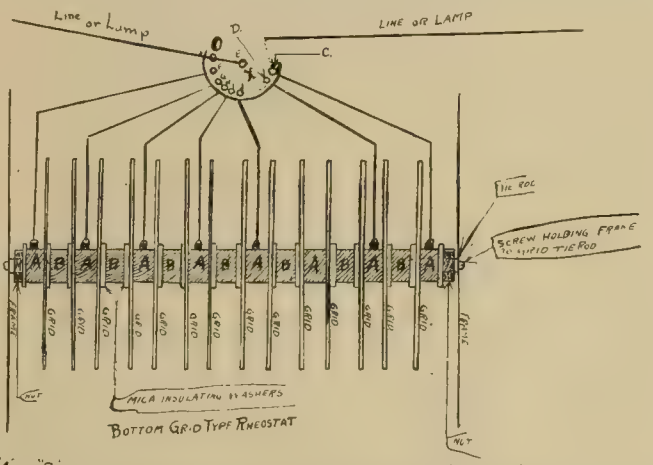
Tell us what care you would give your rheostat connections. Illustrate, by sketch, the arrangement of the insulation in a grid rheostat. Suppose a grid broke in the only rheostat you had, how would you make a quick, temporary repair?

The Answer:

The necessary care to be given a rheostat will vary with the kind of rheostat and the size of the load, but safe instructions would be to make frequent and comprehensive inspections of all connections at set intervals of time, meaning by "all connections" not merely the main terminals, but the terminals of the wires connecting individual coils with the adjustment contacts, if it be an adjustable rheostat, and also, if it be a wire rheostat, the connection or connections where one coil joins another. The voltage consumed in a rheostat is dissipated in heat, and, that being the case, the connections, as well as the coils themselves, are subject to heat, and, since copper oxidizes under the action of heat, if left too long without attention, a thin, almost invisible scale of oxidized copper will form on the copper part of the connection. This scale has very high resistance and, in consequence, causes undue heating at that point; also it increases the resistance of the rheostat. It matters not that the operator cannot see this scale, he may only be sure it is not there by keeping all the copper connections bright and tight, therefore the connection watchword is: "Tight and bright."

In some forms of coil rheostats the coils are continuous, and this is by all means the best form of wire coil rheostat, and requires much less attention than the separate coil type. Where the coils are separated from each other and are joined together by some sort of connection it is a big mistake to assume that this connection requires no attention. The coils should be taken apart at stated intervals, the length of which will depend upon the amount of load the rheostat is carrying and the number of hours it works each day, and thoroughly cleaned, but, since resistance wire also oxidizes to some extent, the cleaning of the parts will lessen the diameter of the wire slightly, and the time may come, if certain types of connections are used, when there will no longer be good contact between the coils, and this is something that must be looked out for. The type of connection referred to acts somewhat the same as a vise. It is made of brass and is squeezed together on the end of the coil wire by a screw, though the screw itself does not touch the wire at all.

If a grid broke in the only rheostat I had, I would loosen the nut on the tie rods which bind the grids together, slack these nuts off by a



A and B are spacing washers. A carrying current B is separated from the grids by mica insulating washers two of which are pointed out. The top is the same as this except that A is insulated from the grids instead of B and no provision is made for wire connection The tie rod is inside of a tube of insulating material so that there can be no electrical connection between it and the grids or washers. E is the connecting binding post for butterfly switch X. C and D are also binding posts D to be used on less than 110 volts. J, I, H, G, and F cut in more resistance as the switch X is moved from O being the binding post. J to F O and E are really joined on the under side of the switch plate or base little more than the thickness of a No. 6 solid wire, first, of course, having removed the casing of the rheostat; then, having flattened a No. 6 wire somewhat with a hammer, I would slide it in between the grids and clamp it between the broken grid and its spacing washer, and then tighten the tie-rod nuts up tight again. This would have the effect of cutting out the broken grid, or bridging across it with a copper wire, but care should be taken that this wire does not come into actual contact with the grid on either side of the broken one. It would be a good scheme to slip a piece of sheet asbestos in on either side of the wire—not where it makes contact, of course, but between the grids.

Effect of Loss of Definition.

One factor enters very largely into projection which is very little understood by the average manager and operator. This matter has been called to my attention by Mr. Nicholas Power of the Nicholas Power Company, and while I have never thought of it in that connection before, I believe Mr. Power is absolutely correct.

Patrons frequently complain that the "Pictures hurt their eyes" even when there is no trace of flicker. Managers and operators have been puzzled to account for this. Mr. Power's explanation of the matter is as follows:

Take a carbon copy of a letter or long article and attempt to read it. You will find that before you have read very far your eyes may begin to hurt and even to water. The reason for this is found in the blurry appearance of the copy, and the more blurry the carbon, the greater will be the effect on the eye.

The same holds true with pictures. If the definition on the screen be not absolutely sharp, the effect on the eye is a strain, and not only is this effect at present where there is lack of definition through fault of the camera or the projection lens, but it is also present where there

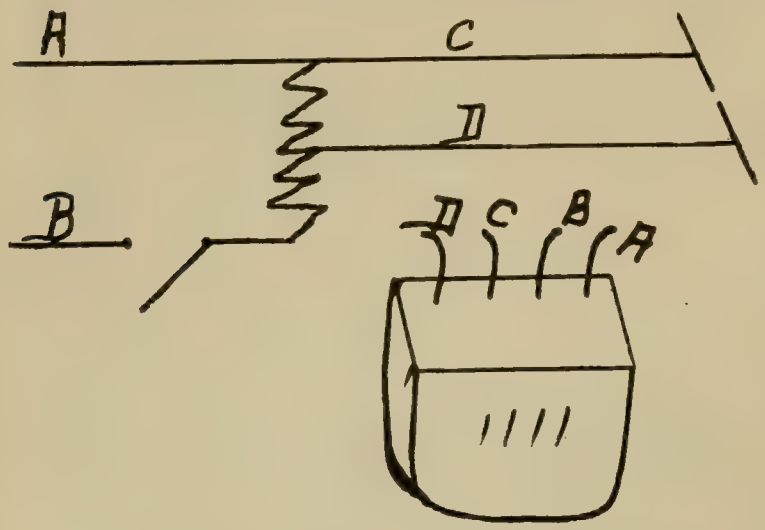
This, it seems to me, is an important point and, moreover, it is a new point. I believe this is the first time it has received consideration. I would advise managers to look into this matter and to use every endeavor to have the definition on their screen as sharp as it can possibly be made, and travel ghost entirely eliminated. Of course, we all know that from any point of view the loss of definition and travel ghost is bad, but viewed in this light it becomes double obnoxious.

Fort Wayne Compensarc.

A. C. Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon, says:

As there is considerable discussion just now regarding operating room transformers and motor generators, a few words on the Fort Wayne compensarc might not come amiss, particularly as this device is used by a great many operators.

When the lever is in the off position the carbon clamps are apparently dead. In reality they are both alive, though the circuit is open and no current can flow. But if the system is grounded and the operating room is also grounded, the operator can get the full benefit of the available E.M.F. The reason is as follows: The lever cuts out the transformer by opening the primary circuit on one side only, so that it acts as a single-pole switch. Now the Fort Wayne compensarc is an auto transformer and the sketch will show what happens.



In using this device either the line wire acted on by the lever (the one nearest the middle of the coil) should be connected to the side of the circuit that is not grounded (seems to me it should be just the opposite—Ed.) or the transformer should be cut in and out by a double-pole switch on the primary leads.

I don't remember just how the Fort Wayne is connected up, but presume Brother Steward's statement is correct. In any event, however, the transformer should be on the lamp side of the operating switch, so that when the operating, or machine, switch is open the transformer is dead.

A Queer Thing.

An unsigned letter, presumably from Charles Storch, Casino Theater, Republic, Washington, says:

I am running a 1909 Motiograph, and have yet to see the house using first run that can put a better, steadier picture than my machine does, though I have added a few attachments of my own make which is the cause of this. As far as light goes, I have yet to see a better illuminated screen, but to accomplish this I made quite a few changes in my lamphouse and condenser mount. It took long, painstaking and weary experiments to accomplish this, and, in the rough, this is what I did. First, I made my whole lamphouse, rack and all, movable, and then tried different distances between lamphouse and projector, finally taking the lamphouse off its rack and setting it further away from the mechanism, so that now the lamphouse extends considerably over the tail end of the base-board. This, in conjunction with moving the whole lamphouse rack back as far as I could on the base-board has given me a combination which produces the dandiest kind of light, even with A. C., though I now use a Wagner 35 ampere converter. This change has also enabled me to keep the arc further away from the condensers, so much so that the condenser next the arc even now, after six years' of use, shows not the least bit of pockmark, which is the result of particles of hot carbon eating into the glass. And now here is an oddity. I must set my carbons out of line perpendicularly something like one-eighth of an inch, and maintain them there, in order to get perfect results. If I line my carbons perpendicularly I have a faint blue spot in the center of the screen which I cannot eliminate, also a faintly perceptible yellow discoloration around the edges, but as soon as I move the upper carbon out of true, and to one particular side, which is toward me while in operating position, the blue spot and discoloration entirely disappear, and there is a clear sparkling field. I am unable to accomplish this in any other way, as has been proven by the most exhaustive and thorough trials. I have complete control of my arc at all times, both sidewise and perpendicularly by means of two attachments of my own. So far as I can see this condition can only be caused by the condensers being slightly out of square with the center of the light from arc to aperture. Moving the arc bodily to one side or the other will not overcome the blue spot or discoloration. If you think this might put some of the boys on the track of hunting down trouble, I shall be amply repaid for the time expended in writing.

Occasionally there come in things of this kind for which there seems no possible explanation. Brother Storch says, in effect, that moving the arc over by setting his carbons out of line perpendicularly sidewise accomplishes a certain thing, whereas moving it over, by moving the lamp over, which so far as I can see would be exactly and precisely the same thing in effect, does not accomplish the result. Well, it is a nut for some of you to try your hammer on. I take it that the brother has his lamp angled in the usual way. As to keeping your arc back a long ways from the condenser it has, of course, its advantages, but it means a waste of light, therefore I don't advise it. It is cheaper to buy condensing lenses than current, and looking at Fig. 134, Page 334 of the Handbook, you will observe that moving the lens back from the light source involves heavy light loss.

Looks Like Plumbing.

Floyd Junkin, Moorhead, Minnesota, is in trouble as follows:

I project a 14 foot picture 110 feet, using a large size Gundlach lens, assembled as per your instructions, the largest bulge of all lenses being nearest the screen; also the aperture plate is new and clean, as also are the sprockets and tension shoes, but the left side of the picture cannot be placed in perfect focus unless some other part of it is thrown out of focus. It is not very great, but it is noticeable, especially in titles. Some time ago I disassembled the machine, including the front lens plate and ever since then have had this trouble. Have tried placing small pieces of tin under one side of the aperture, but this did no good. What in the world is the matter? I have one of your invaluable Handbooks—it is priceless. I have read it through many times, and it and the department are a great help to operators. I would like to shake your hand for the way you landed on the film exchanges recently. Mr. Laemmle's "Straight from the Shoulder Talks" are very good, but, as you say, he does not reach the real seat of a large percentage of the trouble. The operators, of course, do a lot of damage, but not by any means all of it. I enclose a specimen of splicing which looks something like a job of plumbing. It was amputated from a Universal film which came to me direct from the Minneapolis Exchange, and bore the "Inspected Slip."

I am sending this splice to the Universal folks with the suggestion that they ask their Minneapolis office whether they consider a film containing a patch of this kind as having been properly inspected. The splice is by actual measurement 1 1/16 inches in length.

As to the light trouble, why it is something of a problem, but I would suggest, first; in reassembling you possibly got a very faint finger mark on one of the glasses. You may not be able to see that mark by looking through the lens, still it might cause such an effect as you name, although if you really can sharpen one side by throwing the other side out, and vice versa, I don't think that is the trouble. First have your exchange send you another lens and try that. If the picture is sharp all over, then the trouble is in the lens. Possibly you haven't one of the factors of the lens set squarely in the tube. There might be a bit of dirt under one side which throws it out of square, though I hardly think that is possible. The fact that changing the aperture plate does not alter the effect makes me think the thing is in the lens itself. However, be sure that the lens tube is in line (I take it that your machine sets square with the screen sidewise). On the whole, however, I think the trouble must be in the lens itself.

The Arc Controller.

The Arc Controller is a comparatively new invention, but has already proven its thorough practicability, and carries with it the endorsement of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World.

I have talked with many operators who are actually handling the controller, and only in one instance has any dissatisfaction been expressed; that being a case where the voltage was extremely variable. On the other hand many high class managers and operators are emphatic in their endorsement of the device.

The function of the controller is to automatically feed the carbons of the arc lamp. Its method of accomplishing this is quite simple, and thoroughly positive.

Broadly speaking, the amperage of the arc is regulated by the voltage of the arc, and no matter whether current be taken through a rheostat, directly from a generator, or through a transformer, any change in voltage across the arc will cause corresponding change in amperage at the arc. If the voltage rises, the amperage drops; if the voltage drops, the amperage rises. This is what may be termed the immutable law of the electric arc.

The Arc Controller operates as follows: In Fig. 1, A is a small motor which drives the mechanism of Controller B, illustrated in Fig. 2. Controller B, Fig. 1, is connected to the arc lamp by means of rod 2, Figs. 1 and 3, this rod being driven by gear 44, Fig. 1 and Fig. 2. By tracing through the connection, you will see that motor A is thus positively and directly connected to rod 1, Fig. 3, which is commonly known as the "feed handle" of the arc lamp—the handle by means of which the carbons are fed together. Motor A, Fig. 1, is connected to the line by means of wires contained in cable 9, Fig. 1, the other end of which is seen at 7, Fig. 1, where it joins the fuse box. The motor is not connected directly to the supply line, but to the projection machine table switch contacts, through cables 8, Fig. 1, which are controlled by switch 5, Fig. 1. It will thus be seen that motor A does not receive the full line voltage, but only the arc voltage, which varies with the length of the arc. Now, even the novice will understand that the speed of motor A will depend upon the voltage of the current with which it is supplied, hence, any rise in arc voltage, no matter how small, will increase the motor's speed.

Referring to Fig. 3, knurled knob 12 passes through fibre disc 9, through the end of brass lever 16, and impinges on the surface of fibre disc 8.

Brass lever 16 is hinged to a steel collar which passes over and is attached to feed rod 1, Fig. 3. Now, when knurled knob 12 is backed off, (unscrewed somewhat), it has the effect of unlocking fibre disc 8 and driving gear 4, from fibre disc 9 and feed rod 1. In other words, when knob 12 is loosened, or backed off, the lamp becomes a plain hand-fed lamp, of which fibre disc wheel 9 is the feeding knob or wheel, and the motor is allowed to drive gear 4 and fibre disc 8, without moving rod 1, Fig. 3. Conversely, when knurled knob 12 is screwed in the whole thing is locked together, and the motor then drives lamp feed rod 1, Fig. 3, direct, by means of gear 6 acting on gear 4, thus feeding the carbons of the lamp together. To make matters still more clear, gear 4 and fibre disc 8 merely use rod 1 as an axle. They are entirely independent of disc 9 and rod 1, except when locked to them by knurled knob 12. When not so locked, gear 4 and disc 8 can rotate without in any way effecting disc 9 and rod 1. The operation of the feed is as follows: when the operator is ready to strike his arc, he closes switch 5, Fig. 1, which starts motor A running, but it is only driving fibre disc 8 and gear 4, Fig. 3. The operator now strikes his arc by means of the hand feed (disc 9, Fig. 1), in the usual way, adjusts it at approximately the right length, and then screws in knurled knob 12, which locks the mechanism together, and thereafter he theoretically need give the arc no further attention whatever.

You will observe I said "theoretically"; this by reason of the fact that faults in the carbon and things of that sort may make it necessary to occasionally work the hand feed. As a general proposition, however, the controller takes care of the entire situation, so far as feeding of the carbons be concerned, and I have myself seen a full show of eight reels run without the operator at any time touching the arc lamp, except to strike and set the arc at the beginning of each reel. The controller maintains a perfectly steady arc voltage, hence a perfectly steady arc amperage and even light density.

THE CONTROLLER. Fig. 2 is an interior view of controller B, Fig. 1, with cap 1, Fig. 1, removed. In this view gear 10 is the gear which meshes with gear 44, Fig. 2, which drives rod 2, Fig. 1. Now follow me closely: spring 41, Fig. 2, is attached to pawl 23 by slipping bend 42 into the eyehole in 22 of part 23, Fig 2. This has the effect, when cover 40 is in place, of holding part 23 back, in the direction of the arrow point 34. 28-28 are governor weights attached to governor cross bar 27, by means of hinge pin 47, and right here is what might be termed the heart of the whole machine. Part 33 swivels upon part 32 and the whole governor is attached to the main driving shaft by pin 38 in part 27. 31 is a steel tooth driven through part 23, and protruding about ⅛ in. on the side next to wheel 16. Now, all the parts between part 27½, which is a ball bearing, and part 26, another ball bearing, which includes the entire governor, revolve at the speed of the motor, and weights 28-28 are held normally in, by means of spring 41 which holds part 23 back against ball bearing 26, which in turn presses back part 32, carrying pins 25 which bear on the inner end of the arm carrying weights 28-28, as shown by dotted lines. Before going any further study this action closely, and get it firmly fixed in your mind.

Now here is how the thing operates. The motor runs constantly, but its speed increases as the length of the arc increases, because the voltage increases with length of arc, and as a result of the increased motor speed, governor weights 28-28 are thrown out against the pull of spring 41, which has the effect of forcing part 32, ball bearing 26 and part 23 ahead, thus engaging tooth 31 with one of stop teeth 15 on wheel 16.

Gears 14-17-29 form a "differential," gear 29 being attached to wheel 16, gear 14 to shaft 19 (by means of pin 13), and gear 17 to gear 18. Underneath gear 18 is a worm gear attached to the shaft connecting the controller to the motor—the main driving shaft. This worm gear drives worm gear 18, mounted and riding loosely on shaft 19. When the motor is running, but the arc is not being fed, the motor continues to drive gear 18, but, wheel 16 being free to turn, the differential acts and gear 29 simply runs around on gear 13, without operating gear 10. A moment's study will, I think, enable you to understand this action. It is very similar to the action of the differential of an automobile. Gear 29 must rotate gear 10, which in turn drives gear 44 and rod 2, Figs. 1 and 2, and through it lamp feed handle 1, Fig. 3, thus feeding the lamp carbons together, shortening the arc and reducing the voltage so that the motor slows up, whereupon spring

41 overcomes the lessened centrifugal force acting on weights 28-28, so that they are pulled inward, which disengages tooth 31 from tooth 15, which causes the differential to act and the carbons are no longer fed.

The speed necessary to cause tooth 31 to engage tooth 15 will depend entirely upon the tension of spring 41, which is regulated by nut 46 on bolt 45, Fig. 2 (3, Fig. 1) and this tension must be adjusted by the operator as soon as he has the controller connected up, as will be hereinafter explained.

OIL. The well, formed by the gear casing, should be kept half full with a good grade of dynamo oil. Oil is poured in through oil well

14, Fig. 1, and it should reach the level of the top of the spout. One filling of good lubricant ought to last about 500 running hours. Before refilling, remove the plug in the opposite end of 14, Fig. 1, drain out all the old oil, replace the plug, fill the well with kerosene and let the machine run for a few minutes; drain the kerosene out and then refill with clean oil.

CAUTION: You are cautioned against the use of the very thin, much advertised oils. They are totally unfit for use on such machines as this. The manufacturers of the controller recommend "Solar Red" Oil.

I do not personally know anything about this lubricant, but presume it is good. In any event, however, a good grade of dynamo oil will serve the purpose. If the Solar Red Oil can be had, use it; if not, use the other, which you can no doubt obtain from your local electric light company, or from any reliable oil dealer.

CONNECTING THE MACHINE. When a controller is received and unpacked, examine the packing carefully, making sure that no small parts are thrown away. Also remember that the manufacturer will not recognize claims for shortage unless made immediately after receipt of the machine. The apparatus will consist of the following: (a) The controller and motor, connected together in one unit, as shown in the lower half of Fig. 1, including cables 7, 8, 9 and the fuse box as shown in Fig. 1. All this will be found coupled together when received. (b) Telescope rod, 2, Figs. 1 and 2, consisting of a steel rod inside a brass tube. (c) Collar 1½, part 3, including gear 6, fork 7 and universal joints 13, Fig. 3. (d) Gear 4, fibre knobs 8 and 9 and part 16.

After unpacking and inspecting the parts, proceed as follows: First, set the controller and motor, B-A, Fig 1, on the floor immediately under the feed rod handle of the arc lamp. It may be set on a block high enough to raise it out of the dirt—say 3 to 6 inches, if desired. If necessary, the controller may be set a little to one side, or a little back, if the conduit carying the lamp leads is in the way. Within the limits of the reach of telescopic rod 2-2, Figs. 1 and 3, the position of the controller may be changed. The idea is shown in Fig. 6.

CAUTION: In this connection be very careful not to get the controller so far away from a position underneath the lamp feed handle that universal joint 4, Fig. 1, and the universal joint 13, Fig. 3, will be at too great an angle and bind. It is hardly probable that you would do this, but it is nevertheless possible, and must be guarded against.

Having placed the controller, next take off the feed wheel, or knob, from the rod which feeds the carbons of your lamp, and slip collar 1½, Fig. 3, on the rod. Now, take part 3, carrying gear 6 and fork 7, in your left hand, and gear 4 and fibre knobs 8 and 9 in your right hand, and fit them together so that gear 6 meshes properly with gear 4, and the hole through the hollow stem, 18, Fig. 3, is clear, except for the pin passing through it. Having fit the parts together in your hand, slip the whole thing on rod 1, first having removed knob 17, Fig. 3, or the knob of some other rod which comes most directly under rod 1, and make fork 7 straddle the rod; after which knob 17 should be replaced. It may not be necessary to remove knob 17. Very likely you can get the fork over the rod without. The reason for fork 7 straddling one of these rods, is to prevent part 3 from turning—to hold it stationary. Slip these parts on rod 1 until its end strikes the pin which you will see, in hole 18, about ½ in. from the surface of the fibre knob. This pin must not be removed. If the parts do not go on the rod easily do not try to force them but find out what is wrong and remedy it. Having accomplished this, tighten up set screw 15, Fig. 3, good and tight. Bring back collar 1½ to about the thickness of a postal card from the sleeve inside part 3, and tighten its set screw. Now all you have to do is to connect rod 2, Figs. 1 and 3, with universal joints 4, Fig. 1, and 13, Fig. 3, and remove the wooden plug from the cover of the controller. Its use is to preserve in transit, the oil with which the controller is filled. The hole that is protected is a "breather," and must be left open when the controller is in operation, which completes the mechanical installation.

If gear 6, Fig. 3, does not incline at the proper angle to clear rod 2 from any obstruction, loosen a screw on the right side of part 3 and, with knurled knob 12 loosened, turn gears 6 and 4 and fibre knob 8 to the desired angle. Then tighten the screw in part 3 very tightly.

ELECTRICAL CONNECTIONS. First if your current is D. C. see to it that your rheostat is placed in the positive wire (the wire leading to the upper carbon), and between the machine table (operating) switch and the lamp. If it is on the negative wire change it to the positive, and then if the current is 110 or 115 volts make your connections as per Fig. 4, in which A is the switch-box, shown photographically in Fig. 1, and diagrammically in Fig. 5. On the leads from switch-box A will be found tags reading respectively "field," "line," "armature," the field and line wires being in the same B-X conduit. The field wire must be connected to the positive pole of the machine table or operating switch, on its dead side, at B, Fig. 4. The line wire must be connected to the opposite pole, at C, Fig. 4. The armature wire, which is asbestos covered, must be connected to the positive asbestos covered lamp lead (one leading to upper carbon), between the rheostat and lamp, as per Fig. 4. This may be done by removing the insulation of the lamp lead for an inch or so, scraping the wire strands and the end of the armature wire perfectly clean, wrapping the end of the armature wire tightly around the lamp lead and soldering the joint, after which the joint must be wrapped with insulating tape. It is very important that all the electrical connections be perfectly tight.

Fig. 5 shows the wiring of switch-box A, Figs. 1 and 3. The B-X conduit joining the switch-box and the motor A, Fig. 1, contains three No. 14 wires, each having a different colored insulation, one red, one white and one black. The red is the field wire which connects through the switch-box, to B, Fig. 4; the white wire is the line which connects at C, Fig. 4, and the black the armature, which emerges from the switch-box as an asbestos covered wire. The connections are all perfectly plain when you, in your mind, substitute Fig. 5 for switch-box A, Fig. 4.

CAUTION. Be very sure that your rheostat is located on the positive wire and between the machine table or operating switch and the lamp. If it is on the other side (line side) of the machine table switch, change it, since otherwise the controller would not work.

It is, however, possible to have the rheostat in the negative wire or on the other side of the operating switch by using different wiring diagrams, and the manufacturers provide for this if notified, but the simplest way is to use one diagram and change the position of your rheostat if necessary.

When using converted alternating current, through a motor generator set, rotary converter, or mercury arc rectifier, or where D. C. voltage is reduced by D. C. to D. C. economizer, the wiring diagram as per Fig. 7 must be used, though it applies to no other condition.

In ordering the controller you should send an exact diagram of your wiring, describe, in detail, the various apparatus used, and give the kind of current and its voltage, and, if A. C., the cycle. In using diagram, Fig. 7, if there is an arrangement for switching over to A. C. in case of failure of converting apparatus, then the controller connections must be on the converter side of a double-throw switch which will cut it out of service when A. C. is used, because under no circumstances must the controller be subjected to alternating current, or any voltage higher than 115.

OPERATION. The controller will maintain the length of arc for which it is adjusted, and the length of the arc is altered by tightening or loosening nut 46, Fig. 2. After the controller has been connected up and put into operation, if the arc is too short, tighten up on this nut; if it is too long loosen it until the desired length is attained. Examine the oil cups of the motor once a week and fill them up. Examine the commutator of the motor occasionally.

Should anything go wrong with the internal gearing of the controller it will be necessary that it be returned to the factory for adjustment. It is not advisable to try to repair the controller yourself, but, on the other hand, it is extremely improbable that anything will go wrong.

Use only motor brushes supplied by the manufacturers. The motor brushes may be removed by unscrewing their brass retaining disc, but in replacing be sure they are exactly in the position from which they were withdrawn. The box in the top of the motor is merely a junction box in which the leads from the motor are soldered to those in the B-X leading therefrom.

For His Health.

Roy Chase, Boyne City, Michigan, says:

> I have ordered the second edition of the Handbook, and have the little Handbook you wrote some years ago. Regarding its worth, I will have to tell of an incident that happened when I was running "Around the World in Ninety Minutes." When I came down from the operating room I met the owner of the film, who I believe is now manager of the Colonial Theater in New York City. He said: "Chase, how in Halleluiah do you get that picture and light with a Powers Five." I told him that any operator who would read and follow directions in a Handbook I had, and apply common sense, would get the results I obtained. I ran that old Five for nearly five years, but at last the manager put on his hat, went to New York and bought a SixA. That was over a year ago and you bet I am not sorry. I note you say in a recent issue that we should use 80 amperes A. C. I get results with 60 through a compensarc. Always a clear light. Perhaps the study of optics helps some. I am in the moving picture business for my health. The doctor told me I would have to go West or the asthma would remove me from this Vale of Sin and Sorrow. I by chance went into an operating room when I had asthma good and hard, and, strange to say, it stopped altogether, and in three years I have only lost one show on account of that particular thing. When I went into the operating room I was in such bad condition that I could not carry the reels up. The doctor claims the ozoneated atmosphere does it. I am sending some slides, each of which was made in less than half an hour.

The slides are very good. It seems almost incredible that a man can make a negative and positive in that length of time, and do as good a job as these slides show. The asthma-cure stunt is a new one. Doctors take notice. As to the little Handbook, well you are not the only one who found it to be of value, Brother Chase.

Important! Operators Notice!

This department has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition, and I might say that I am doing it at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me with a statement as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand that I must have the following data. First: What make of film is it; second: Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange; third: What day was it received? And don't mix up bad patches or other faults cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Simplex Oil Guard.

E. A. Inman, Tulsa, Oklahoma, says:

> Am sending for your approval sample and photograph of my oil guard, or film protector, designed for use on the Simplex machine. With this device attached to the machine no oil can possibly get on the film. To attach turn the curved side down > to let it pass the lower sprocket, then drop it in space just ahead of the magazine rollers, as per cut, and slip it under the screw head that holds the lower idler bracket, all of which requires about three seconds. I have made application for patent and am making up a quantity out of aluminum, which is very light and durable. Can supply them at one dollar each. Several exchange men have pronounced them excellent.

The device is very simple, and I see no reason why it should not be thoroughly practicable. It is simply an aluminum shoot which hangs over the crank stem, and serves to protect the film from oil, and anything of this kind which will protect the film, which is reasonable in cost, and easy of application has the commendation of this department.

A Difficult One.

C. W. Orr, one of the owners of the Amusement Service Company, Limerick, Maine, orders both of the question booklets and says:

> The writer believes that your work has been the greatest factor in raising projection standards to their present plane. Your job is a difficult one, and though it may seem to be at times a thankless one, I am sure a large percentage of the boys appreciate the help you have given them.

Yes, Brother Orr, if you only knew how difficult it is sometimes, perhaps you would open your eyes. It is easy enough to conduct a milk-sop-wishy-washy-good-Lord-good-devil department, but the moment you undertake to express an opinion which goes counter to the opinion of others, or to wield the surgeon's knife in an attempt to remove a tumor; in other words, to criticise faults, and particularly when you name names in specific instances, then the dust begins to rise. Most people like to see the "other fellow" get a wallop, but the moment he himself gets a rap he grabs his hunting knife, puts on his war bonnet, and the chances are the more guilty he is the more loud he is in protestations of innocence, and the more vociferous he is in demanding an instant retraction. Yes, Neighbor Orr, the job is a difficult one all right, and don't you ever for one minute doubt it. Sometimes I get utterly disgusted, and feel like chucking the whole thing out the window but—I don't. I have stuck with it for six years, and believe today I have more staunch friends than I had at any time in the past. Why? Simply because the men are beginning to understand that, regardless of the mistakes I may have made—and I have made lots of them—and everything else, when it is all said and done Richardson is trying to do the best he knows how for the real interest of all concerned.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE AVENGING SEA (Biograph), May 24.—A tragic one-reel drama, the sins of the father being visited upon his two unhappy children with the inexorable purpose of a Greek fate. The final scene is one of great pathos and power. Wm. J. Butler, Isabel Rea and Frank Newburg carry off the acting honors.

THE SECRET'S PRICE (Essanay), May 24.—A wholesome little drama, with a self-respecting plot that touches the deeper things in life. Lillian Drew is womanly and sincere as Mrs. Atherton, and receives worthy support from E. H. Calvert and John H. Cossar.

IN THE WOLF'S DEN (Road o' Strife Series, No. 8) (Lubin), May 24.—Alene's arrival in the city is pictured in this instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial, and dangers gather around her thick and fast. She becomes a show girl, is befriended by another showgirl, and finally fall's into a trap set for her by Gilbert Jerome, whose sudden death at the end of the reel saves the girl from his clutches. These events are well told upon the screen.

LIGHT O' LOVE (Selig), May 24.—Will M. Ritchey, the author of this one-reel drama of the seacoast, has boldly scorned the happy ending. Several of the scenes are beautiful photographically, and the story has life and action. The cast is competent.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 41, 1915 (Selig), May 24.—Students drilling at the Culver, Ind., Military Academy, heads the list of events. Students at Berkley, Cal., jousting on human steeds, cloudburst at Kennet, Cal., England sending troops to the front, Harrold Lindley winning Junior Vanderbilt Cup Race, and the land parade and departure of the Atlantic Fleet, complete the film.

MR. JARR VISITS HIS HOME TOWN (The Jarr Family Series, No. 8) (Vitagraph), May 24.—There is a liberal sprinkling of laughs in this number of the Jarr doings, but it cannot be classed among the best of the series. The first half of the reel is superior to the latter half in which the bear episode is introduced. Harry Davenport and associates are as droll as ever.

ALL COOKED UP (Edison), May 25. It is a case of "all blacked up" for Waddy and Arty in this one-reel farce, which ends in a case of "all blown up" for the enemies of the two colored chefs and a pathetically-humorous picture of them shivering with cold and covered with the fast falling flakes of a real (not "stage") snowstorm. An excellent comic film.

HAM, THE DETECTIVE (Kalem), May 25.—If one swallow does not make a summer, neither does one pair of false whiskers make a detective. This is proved conclusively in the present "Ham" comedy. Other secrets of Sherlock Holmes' profession are amusingly unmasked while Ham and Bud attempt to run down a gang of blackhanders.

MATILDA'S LEGACY (Lubin), May 25.—This one-reel rural comedy is well supplied with homely humor, and affords Mae Hotely, Ed Lawrence, Jerold T. Hevener and Oliver Hardy scope for introducing amusing character types. Arthur D. Hotaling is the author-producer.

TWO BROTHERS AND A GIRL (Selig), May 25.—A triangular romance without a villain, this one-reel drama leaves a pleasant flavor behind it, and has been well produced by the author, Burton L. King. Virginia Kirtley, Robyn Adair and Leo Pierson treat their characters with proper artistic respect.

THE MAN WHO COULD NOT SLEEP (Edison), May 26.—Mark Swan's psychic drama, with its chief character a victim of insomnia, points a strong moral. It also makes an unusually entertaining photoplay, and is admirably acted by Marc MacDermott as Judge Jeffer, and Julia Calhoun as a poor woman.

DREAMY DUD ("A Visit to the Zoo" and "An Alley Romance") (Essanay), May 26.—The first of a series of living cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson. The two pictures are on one reel and rank with the best of this class of comics.

MOTHER'S BIRTHDAY (Selig), May 26.—Mother love is the thesis of this simple little one-reel tale. The story is told with true feeling, and is sympathetically acted by Eugene Forde, Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley.

THE STORY OF A GLOVE (Vitagraph), May 26.—Paul West wrote the story in the first place. Then Sidney Drew relates it to his wife, but she has no confidence in his version. Her reason for this?—that's another story. It all makes a mighty entertaining yarn, however, including the preposterous one S. D. Higgins tries to hand his better half. As the acting is strictly a (Drew) family affair, nothing more need be said.

GRATITUDE (Biograph), May 27.—A film version of the story by Roy Norton, this one-reel drama has a western gambler for its hero. The other characters are miners, and the "doings" move right along. A well-told photoplay. Ivan Christy, Walter Coyle and Joseph McDermott are excellent.

A BUNCH OF MATCHES (Essanay), May 27.—The comedy complications in this one-reel farce have been stirred in with a lavish hand, and four pairs of loving hearts are united by one overworked Justice of the Peace. Ben Turpin, Harry Todd and Victor Potel have congenial roles.

ONCE IS ENOUGH (MinA), May 27.—Elaine Ivans and Harry La Pearl enact the roles of a bride and a groom in this one-reel farce. Their start in married life is beset with strenuous and broadly comic adventures.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 42, 1915 (Selig), May 27.—Searching German steamships in New York harbor comes first on the list of news items. Transferring gold coin to the new Sub-treasury, San Francisco, comes next and is followed by steamship "Cushing" at Philadelphia, Army and Navy athletes meet at San Diego, Capt. Woods of the "Etonia" war pictures; troops leaving Montreal, Can., and the burial of the Lusitania victims at Queenstown.

HILDA OF THE SLUMS (Vitagraph), May 27.—This one-reel drama is considerably under the Vitagraph standard in one regard. It is capably acted by Natalie De Lontan, George Stanley and the rest of the cast, and the theme is a good one, but a number of the incidents do not square with reasonable conduct.

THE CANDIDATE'S PAST (Biograph), May 28.—A neatly turned one-reel drama, which will help to engender a belief in masculine virtue as applied to politicians. Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson and a clever little child are the chief members of the acting staff.

THE BACHELOR'S BURGLAR (Essanay), May 28.—As a truthful picture of the interior workings of a newspaper office this one-reel comedy will not pass muster. As a pleasant bit of fiction, it will get by with flying colors. G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton contribute largely to this result.

NOBODY WOULD BELIEVE (Lubin), May 28.—Several of the incidents in Emmett Campbell Hall's one-reel drama are a trifle difficult to assimilate, at that. The story starts off well and some of the sensational stunts are real "thrillers," but, at the opening events seem to promise a more coherent and higher class drama. Lilie Leslie, William Cohill, Walter Law and Joseph Smiley are well cast.

THE STARRING OF FLORA FINCHURCH (Vitagraph), May 28.—W. A. Tremayne has evidently written this one-reel comedy as a fitting medium for the employment of Flora Finch's unquestioned gift as an eccentric character actress. He has been eminently successful. Miss Finch burlesques a stage-struck old maid with grotesque humor. Jay Dwiggins and Templer Saxe are important props in the lady's support.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION (Biograph), May 29.—This is a complicated one-reel drama that is interesting more for the ingenious manner in which the subject matter is handled, than its adherence to fact. Chas. H. West, Harry Carey, Claire McDowell and Helen Bray make it reasonably convincing.

THE DUMB WOOING (Edison), May 29.—This revival of the Bannister Merwin comedy has been made with a new cast and given thoroughly up-to-date treatment by Dallas Welford, Maxine Brown, Raymond McKee, Yale Banner, Jean Dumar and Pat O'Malley. A reel of merriment is the result.

A RAILROADER'S BRAVERY (Episode No. 29 of the "Hazard's of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 29.—Still claiming the right of way by virtue of speed and general excellence, this one-reel railroad drama keeps up the reputation of the series, and permits Helen Holmes and the supporting company to set the nerves of an audience a-tingle in the old familiar way.

OUT FOR A STROLL (Lubin), May 29.—Billy Reeves' stroll gets him into an amusing assortment of difficulties and ends by making him the wrestling partner of "Terrible Mike," the champion of the world. Although not conducted according to rule, the match is as big a hit with a real audience as with the one on the screen.

IN THE AMAZON JUNGLE (Selig), May 29.—L. W. Chaudet has cleverly preserved the South American atmosphere in this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama by Emma Bell. The story is gripping, and is well acted by Wm. Scott, Harry Devere, Thomas Bates and Irene Wallace.

JANE WAS WORTH IT (Vitagraph), May 29.—Mme. Camille Clerissi has solved the servant girl problem in this one-reel comedy: First catch your servant girl, and, if a good cook, marry her. The fun is strongly domestic, but appetizing. Edith Story, as Jane, is a host in herself, and Hughie Mack plays himself with unimpeachable fidelity.

IN THE DAYS OF FAMINE (Vitagraph), May 27.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1440, issue of May 29.

SALLIE CASTLETON, SOUTHERNER (Edison), May 24.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1441, issue of May 29.

RIVALS (Kalem), May 24.—A fairly interesting war drama, in two reels, this photoplay contains considerable original material. The action is well sustained, and the leading roles are given earnest portrayals by Anna Nilsson and Guy Coombs.

CAPTAIN FRACASSE (Biograph), May 25.—A carefully produced two-reel screen version of Theophile Gautier's celebrated novel of the life of the strolling player in the days of Moliere, this photoplay preserves the salient points of the story and reaches its climax by a series of skilfully devised thrills, in which the flying feet of a little maid of twelve play an important part. Alan Hale, in the title role; Chas. H. Mailes, Vola Smith, Kate Bruce and the rest of the large cast catch the atmosphere and spirit of the drama in a highly commendable manner.

THE ESTERBROOK CASE (Vitagraph), May 25.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1274, issue of May 22.

THE FIGURE IN BLACK (Kalem), May 26.—The theme of this two-part detective drama is quite plausible; it is also out of the beaten track. Brisk movement, an air of mystery and well sustained suspense prevent any loss of interest in the story. The best acting of the cast is done by Marin Sais, Ollie Kirkby and Paul C. Hurst.

ON BITTER CREEK (Lubin), May 27.—Emmett Campbell Hall's two-reel drama has an uncommonly effective plot, the touch of symbolism connected with the bridge assisting the story materially. Aside from a rather eccentric snowstorm, Producer Edgar Jones has selected his settings with good judgment. He also fills the role of the chief male character with entire satisfaction, Justina Huff playing opposite to him with the same result.

THE QUARRY (Selig), May 27.—A vigorous echo of the style of drama whereof Owen Davis was once the prophet and chief collector of royalties, this three-reel melophotodrama by John Moroso has all the virtues of its progenitor in the way of something doing every minute. A falsely accused convict and his hounding by a stony-hearted detective keeps the heart interest at the proper tension. Producer Lawrence Marston understands how to make the most of the situations.

ACCORDING TO THEIR LIGHTS (Edison), May 28.—The name of Eugene Nowland, who is credited with the scenario and direction of this two-reel drama, is to be reckoned with in no slight degree if the photoplay in question is a guarantee of his future work. Mr. Nowland has unearthed no originality of theme in his tale of the Cumberland Mountains, but he has developed it with dramaturgic and artistic skill, and shown equal ability in realizing it pictorially. The acting is fully as commendable. Bessie Learn fairly outdoes herself as Meg, and William West, Chas. Sutton, Margaret Prussing, Pat O'Malley, Frank McGlynn and Yale Banner belong on the list of honor.

PREJUDICE (Kalem), May 28.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1272, issue of May 22.

ABOVE THE ABYSS (Essanay), May 25.—The wages of sin is the theme of this two-reel drama of modern life. The scenes are diversified, and laid among wealthy society in the city, on shipboard, on a farm and in the cabin of a yacht. The action is tense and the finish tragic. Richard C. Travers, Sidney Ainsworth, Ruth Stonehouse, Mayme Gehrue and Helen Dunbar comprise a thoroughly satisfactory cast.

VENGEANCE (Essanay), May 29.—This three-reel drama tells the story of a young man who plots to avenge his father, driven to suicide by his arch-enemy. The plot arouses deep interest, and progresses steadily to its well contrived climax. Richard C. Travers, Edna Mayo and a carefully chosen cast make the acting noteworthy.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 21, 1915 (Mutual), May 27.—This issue contains many interesting views from the seat of war. We are also given several views of our own navy boys engaged in a sham battle. The opening of the coaching season with a start from the Hotel Biltmore, New York, is also of interest.

LITTLE CHRYSANTHEMUM (Beauty), June 1.—The story of this film is slight, and the role of the Japanese maiden played by an American girl loses considerable of its charm thereby. The Japanese falling in love with a young American man finds to her sorrow that he loves an American girl. Unable to stand the disappointment she stabs herself.

THE GOLDEN RAINBOW (American), June 2.—An excellent production founded on the old fable of the rainbow and the pot of gold. Harry Von Meter, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson, Perry Banks and Louise Lester, and a smart little boy comprise the cast. The story is of the theft of a consignment of gold, and the finding of it by a little boy who chases a rainbow for the supposed pot of gold. The story has been prettily filmed, and is interesting for children as well as adults.

ONE WHO SERVES (Reliance), June 2.—Francis Powers has directed this commendable picture, with Catherine Henry in the feminine lead, and W. E. Lowery, Richard Cummings and Mr. Freeman in the other main roles of the play. The story is a simple one of heart interest, showing how a man down and out is tempted to steal to save his wife and baby from starvation, and the near result of his yielding to temptation.

THE GUIDING LIGHT (American), June 4.—Ed Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood are featured in this production, with George Field in what could hardly be termed a minor role. The picture has been set against unusually effective backgrounds on the sea coast, and must be classed as an excellent offering, except for the fact that a forced situation has been allowed to occur where the wife of the lighthouse keeper so readily leaves home with a chance acquaintance merely as an excuse for the shaping of the climax. The players in this production do artistic work.

TRULY RURAL TYPES (Falstaff), June 4.—Riley Chamberlain is the much-deceived playwright, who, in search of "truly rural types," discovers a couple of country lovers (so he believes) and after rehearsing them and bringing to the city, where his play is a success, finds that they are well-known stock favorites. The comedy is an excellent one, built on a good situation.

A FREIGHT CAR HONEYMOON (Thanhouser), June 6.—This is as nice a comedy as one would wish to see. It is wholesome and mirth-evoking, and is the story of how a young couple, in spite of the fact that the bridegroom, an employee of the railway, is discharged on his wedding day, make the company blow them to a honeymoon aboard a freight train. Flo LaBadie and Harry Benham are the stars.

A VERSATILE VILLAIN (Keystone), May 29.—This story centers about the character of Desperate Dan, a gunman and bigamist. The development is slow and not very entertaining until the knockabout scenes and the powder magazine explosion. A fairly entertaining low comedy.

HER FILMLAND HERO (Majestic), June 1.—A juvenile subject in which Olive, Little Billy and others give a snappy burlesque of a Western drama. The little actors are unusually clever in this number. It makes a first rate juvenile offering.

AN UNLUCKY SUITOR (Royal), June 12.—The plot in this comedy number is very slow in developing and is not at all strong when it gets in action. It concerns the rivalry of two men over a girl. The humor is mild and the number hardly up to standard.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

ELEVEN-THIRTY P. M. (Majestic), May 23.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1623, issue of June 5.

THE MAN OF IT (Reliance), May 29.—This is an exceptionally well-produced and interesting two-reel film. Irene Hunt, Jack Conway, Vester Perry and Margie Wilson have the chief roles of the picture. The story shows the sorrow caused by a man's loose morals. Two sisters love the same man; the one not knowing that the man is her sister's husband, for the sister having been lured away, has married unknown to her people. At the discovery that she is about to bear a child to her sister's husband, the girl throws herself over a cliff, and is picked up dead by her former lover, who tracks the man to his home, but, finding him with his wife and new-born baby, desists from betraying him.

THE RESOLVE (American), May 31.—A two-reel production that is a credit to the American Film Co. Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen are the principal figures in the story which is cleverly built around the parasite sort of man that preys on the virtue and faith of good women. There is the woman who is the wife, and the woman who was to have been a wife, but who is put off from day to day on the question of marriage until she forgets her honor. The production is a good one, and delicately handled. Winnifred Greenwood is especially worthy of praise for the manner in which she has handled the role of the last-mentioned woman.

THE RACE LOVE (Reliance), May 31.—With the exception of the fact that white people endeavor rather unsuccessfully to portray Indian character, this picture is not without interest. The story treats in a measure of race prejudice, and is told skillfully in the picture. A white man falls in love with an Indian maid and pictures to her the wonderful advantages she will enjoy in his home. But the Indian brave, on the other hand, paints in realistic colors the disadvantages of such a move, and succeeds in winning her for himself.

THE PATHWAY FROM THE PAST (Kaybee) June 11.—A two-reel crook story, with Thomas Chatterton, Estelle Allen and others in the cast. The opening scenes, in which the girl's mother dies, leaving her alone in the world except for a wayward brother, are put on too rapidly to get up a strong sympathy with the characters. After the conventional opening, however, the plot gets a better hold, though the story is not very new in any way. It is well photographed and the cast is pleasing, but a more leisurely development would have strengthened interest in the characters.

THOSE COLLEGE GIRLS (Keystone), May 24.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Murray, the janitor, Slim the bellboy and others at a girls' seminary. The humor is rough in spots, but will delight observers who like pie-throwing, college pranks of all kinds and girl students attired in pajamas. A little more cleanliness in the opening scenes would have helped. The plot is not at all new, but the action and small business throughout is amusing in its way.

THE SIX CENT LOAF (Thanhouser), June 8.—A two-reel subject with some very entertaining features. One of these is the views of a bread factory in action. The story concerns a poor girl who is unable to buy bread for her brother and sister after the raise in price. She enters the factory and steals a loaf, is caught and faints away. Her condition leads the president to reduce bread to its former price. The effect of this picture is excellent, as it strongly illustrates the hardships worked upon poor people by high food prices.

THE PATRIOT AND THE SPY (Mutual Masterpicture—Thanhouser), June 7.—In this four-reel Thanhouser will be found a highly spectacular offering, pleasing to almost any audience. James Cruze and Marguerite Snow have the principal roles and play in their usual pleasing style, portraying with intelligence the characters of a maimed patriot and his wife. Alphonse Ethier has the thankless role of the Spy, which has also been well interpreted. The story is laid in no particular place or period, and is, as would be supposed from its title, founded on war. There seems no particular point to be made, and the spectacular part is really its drawing card.

THE LONESOME HEART (Mutual Masterpicture—American), May.—A four-reel production featuring Marguerita Fisher. This picture is founded on an interesting story, which unfortunately is inadequate to four reels of film. A much stronger grip might have been had on the audience had the story of the orphan girl been told in two reels. Marguerita Fisher has plenty of opportunity for what might be termed cute business, but the production consists too much of just this. Fine locations have been chosen for the filming of the story, and the photography is perfect.

BETTY IN SEARCH OF A THRILL (Bosworth), May 17.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1622, issue of June 5.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 40, 1915, Week of May 17.—This issue is preceded by views of the mountains of Alsace, showing food and ammunition being conveyed to the troops over the mountain roads, and which views have been taken under the supervision of the French Government. Some interesting scenes during the visit of President Wilson to New York to review the navy are among the attractive items of the weekly. We also see the first Spring meet of the United Hunts Association. Equally interesting is a tooth brush drill by school children.

VANISHING CINDERELLA, Week of May 31.—A very acceptable comedy in which a young woman reporter succeeds in the most novel manner in interviewing a successful young author, who has persistently eluded her. She takes a room in the same house in which he has his apartment. In fact, the room occupied by her is directly above his. On the morning after her arrival she makes a smoky fire in her waste basket, and then proceeding to climb down the fire escape, faints in the arms of the author and is carried into his apartment.

THE ROSE CITY, JEYPORE, RAJPUTANA, INDIA, Week of June 7.—An instructive colored scenic, giving a series of views of this beautiful city, with its marvellous samples of architecture. This is on the same reel with "The Police Dog."

THE POLICE DOG, Week of June 7.—This episode of the "Police Dog" series proves to be quite as interesting as its predecessors. An organ grinder, who, with his pet monkey, manages to steal a living, is in the act of robbing, by means of the monkey, the till of a bank, when the Police Dog gets on the scent. An amusing chase of dog after monkey follows. On the same reel with the above.

A SCHOOL OF NEW GUINEA, Week of June 7.—This is an intensely interesting colored study of the scholars and their teachers in an endeavor to imbibe and to impart knowledge. The school children of New Guinea, some of whom appear to be quite grown up, are also seen in their recreative moments, dancing about on the green as do other children, with the exception of the fact that they are clothed only from knees to waist. This is on the same reel with a comedy, "Lonesome Luke."

LONESOME LUKE, Week of June 7.—A farce comedy of a rather unusual nature, and fairly amusing. Luke, in order to ameliorate his loneliness, dresses up as a performing bear and joins the circus. His cowardice later gets him into trouble. On the same reel with the above.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, NO. 22, Week of May 24.—"The Opium Smugglers," as this particular episode is called, is an especially good one. Wu Fang, by a cleverly arranged trap, kidnaps Elaine, and has her conveyed to an out-going boat, belonging to the opium smugglers. Kennedy and a detective friend, having intercepted a note brought in by a carrier pigeon, start off on the trail of the smugglers, not aware of the fact that Elaine is with them and about to be transported to China. Elaine, by means of a wireless telephone apparatus given her previously by Kennedy, apprises them of her danger, and is rescued after having jumped into the water.

WHO PAYS? Series No. 7, "Blue Blood and Yellow," Week of May 24.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1625, issue of June 5.

THE JAPANESE MASK, Week of June 7.—In three parts, and enacted by talented European artists, "The Japanese Mask" constitutes an unusually acceptable melodrama. It has a good story, which, with one or two exceptions, has been developed with good judgment. The "mask" is one that has been found in Japan, and is supposed to mark for unnatural death all who look upon it. The production is a thrilling one, and would be acceptable to the majority of audiences.

United Film Service.

THE WORD (Lariat), June 5.—This is a two-reel production in which several conversions occur among western bandits through the use of a Bible and the added influence of a pretty girl. The picture is in many ways meritorious, is fairly well produced, well photographed and full of action.

THE MYSTIC WELL, June 6.—Made at the Gaumont studios from the scenario of W. F. Hart, this comedy might appear very amusing to many, but is not of a class to give general satisfaction. Two tramps hit on a scheme to make some money, namely the establishing of a mineral well which is flavored with rotten eggs, old cans etc. The film draws undue attention to afflictions of the rheumatic sort.

THE NEAR CAPTURE OF JESSIE JAMES (Luna), June 10.—In this picture Jessie, in spite of the reprimands of her mother, reads with undue relish the "Adventures of Jesse James." The result is that when she lays down to sleep at night she has fearfully disturbing dreams, in which she tries out some of the adventures, is nearly captured and is only saved from her pursuers by falling heavily out of bed.

O YOU MULE (Superba), June 1.—This is rather an amusing comedy in which medicine for a mule and medicine for a man get woefully mixed. The result, as would be expected, belongs to farce comedy. On the same reel with "Copped."

COPPED (Superba), June 1.—On the same reel as the foregoing, the comedy of this picture is acceptable. The old idea of having a swimmer's clothing stolen from the shore, or river bank, has been utilized. This time it is a policeman that gets into trouble.

THE PICTURE ON THE WALL (Premier), June 4.—A two-reel production of fair merits in which a young woman elopes with the man she loves. A rival lover intercepts a letter from her to her father in whose saloon hangs the picture of the daughter whom he believes has left him in dishonor. She has, however, been happily married to the man for whom she left home. A slight circumstance skillfully worked by the rival, causes all kinds of trouble. The close of the picture shows all parties concerned happily united.

STEPPING WESTWARD (Ideal), June 7.—The story of this two-reel film is laid in the days of civil war with the exception of the latter portion, which jumps twenty or so years ahead. The production is a pleasing one, and treats of how the paths of the maiden and the soldier, evidently destined for one another, recross each other at last. There is much to be commended in this picture, which has been prettily produced.

ALMOST LUCKY (Superba), June 8.—This is an acceptable half reel comedy on the same reel with 'Mixing the Cards." The theft of a fur-lined coat, by a tramp from an automobile is the starting point for the fun.

MIXING THE CARDS (Superba), June 8.—Much the better of these two comedies on one reel is "Mixing the Cards." The theme is not new, being the old idea of getting the cards in the boxes containing birthday presents mixed. In this case a trick played by a rival is frustrated in its purpose by the innocent meddling of a child.

THE SPIDER (Grandin), June 9.—Ethel Grandin does good work in this two-reel production which was written by Garfield Thompson. The plot is one which holds a good comedy situation, and has been well produced and photographed. "Spider" is a man of the Raffles sort, and Ethel full of mischief, after reading about his bold robberies, plans to play "Spider" to test the efficiency of her detective lover at burglar catching. The scheme works out comically, and presents some good fun for any audience.

HEINE'S MILLIONS (Starlight), June 10.—A farce comedy of fair merits. Heine, becoming the happy heir to a large fortune, shares the millions carried from the bank by himself and his pal Louie in a waste basket, scattering them about among acquaintances and non-acquaintances in the most promiscuous manner.

CANNED CURIOSITY (Pyramid), June 12.—Here is a two-reel comedy based on the curiosity of women. Edwin August and Ruth Blair are the central figures in the picture, and both have succeeded in pleasing to the fullest. The story is based on a simple situation. The young author (Edwin August) writes a book in which he states that all women are curious. A friend of his takes exception to this statement, but to prove that he is right the author fills several cans with cigarette smoke and places them wrapped carefully in boxes, within reach of certain young women, with the injunction not to open written plainly on the outside of each. Needless to say the boxes are opened, but the girl, who afterward becomes the wife of the author, manages to deceive him by refilling the box with smoke from the same brand of cigarette that he has used.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

PARK JOHNNIES (L-KO), June 6.—A rather conventional low comedy number, the scenes being taken in a park, an apartment house and police court. The situations are amusing in spots, but the number is only fairly strong.

HOW BILLY GOT HIS RAISE (Joker), June 7.—A short comedy number, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry, Max Asher and Lillian Peacock. Franey appears as an office boy who has studied hypnotism. The comedy is amusing throughout.

THE FOX HUNT (Joker), June 7.—This, appearing on same reel with above, is very much on the order of animated drawings and is very funny in places. Instead of drawings the animals are cut out of cardboard. This, with above, makes a good split reel.

THEIR FRIEND, THE BURGLAR (Nestor), June 8.—A light comedy number, featuring Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns. The girl and her lover manage to elope during the excitement following a robbery of the house. The plot is slight, but the action and cast are pleasing.

THE STRUGGLE (Rex), June 8.—A one-reel number, written by L. V. Jefferson, featuring Pauline Bush, Wm. Clifford and others. This pictures the struggle between capital and labor, in contrast with the civil war. A parade of old veterans is pictured. The story is rather weak in plot and is of a symbolic type.

IN HIS MIND'S EYE (Big U), June 10.—A photoplay in which Murdock MacQuarrie appears as a blind musician on a street corner. Scenes from his early life are shown, leading up to the appearance of his daughter. Owing to the jerky development of the final scenes the full force of the story is not brought out. The photography is good but the construction not very strong.

THE SIGN OF THE SACRED SAFETY PIN (Powers), June 10.—This is No. 2 of the "Lady Raffles and Detective Duck" series. It pictures Gale Henry and Max Asher in their burlesque parts. The plot has to do with the theft of valuable military papers. Trick photography helps out the amusing features of this. It comes under the head of good nonsense.

MUMPS (Victor), June 11.—A light comedy number, featuring Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby. The girl writer advertises for a secretary; he appears and they are quarantined because the maid has mumps. The settings and photography are pleasing and the number contains considerable cleverness.

WHERE IGNORANCE IS BLISS (Joker), June 12.—A "rube" comedy with Ernie Shield and Queenie Rosson as the country lovers. He inherits ten thousand dollars, falls into the clutches of an adventuress and almost loses his pile, but the country girl saves it for him. The burlesque types are amusing and the story fairly strong.

THE WOMAN-HATER'S BABY (Powers), June 12.—Jack J. Clark and Gene Gauntier in a story, the plot of which is quite familiar. He is a woman-hater, she a poor widow with a baby. She leaves the child on his step and afterwards gets a position as nurse, which, of course, leads to marriage. The photography is uneven and the production only fairly strong.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 168 (Universal), May 26.—This number is one of varied interest, picturing many American scenes in the fore part; later comes views of the burial of the Lusitania dead and Hy Mayer's drawings.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE SWINGING DOORS (Big U), June 6.—A two-reel offering, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as an immigrant who comes to this country with his wife and child. The wife dies and he sends the girl to a convent school. She grows up, loses track of her father, and finds him eventually while dining in a restaurant with her lover. The father, who is a waiter, attacks the lover, thinking he means harm to the girl, but later learns that his intentions are good. This moves along more like a narrative than a plot. The only complication is the restaurant scene, and it was not made clear why the father entirely lost track of the girl. It makes a production of about average strength.

THE CAGE OF THE GOLDEN BARS, Under the Crescent Adventure (Gold Seal), June 8.—Being narrative No. 2 of the "Under the Crescent" series. This continues the adventures of Princess Hassan, portraying the wife of a Turkish prince. She escapes from the harem, in which he has confined her, and releases Zohra and her child and the American prisoner from the palace dungeons. The dungeon scenes are a little darker than was perhaps intended, but are acceptable. The atmosphere of this series is good and the events carry the interest well.

BILL'S BLIGHTED CAREER (L-KO),—June 9.—A two-reel knockabout number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Peggy Pearce, Henry Bergman and others. The scenes are in an artist's studio and some of them are not free from vulgarity. The principal humor comes in the latter scenes, when a rough house occurs after Billy discovers that his wife is acting as a model. This is well photographed, but not up to this company's standard in certain other respects.

THE VALLEY OF SILENT MEN (Rex), June 10.—A two-reel variation of the Enoch Arden theme, with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips in the leading roles. The husband is dissipated and while loafing in a barroom is shanghaied to a schooner. Later he returns to find his wife married to another. He learns this only after seeing her and his own child. He then gives her up and returns to the boat. The photography is uneven in places and the subject familiar; at the same time the acting is sincere and effective. The strong moment of interest is where the husband returns and confronts his wife.

A STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE (Imp), June 11.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy on page 1620, issue of June 5.

PATSY OF THE CIRCUS (Bison), June 12.—A two-reel story of circus life, with Rex de Roselli, Marie Walcamp, Sherman Bainbridge and Wellington Playter in the cast. The scenes are all unusually well photographed. The story follows in the footsteps of former successes of this type, and will no doubt prove the same. The father sends his daughter away from the sawdust ring, where she is a bareback rider, to a finishing school for girls. She dislikes the school, but meets a young man with whom she falls in love. Her rescue of a friend while riding was a good feature. Then the circus comes to town and events take a very spirited and satisfying turn. A good number of its type.

ACROSS THE FOOTLIGHTS (Big U), June 13.—This two-reel number, featuring Adele Lane and Wm. C. Dowlin, can hardly be said to have a plot. At the same time it carries the interest very well, giving a series of episodes in the lives of two theatrical people, who fall in love, marry and experience many vicissitudes in their uncertain calling. The theatrical boarding house scenes are true to life, and Lou Warrenton was pleasing as the landlady. The photography is good and, considering the rather weak plot, this succeeds in entertaining the observer quite well.

A BOLT FROM THE BLUE (Universal Special), June 7.—No. 14 of "The Black Box" series. Craig has reached New York and after considerable hesitation repairs to the house of Prof. Ashleigh, where he is to meet Quest and his party, to confess. During the storm another attempt at wholesale crime is made, Quest and his friends just escaping annihilation by an electrical device. The mystery is well sustained, though the average observer will certainly by this time have formed some idea of the way the guilt is pointing. The final number should be very interesting, as it will clear up everything still in doubt.

Miss Brownell, Film Saleswoman

THE Minneapolis branch of the World Film has the only lady saleswoman in the world. She's young, good looking, aggressive, successful. She drifted into the film business by a curious route. Being thrown on her own resources at 19, she became a railroad detective, and got a living at that unattractive game. Her salvation was film fandom. She sought recreation from detectivity in the picture houses, and made up her mind to get into the business. So, liking World Film features, she applied for and was given a job at the Minneapolis branch and has made good.

Miss Brownell.

She books contracts with facility and is popular amongst the exhibitors. At the recent Minneapolis convention, her bright, winning and "mixable" manners made her an immense favorite with the thousands of people with whom she came into contact. Miss Brownell, who is a lady of high order of intelligence and education, was asked what in her opinion were the kind of pictures were the best for women and children who, as she knows by experience and has found from observation, are the principal and therefore the paying patrons of motion picture theaters.

"There is no 'best,'" she replied, "but let them be clean and exciting. Here in the Northwest we have no use for problems, for salacity, for crimes, or anything that incites to them. We like plenty of action, manliness, bravery, heroism, and of course very pretty and good girls. And a heart interest story. You generally get these in World Films. Yes, I think it is a great organization and Mr. Selznick, who is respected by us all, thoroughly deserves the success he is making of the company."

GOTHAM FILM COMPANY INCORPORATED.

Gotham Film Company, capitalized at $500,000, was incorporated on April 24 and now occupies handsome offices on the eighth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, New York. A five-year lease of these quarters has been signed and the furnishings, installed by the Sawyer Company, the former tenants, have been purchased. The Gotham studio, located at 237 Lafayette street, is equipped with four large stages and is in every way suitable for the production of artistic pictures.

One, four or five-reel feature a month, beginning with "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan," is the present program, to be increased later on to a release for each week. Affiliated with the Gotham Company are the New York Gotham Film Exchange and the New Jersey Gotham Film Exchange, through which the pictures will be marketed. A contract for productions to be released on the Gotham program has just been closed with the Reel Photoplay Company, of which Bernard Levy is president, Arthur Levy treasurer and Charles O. Brown, vice-president and secretary.

Marshall W. Taggart, president of the Gotham Company, is new in the film business. Clarence Schottenfels is vice-president and sales manager and William A. Sweet is secretary and treasurer. The Gotham exchanges are under the management of Charles L. Brookheim.

CHANGES IN UNIVERSAL WEST COAST FORCES.

Doris Pawn in the future will play leads opposite William Dowlan with the Universal Big U company. Val Paul has been transferred to Joseph De Grasse's company where until the return of Pauline Bush he will play heavies with Ray Gallagher and Edna Maison. Reina Valdez, whose work in the picture game has elicited the praise of the critics, has joined the Universal's western forces where she will play heavy characters with Henry McRae's 101 Bison company. Miss Valdez is perhaps better known for her work as leading woman with "Broncho Billy" Anderson than for any other work she has ever done.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IT IS significant that the memoralists writing upon the close of the 1914-1915 theatrical season studiously avoid reference to the photo plays. In commenting upon the record of the preceding season all the dramatic writers were candid enough to admit that motion pictures had made a serious hole in the hull of the old-time "legitimate," notwithstanding she drifted into her dry dock at the close of the 1913-1914 trip in much better condition than she did at the close of the last one. The "legitimate" theatrical season just closed has been the most disastrous in history. The reason for it given by the scribes who cater to the powers that be in that field is "the European war and the depressed business conditions of last autumn." Managers, players, plays and houses are referred to only from the "legitimate" standpoint. No reference is made to the "legitimate" players who have given up the stage for the studio, nor to the "legitimate" theaters that have been converted into photoplay theaters. Heretofore the migration to the motion picture field of so many prominent members of the "legitimate" profession and the conversion of so many well known theaters would have supplied the dramatic critics with "copy" for unlimited articles on the past, present and future of the legitimate theatrical field. Not so now. The critics have evidently been warned that the frankness of last year must not be repeated, that they must forget motion pictures are in existence; they must forget the prediction that after the run of the "Quo Vadis" motion picture production the Astor theater would go back to the "legitimate;" they must forget that the great Madison Square Garden is being transformed into a picture house; they must forget, while it has been necessary to either close, or transform into picture theaters, scores of "legitimate" houses in New York City, and other large cities and towns, there are motion pictures in existence; they must also be blind to the well established fact that, while the season just closed has been the most disastrous to the American theatrical field, there are more large motion picture houses in course of erection and preparation in that field now than at any other period during the history of motion pictures. On all this the theatrical critics are silent. Not a word have they to say about the photoplay, good or bad or indifferent. It is a plain case of treating the silent drama with contempt.

There is at least one consolation for the photo play. The standing it has with the amusement public today was not attained through the aid of the newspapers, or the theatrical critics employed by them. To the contrary, the merits of the motion pictures have successfully beaten down every effort to discount and discredit them, and the well defined programme to ignore them adopted by the critics is a boost.

For the benefit of some people who may still have a doubt that the photoplay has been the chief cause of the serious decline in box office receipts at the "legitimate" theaters, a few facts of indisputable record may be cited. Not one prominent motion picture plant of standing has gone to the wall during the past year. Bankruptcies in the "legitimate" field have been plenty, among the most notable being the Lieber Company. Not one of the large picture theaters in Greater New York has been closed on account of bad business, some of them, on the brink of the summer season, are selling seats weeks ahead. The transformation of "legitimate" theaters into picture houses is more marked now than it was at any other time during the past year. More "legitimate" players are, or are about to go, under contract with motion picture producing companies than at any other time in the history of the business. "Legitimate" managers are more eager today to farm out expensive players to the motion picture producing companies than they are to carry them along under direct management. All this has entirely apparently escaped the attention of the newspapers.

Those interested in the newspaper business are united in efforts to discredit that the papers are more favorable to the "legitimate" field than to the photoplay. They ridicule the idea that a strong tie binds them to the so-called old timers. From a personal standpoint they are correct in their position. Individually the members of the press and the photoplay people are the best of friends. But from a business standpoint the newspaper people stand ever ready with their submarines to plant a torpedo into the gaily sailing photoplay. It is only since the photoplay business has assumed proportions justifying advertising in the daily and weekly newspapers that those papers have given moving pictures notices in their news columns, and the notices given are grudgingly measured in proportion to the amount of advertising received. "The newspapers will come around in time and do justice to the pictures," some have said. This may be true, but if it ever comes to pass it will be only when the pictures have restored to the newspapers the advertising patronage the latter have lost through the progress made by the pictures, and there is little hope of that.

The great advertising medium outside of individual circularizing for the motion picture business is the trade journal. That is the home companion of the moving picture fan. It is the first sought by manufacturer, exhibitor and patron because it is devoted to the pictures and is the true guide for all concerned. Its notices and criticisms are not dependent upon the amount of patronage received from maker or exhibitor of the pictures. It has achieved a standing that places it above the suspicion that what is said of the pictures or the theaters in which they are exhibited is bought and paid for. Some newspapers have been making strenuous efforts to take this prestige from the trade journals, but they have failed of success, nor are they likely to attain it.

* * *

The graft game in the motion picture business is again receiving attention through the arrest of a man said to be a relative of a prominent politician in Brooklyn. It is charged the accused extorted money from motion picture theater managers by threats of prosecution for admitting to the places children under the prescribed age. According to latest reports, at least half a dozen managers have come forward with charges. It is gratifying to know that at least some managers have summoned sufficient courage to come out and fight in the open. The motion picture people have been outrageously victimized by grafters for years, and it is time that the extortioners are brought to bay.

Naturally the accused have defenders, some of these, assuming a neutral stand, contend that the people yielding to the grafter are equally guilty, that the giving up of graft is an indication of guilt. Viewing the situation from a disinterested standpoint it must be conceded that guilt has existed in some cases. But as a matter of fact the demands of the grafter have been acceded to by the victims in a desperate effort to avoid persecution and attending loss. Speaking from experience, one exhibitor has stated that, although absolutely innocent of any violation, he was obliged to give up graft week after week and frequently several times in a week. He was not afraid of any charge or evidence held before him, knowing that there could be no bona fide case for a trial. His great fear was that he might be "framed up" and the chances of a failure to defeat a "framing," with the expense attending the making of a fight made him conclude that it was cheaper for him to "give up."

If some of the motion picture exhibitors of the past and present could be induced to write of the many schemes of extortion worked upon them it would make interesting reading. The old timers could tell the better stories. And if they would speak every department of the municipality having anything to do with motion picture houses would figure in the recitals. Many exhibitors have threatened to make known their grievances, but have been deterred from doing so because the schemes were so cleverly planned and carried out that it might be difficult to show criminal intent or act. But it is a certainty that graft in the picture field is practically extinct compared with former conditions. The class of people who have become exhibitors in recent years are of a calibre that daunt the would-be extortioners. The nickelodeon is fast passing out of existence and the grafter is up against the man who has intelligence, capital and influence to guard him in his rights. The grafter no longer has at his mercy the man who put all his savings into a picture house and who might be ruined if the house were closed for a week or two until he could prove his innocence. As a rule, the motion picture exhibitor has advanced with the standard of the picture. This probably accounts for the arrest of the person who attempted to work the old game. Success to the prosecutors. It is hoped other exhibitors who may suffer likewise will promptly follow the example.

British Notes.

MOVING PICTURES of the doings of the contesting forces in Flanders have been the subject of a great deal of criticism of late in this country. The daily press has repeatedly drawn attention to the necessity of circulating films taken under proper authority to counteract the effect of the German propaganda in neutral countries by the same medium but until a month or so ago nothing materialized. Then the French Army Department called in the cooperation of three producing firms and already their efforts are bearing fruit in the form of interesting pictures of actual happenings at the front. A week later it was definitely announced that our own War Department was to adopt a similar expedient but at the time of writing the first results have yet to be screened. Some of those arriving from the French authorities are censored by the Cinematograph Committee of the French Chamber of Commerce, but it is almost settled that the British pictures will be censored by the army authorities themselves in collaboration with the Press Bureau and the British Board of Film Censors. It is useless attempting to disguise the fact that an abnormal quantity of faked war film has been shipped from the Continent both to America and England and it is perhaps the elimination of these interesting but fictitious incidents that is the underlying motive of the Government in preparing official moving pictures of the war. The first release depicts Lord Kitchener, General Joffre, General French and M. Millerand in France and is to be handled through some well known agency in each country. No fancy prices are to be charged for the "official" films, just the usual gazette rates.

Before leaving the subject of fake films I should like to draw the attention of American producers to the fact that the European produced American wild west picture has already arrived. I saw the first of its kind yesterday (May 10) and it truly is a faithful but professed imitation of the popular pioneer of the industry. As the camera-man of the New World has times without number felicitiously portrayed scenes in the old country without traveling beyond his studio door it seems clearly a question of give and take. But in this specific case the producers are not of British origin and so it is more to their credit in turning out a production which for one single scene could hardly be distinguished from a genuine Essanay, Kalem, or Flying A of three years ago. Every detail is there, the wood constructed ranch, the crowd of broncho busters, fine horsemanship, in fact everything typically western right down to the correct type of six-shooters. But in one scene comes disillusionment for the watchful observer in the size and form of a distant railway engine, the like of which could be found in America only in a department store.

* * *

A Scottish newspaper makes a strong indictment against the average British producer who is summarily set down as a person absolutely devoid of imagination. The main grumble of the journal, which is not couched in mistakable terms, is that the British producer does not consult the author of his story during its production but regards him in the nature of an interloper. It is held out that on the other hand American producers invariably accord full consideration to the author of the story and faithfully try to interpret his meaning.

Another new producing company—the Arrow Film Co.—has recently come into existence within the precincts of the Metropolis. Mr. F. C. Tuelor is manager and the first feature is a drama entitled "The Devil's Profession."

* * *

The firm of Bishop, Pessers & Co., Limited, the British agents for Balboa films, are contemplating coalition with the Globe Film Co. It is understood that the new arrangement will entail no difference in policy or practice of either company for while working hand in hand it is intended that each shall retain its individuality.

* * *

The adaptation of musical compositions to the special exigencies of the silent stage shows fair promise of rapidly developing into a special branch of the trade. Last week an enterprising firm of music publishers issued the initial number of a house organ devoted exclusively to the study and preparation of picture accompaniments.

* * *

The loss of the Lusitania was received with great severity by the moving picture trade on this side. The death of Mr. Frohman is regarded all round as an irreparable loss, for his work with the Famous Players Co. had given him a name in England no less than the reputation he had attained upon the spoken stage. Miss Rita Jolivet of the Jesse Lasky Company, also on the doomed vessel strangely enough, was the last person to see Mr. Frohman and Mr. Vanderbilt alive. Mr. J. Hounsell of the Midlands Exclusives Co. and Mr. Barry, an American film agent, are among the survivors.

* * *

Mr. Thomas Bentley, a former producer for the British and Colonial Co., is the first British moving picture producer to be approached by an American organization for his services. The Universal Company. have completed a contract whereby Mr. Bentley will at an early date transfer his directorial energies to Universal City. His speciality during the past two or three years has been the adaptation of literary masterpieces to the screen. In Dickensian work in particular Mr. Bentley has (with the single exception of Mr. Cecil Hepworth) no equal in this country.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Kane Taking a Vacation

ARTHUR S. KANE, one of the leading film exchange men of the country, has decided to shake the dust of Broadway from his shoes for the summer. With his family Mr. Kane left Saturday, May 29, on the Congressional Limited for Washington, D. C., which is the first stop of four months to be spent in travel and visiting relatives and friends.

Mr. Kane denies that he is "looking over the situation." He thinks that has been done to death. While he expects to visit many exhibitors and exchange men, scores of whom in all sections of the country he counts as personal friends, he has nothing to sell them.

Arthur S. Kane.

June will be spent in Chicago, Kansas City, Topeka, Omaha and Fort Dodge; July in Seattle, and August in California.

"I ought to get 'the freedom of the city,' whatever that is, or the best cell in town upon reaching Topeka, Kansas," said Mr. Kane, before leaving. "That was where most of my work as a newspaper man was done, and things are run by four former newspaper pals as follows: Arthur Capper, governor of Kansas; J. E. House, mayor of Topeka; L. L. Keine, sheriff of Shawnee county; Harvey Parsons, chief of police. Perhaps, also, they might 'listen to reason' regarding censorship there."

Among the attractions which Mr. Kane expects to take in are the Canadian Rockies, Mount Rainier, Yosemite, the California expositions and Grand Canyon, and while in California he will look over the big producing plants which he has been invited to inspect. The following film exchange points—Minneapolis, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver—and territory contiguous will be visited before Mr. Kane's return to New York September 15 or October 1.

GLYNNE & WARD'S NEW PROJECT.

Messrs. Glynn & Ward, proprietors of the Alhambra theatre at Halsey street and Knickerbocker avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. C., are having plans drawn for another big moving picture theater which they are to build in Brooklyn. The contemplated structure will be erected at the corner of Nostrand avenue and Robinson street, and will cost, it is estimated, $65,000. It will have 1,500 seats. The new house will be known as the Mardi Gras and will stand on a plot 110 by 100 feet.

DEL HENDERSON DOUBLES.

For the first time since joining the Keystone, Del Henderson will appear on the curtain, being engaged in playing a leading part and directing at the same time.

Tom Forman

THE Lasky Feature Play Company wishes to call particular attention to the notable work which is being done by Mr. Tom Forman, the young juvenile of the regular Lasky Stock Company.

Mr. Forman first came under the direction of the Lasky Company at the time of the production of "Young Romance," with Edith Taliaferro as the star, in which Mr. Forman played the role opposite Miss Taliaferro with such a genuine sense of comedy and such earnestness in the dramatic passages that he really divided the honors in that film success.

Tom Forman.

Mr. Forman's second role under the Lasky management was that of Robert Hayes, the young attorney in the Lasky-Belasco production of "The Governor's Lady," and this was followed by the part of Sir Spencer in "The Gentleman of Leisure," the comedy picture in which Wallace Eddinger played the stellar role.

When Ina Claire was engaged by the Lasky Company and cast to make her debut in the picturization of "The Wild Goose Chase," it was finally decided that Mr. Forman should have a second opportunity as leading man for a noted star. Consequently he was cast for the role of Bob, and his success in this part will be self evident, as the production has its first releases this week.

Mr. Forman plays important roles in a number of productions to be released during the summer by the Lasky Feature Play Company. Among these are the characters of Lieut. Von Mitter in "The Puppet Crown," and Detective Clark in "Fighting Hope," and the French valet in "Chimmie Fadden."

WORLD FILM GETS LARDNER'S YARNS.

Ring Lardner's work is to be seen in photoplay form. The famous ball player Al, and his pal, who write the interesting baseball letters that have been appearing in the Saturday Evening Post, have come through the motion picture world, in the form of one-reel comedies, that are to be released in a series of twelve comedies.

The World Film Corporation has arranged to market these unique comedies, and in the private showing that was recently given the World Film staff it was evident that a new line of comedies will be available for public along an idea that it was at once a novelty and a well advertised feature. The comedies have been made in Chicago, and the direction was in the hands of capable men who have been associated with various film concerns in the windy city.

JIMMY VINCENT WEARS A SMILE.

James Vincent, who directed "The Melting Pot" for the Cort Film Corporation, has something of an unusual smile on his face this week. He not only is pleased himself but has received the congratulations of many acquaintances in the business because of the bit of film which shows the huge melting pot with all races of the earth descending into its boiling depths. Mr. Vincent worked out the idea, which required five exposures of the negative before it was finished. This scene was one of the very patent reasons for the applause which greeted the film at the Hippodrome on the occasion of its first public showing.

"HEARTS AND THE HIGHWAY" OUT JUNE 2.

The Vitagraph Company announces that its five-part feature, "Hearts and the Highway," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, was released on Wednesday, June 2, as an extra subject in addition to those already announced by the V. L. S. E. In the cast are Lillian Walker and all the more prominent Vitagraph players.

MUNICIPAL THEATERS IN NORWAY.

The Norwegian Diet recently passed a law providing that the licenses of all motion picture theatres in the country shall expire in 1916. The municipalities will then be at liberty either to renew the licenses or to establish municipal theatres. A number of smaller Norwegian cities, as, for example, Vardo, Tromso, Fredrikshald, and Notodden have already determined to municipalize their motion picture houses, and larger cities are now considering the question. It is not a partisan question, for while the proposal to municipalize these theatres in Christiana was made by the socialists, in Trondhjem, a like proposal originated with the party of the right. Mr. Bauck, the mayor of Trondhjem, lays great stress on the educational value of the motion picture; he considers it the duty of the city in the interest of its youthful citizens to control the performances of these theatres. Moreover, it is to be remembered that municipal revenue would be increased by the surplus earnings of the theatres.

In order to avoid unnecessary hardship to the proprietors of the theatres, the city of Trondhjem will not expropriate the private establishments until 1918. There are at the present five or six motion picture theaters in the city. According to the mayor's plan the municipality will maintain only two theaters, both on a large scale. It is expected that in this way the expenses will be reduced considerably.—Frankfurter Zeitung, May 1.

PRIZE-WINNING DOGS IN "THE MOONSTONE."

In the World Film release, "The Moonstone;" very expensive dogs will be seen. Director Frank Crane was fortunate in securing from Frank Addvman, who has kennels at Ardsley, N. Y., two dogs whose pedigree entitles them to special standing in the canine world. One, Leddie, is an English setter, who has won medals, and the other is a Scotch deerhound, who is known to all dog fanciers.

In accordance with Mr. Crane's desire to secure correct details in every possible respect, he is arranging to have an elephant used in the making of "The Moonstone."

Miss Reine Davies

ANOTHER star of the legitimate stake has capitulated to the lure of the "movies." She is Miss Reine Davies, acknowledged to be one of the most beautiful women on the stage, and who is popularly known as "The American Beauty," and probably one of the best known actresses before the public today. Miss Davies is to be starred in "Sunday," the play in which Miss Ethel Barrymore scored such a triumph in this country and in Great Britain. It will be produced by the George W. Lederer Filmotions Company.

Miss Reine Davies.

To obtain Miss Davies it was necessary to get the consent of Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president of the World Film Corporation, who had signed her for several pictures later in the season. Miss Davies, who has been in vaudeville since being leading woman with Willie Collier in "Love Among the Lions," was compelled to cancel many weeks' bookings. This was done against the protest of the U. B. O., as she has been one of the favorite headliners on the Big Time, and no actress has a larger personal following than she.

Miss Davies will have an opportunity to display her wonderful wardrobe, being considered one of the best dressed women on the stage, which will be quite a treat for the women patrons of the pictures. Miss Davies begins her debut this week and is enthusiastic about it, as the screen version has been made so that she may be seen in many different environments, introducing the wild life of the lumber camp and progressing to the most exclusive English social circles.

About Charles Clary

CHARLESTON, ILL., may not be the largest city in the world, but nevertheless it claims distinction for several reasons, notable among them as the birthplace of Charles Clary, who, after five years as a star of the Selig studio, has recently become a member of the Reliance-Majestic-Mutual stock companies at the Hollywood (California) studios.

Beginning his stage career in Kansas City, Mo., where he appeared in public for the first time in an amateur production presented under the auspices of the school's dramatic club, Mr. Clary worked his way into the legitimate by means of the old Third Avenue theater, in Seattle, Wash., later shifting his many talents to Broadway, where he appeared in support of Mary Mannering, Mrs. Leslie Carter and other celebrities of the speaking stage.

Charles Clary.

At the height of his career on Broadway Mr. Clary recognized the future of motion pictures and when the right offer was made, quickly transferred his allegiance. That was five years ago. He has been at it, with ever increasing success, ever since.

Since joining the Griffith-Mutual forces at Hollywood, Mr. Clary has played the title role in the Mutual Masterpicture, "Strathmore," picturized from Ouida's celebrated novel of that name and later in "The Stroke of the Angelus," a two-part Majestic, in which he portrayed the young gringo.

Mr. Clary has several hobbies, notably among them his attachment for good books and his fondness for athletics. Every morning, regardless of weather conditions, he rises at five o'clock, and, after a five-mile run over the hills and dales, takes a shower and rub-down, eats a hearty meal, smokes a good cigar and is ready to begin work in the studio at eight o'clock.

BRENON WORKING ON NEW PICTURE.

Herbert Brenon has a big surprise in store that can only be judged by the preparations now under way, and—the secrecy in which the production is being shrouded. It is known that the services of a well-known Broadway star have been secured, and Decoration Day saw Mr. Brenon at Atlantic City, busy with some novel scenes on the big boardwalk.

Next week will see him back on Broadway, where he will introduce some spectacular innovations of a kind never before attempted. The entire production is said to give far wider scope to Mr. Brenon's versatile genius, than either the fantastic idyll, "Neptune's Daughter," or the emotional masterpieces, "The Clemenceau Case," "The Kreutzer Sonata" and "The Two Orphans." It is an original story written by Mr. Brenon.

KERRIGAN IS IMPROVING VERY SLOWLY.

That J. Warren Kerrigan, popular Universal star, will not be in condition to return to his work at the studio for several weeks is the consensus of opinion of physicians who have been in attendance on Mr. Kerrigan since his recent operation, and until such time as he recovers the fans will have to be deprived of his presence on the screen.

Nearly two weeks ago Mr. Kerrigan was removed to a Pasadena hospital where he had a minor operation performed. It was thought at first that he would be up and around within two weeks at the latest. Later complications, however, caused so great a loss of blood and strength that it soon became evident that such a thing would be out of the question.

WESTERN DRAMAS COMING BACK.

Owing to frequent demands from theater managers for more western dramas, the United Film Service recently instigated an investigation through the exchanges to find out whether the seeming return to popularity of the comboy and his picturesque calling was the result of a definite demand on the part of the picture-loving public or one of the false alarms so well known to readers of the pulse of the populace.

It has taken considerable time and labor to collect sufficient reliable information on the subject to draw any definite conclusions, but much interesting light has been thrown upon the likes and dislikes of the theater-going population of different sections of the country.

"The general opinion of the exhibitors with whom we have come into contact," concludes Mr. Madsen, "shows a greater demand for Western subjects than any other class of pictures."

GRAND THEATER IN NEW HANDS.

The Grand theater, in Winthrop, Mass., has changed ownership. Roger N. Wentworth and Alfred L. Parkman have become the lessees and managers of this amusement place. Mr. Wentworth was formerly assistant manager of Gordan's Olympia theater in Boston, and is acquainted with a large number of New England picture men. The Grand was reopened May 24. An orchestra, composed of six women, under the directorship of Miss Mae Elizabeth Reddy, plays the accompaniment to the pictures. The evening prices are 20 cents for reserved seats and 10 cents for the unreserved. Matinee entertainments are given for 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children under 12 years.

MARION FAIRFAX NOW A LASKY PHOTO-DRAMATIST.

In keeping with the policy of building up its photodramatic scenario department to the highest possible grades of efficiency, the Lasky Feature Play Company has entered into a contract with Miss Marion Fairfax, the famous New York dramatist, who will leave for the studios in Hollywood this week.

The scenario department of the Lasky Feature Play Company is completely in charge of Wm. C. De Mille, who already has the assistance of Miss Margaret Turnbull, who is widely known as a dramatist of success, and Hector Turnbull, until recently dramatic editor of the New York Tribune.

W. MacLEOD RAINE'S STORIES FOR UNITED.

The Ideal Company will shortly release through the United Program a series of "somewhat different" western stories from the pen of the foremost writer of cowboy tales, William MacLeod Raine. A special company of players at the Ideal studios in Los Angeles, Cal., was organized for the purposes of producing these films and the leading roles in the hands of Norbert Myles and Edna Payne, both ideally typical western characters, give added realism to the exciting and sensational incidents of the books. Mary Murillo, Ideal scenario editor, scenalized the Raine stores, the first two of which are "Brand Blotters" and "Crooked Trails and Straight."

REPORTS INCREASED BUSINESS.

The Southern Electrical Company, "The One Bright Spot" of San Diego, Cal., announces a decided increase in business in their motion picture and theatrical supply department. This department is one of the largest and best equipped on the coast and supplies all territory south of Los Angeles. In addition to the Exposition crowds, the peculiar climatic conditions existing makes this one of the best moving picture theatre cities in the country. The company's engineer is at present planning several splendid installations.

RAFFERTY TO APPEAR IN PERSON.

Fred Dollinger, the business and pictorial manager of the handsome Clearmont Theatre, at Broadway and 135th street, New York, has arranged with the World Film Corporation for the entire series of Rafferty comedies, and as an added attraction for the opening night, June 7, President Charles C. O'Hara, of the All Celtic Company has consented to allow his leading man, Joseph Sullivan, who plays Rafferty in the series, to appear in person.

Review of Current Productions

"The Tragedies of the Crystal Globe"

A Beautiful Three-Part Edison Example of the Poetic Drama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WRITTEN by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and directed by Richard Ridgely, "The Tragedies of the Crystal Globe" is characterized by a passion for sincerity on the part of the author, especially in the matter of forces which are psychologically subtle, lighted up by charming and rare artistry on the part of the director. Mrs. Woodrow seems to be one of the few who recognize the superior appeal of character change and revelation over a series of sensational incidents that happen in accord with an author's arbitrary fancy. A tragic atmosphere dominates straight through, from beginning to end, without straining for effect at any stage, but the play's fascination can be equally ascribed to a wondrous harmony of treatment.

The mounting of a screen picture is a craft by itself, and it is one which Ridgely has mastered in this case. His choice of exteriors, his fittings of interiors, his selection of costumes, his effects of light and shadow, all these deserve high commendation. All this is to be commended for its intrinsic merit and because it constitutes a contribution to progress away from the idea that a visualized story depends almost wholly upon action. While the settings are an integral part of the whole, they serve by delicate and unobtrusive suggestion to produce an effect almost as impossible on the stage as in print. I have designated this story as poetic because it is within the bounds of idealistic contrast to the prosaic with which we are surfeited. The portrayals of Mabel Trunelle and of Bigelow Cooper are in keeping with what will long stand as one of the finest examples of its kind ever shown on the screen.

"Conscience"

A Powerful Universal Production in Four Reels Depicting the Evil Side of Capital Punishment.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE Imp Company has turned out nothing stronger of late than this four-reel production, written by Curtis Benton and produced by Stuart Payton. It contains a few touches of sensationalism, but it brings home a remarkably strong argument against capital punishment in cases where the verdict is based on purely circumstantial evidence. The cast is well balanced and proficient throughout. Wm. J. Welch gives a powerful presentation of the murderer. Others appearing are the author, Alan J. Holubar, Wm. Bailey, Frances Nelson and Howard Crampton.

The plot is at all times clear and contains a proper degree of suspense. The murder itself was exceptionally well contrived for a case of this sort and so developed that the observer is at all times in full possession of the facts. This gives the work of the criminologist later a strong psychological interest.

In the opening scenes Grant and Benson are partners. They control certain valuable patents and Benson wishes to get rid of his partner, by fair means or foul, to gain exclusive possession. Grant gets into an altercation with an intoxicated youth named Dave. He gives Dave a black eye. The lad goes home and his mother tells him to go back to Grant and admit that he was in the wrong.

This brings up the big scene in the story. Benson is just leaving Grant's apartments as Dave appears to apologize. He talks with Dave a moment, learns his errand, and then moves on. While Dave is engaged in patching up his quarrel with Grant, a bullet is fired through the open window, which strikes Grant and kills him instantly. Dave is of course held for the crime. Benson returns in a casual way and fastens the crime on the youth. He is sent to the electric chair shortly afterward.

Then comes the interesting denouement. Five years later a criminologist named Sprague is visiting the state prison. He laughs when the warden tries to tell him many innocent men have gone to the electric chair. The warden then brings up the case of Dave, saying he always believed the youth innocent. Sprague becomes interested and sets to work on the matter. He visits Grant's former apartments and after certain investigation decides the shot was fired through the upper window by a man in a rope swing hanging from a nearby tree. This leads suspicion to the former partner, who alone benefited by Grant's death. Then follows the relentless effort to get the facts from the real murderer, the breaking down of his self-control and the final obtaining of a confession.

The story deals entirely with sordid scenes and situations, but it conveys an important lesson to the observer and the excellence of the general development does much to make one forget the character of the plot.

Pathe Studio Struck by Lightning.

Just as the "Romance of Elaine" company and the Whartons were saying their farewells in the Pathe Studio last Saturday, lightning struck one of the chimneys. Some of the players were hurled to the floor and badly shaken up, but no serious damage was done. Pearl White was thrown against an iron pillar and slightly bruised, and Lionel Barrymore was hit by a chimney brick which crashed through the glass roof. After the confusion was over it was regretted that a cameraman had not been on the job to film another exploit of Elaine.

Fritzi Brunette in "Her Wedding Night."

Fritzi Brunette is now working in a clever one-reel comedy written by L. V. Jefferson, entitled "Her Wedding Night." The picture is being staged by the Joker Comedy Company under the direction of Robert Daly. Miss Brunette plays the leading feminine role.

"Guarding Old Glory."

A Timely Five-Reel Subject of Fine Educational and Patriotic Merit, Devoted to the Army and Navy of the United States.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN these days of blood and iron, when all the great nations of Europe are engaged in a war that for ferocity and carnage and the mighty armies brought in conflict dwarfs all the other wars of history, it is well that citizens of the United States should be acquainted with the strength and weakness of their beloved country in matters that stand for the protection of the flag and the rights of the nation. It is well that we should know the facts about these matters, so that the national spirit may be keenly aroused and our weak places strengthened—not for war but for its prevention.

I viewed five reels of moving pictures the other day, wholly devoted to the United States army and navy, and became so absorbed that, when "Old Glory" faded out in the final scene, I could scarcely realize that I had been watching the screen for nearly one hour and a half. These five reels of pictures have been assembled by F. O. Neilsen, after viewing many thousands of feet of negatives touching on this subject. Such parts of these negatives as served his purpose were purchased, and also other negatives for which he purchased the copyrights. All the selected parts were then put together in a well connected manner, so that the spectator has before him on the screen, in a continuous whole, the best films I have ever seen on our army and navy.

The leaders have been most happily chosen and cannot fail to arouse patriotic ardor, and the subtitles are fully explanatory of the scenes.

Part I is introduced by the leader, "Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty; Part II by "To Be Prepared for War Is One of the Most Effectual Means of Preserving Peace;" Part III by "God Grants Liberty Only to Those Who Love It and Are Always Ready to Guard and Defend It;" Part IV by "Our Country. In her intercourse with other nations may she always be right; but our country, right or wrong;" and Part V by "Ship for Ship Our Navy is Equal, If Not Superior, to that of Any Other Nation" (Rear Admiral Chas. T. Badger).

These films are not intended to arouse "spreadeagleism," but rather to make one feel proud of what Uncle Sam can do when he once undertakes to do a thing. After seeing them we cannot help feeling that man for man in the army and ship for ship on the sea the United States can hold its own with any power; but we are also convinced that Uncle Sam must give us many more of them in order to do so.

The first reel shows us the training of cadets at West Point, the training of recruits at the big army stations, the drilling of cavalrymen, the soldier cooks baking bread, the evolutions of heavy field artillery and of mountain batteries, the signal corps and their skill in field wireless, etc. Then after months of drill we see a brigade of cavalry and a machine gun platoon return to camp as the finished product.

Reel two deals with the navy. The big dreadnaught New York is seen steaming under Brooklyn Bridge, and afterwards we view the launching of the Pennsylvania. The jackies are seen at drill on the ships, and then expert firing with the 6-inch guns is witnessed. Swift torpedo boats are then seen, followed by deadly submarines with their crews, etc.

The third reel introduces the aviators and the aerial bombs used by them, demonstrations being made of the terrific force of these explosives. Our big 14-inch coast defense guns, the laying of mines in harbors and their tremendous destructiveness are viewed.

Reel four shows the call to arms of the regulars and their swift moving to destinations; Gen. Funston and his men off to Vera Cruz, the evolutions of field batteries, the firing of the machine gun, 400 shots to the minute, the firing of 12-inch mortars and 12-inch rifles with deadly accuracy.

The fifth reel shows the landing of a force in small boats from a battleship, and marines and sailors going into action, side by side. Armored launches support them. The giant guns of the fleet cover their advance. A submarine is then seen slowly submerging until her periscope only is above water, leaving a tell-tale ripple as the vessel rapidly advances.

The closing scene, a very remarkable one, shows a broadside from the fleet, taken when evening is closing in. The flashes from the great guns appear like streaks of forked lightning against the dark banks of clouds.

Popular Plays and Players Make an Interesting Five-Part Drama Out of Clyde Fitch's Play—Released on Metro Program.

ever, with an abundance of superb studio sets, many of them representing lavishly furnished rooms in costly residences, is of even excellence, whereas the acting is more than ordinarily satisfying. The picture's chief defect—not a vital one in view of the compensating virtues—is the introduction of incidents, pleasing in themselves, but not calculated to advance the story. This tendency is especially noticable in the first reel that presents with considerable detail the home life of very delightful children. And, after all, an audience's appreciation of the charming youngsters may justify the prominence afforded them, even if the plot does not.

Florence Reed is Georgiana Carley, the young woman who is ready to sacrifice herself for her very foolish brother and who is on the verge of marrying a man who has tricked her into his power, when her soldier lover returns from the Philippines and stops the ceremony. The army officer takes the place of the deposed bridegroom and the minister continues with the service just as though nothing had happened. Thoroughly melodramatic as these scenes necessarily become, they none the less allow Miss Reed opportunity for some forceful emotional acting and she is always intense and convincing.

Better from a dramatic standpoint and finely handled by Miss Reed and those in her support, is the typically Clyde Fitch situation in the fourth reel where we find Georgiana placing herself in a compromising position with the Grand Duke in order to protect the fair name of her sister-in-law. In preparing for this climax and realizing its fullest possibilities, the scenario was cleverly contrived and Director Blache injected several telling bits of business to increase the suspense. His locations for the action purporting to transpire in the Philippines are suitable and every now and then he introduces an oddly pleasing light effect. Players whose work deserves mention are Robert H. Barrat, Fraunie Fraunholz, William A. Morse and James O'Neill.

TURNER DIRECTING "THE SCARLET SIN."

"The Scarlet Sin" is the title of an unusual four-reel feature on which Otis Turner and Hobart Bosworth have started work. The production is one of the largest that has been attempted at Universal City for some time and Mr. Bosworth suggested that to ensure its proper production it might be well to have two producers at work on it. Accordingly Mr. Turner was named as co-worker, at which the wise ones about the studio smiled and began looking forward to the day of the picture's release, knowing that such a combination could not result in anything but the very best. Hobart Bosworth, Jane Novak, Hart Hoxie, Grace Thompson, Frank Elliott, Ed. Brown, Wadsworth Harris and Helen Wright comprise the cast of characters.

"When the Mind Sleeps."

Kalem Three-Reel Broadway Favorites Offering—"Scientific" Melodrama That Surely Creates a New Feeling of Horror—Features Myrtle Tannehill.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE situation whose horror is first made wholly clear in the third reel of this picture, "When the Mind Sleeps," seems to this reviewer absolutely fresh and powerfully effective, due to the clever bringing together of several little horrors. The failing of horror as entertainment lies in the fact that it is never very far from disgust. In this picture, as it opens in the first reel, the feeling of disgust is prominent at seeing a half-witted young woman left as ward of a bestially-minded club man and his undisguised and unhesitant willingness to make use of his position for the most outrageous relationship. The woman-child's nurse intervenes in time to save her. She is discharged; but before she goes, she impresses on the dark mind of her charge that she is not to let her guardian kiss her. When he tries it again the grown-up child knocks him on the head with a vase.

Five men come prominently into the life of this half-witted woman and three of them are vile, one is weak and one is a wandering fiddler who is her only friend. She escapes with the fiddler from her filthy guardian and his not less slimy-souled friend, wanders about the world and comes to a sanitarium of a doctor, who has found that by using a drug he can stimulate clouded wits to clearness. He and his assistant cure her; both want to marry her, but the elder man alone knows the drug which the girl needs constantly. The situation leads up to a fight between these two, each with a long operating knife. The elder is killed and the younger mortally wounded. He gets what is left of the drug and struggles to the girl before he also dies. She sees what has happened, throws the precious bottle out of the window and, half-witted once more, goes back to her wandering with the fiddler.

"The Melting Pot."

A Splendid Visualization of Israel Zangwill's Wonderful Story with Walker Whiteside and Miss Valentine Grant in the Principal Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

TO APPRECIATE the power and poetry of Zangwill's story, one must see this feature film made by the Cort Film Corporation. There are few writers living to-day who wield a pen of greater power than this gifted son of Israel, and it may be doubted whether he ever wielded it with more enthusiasm and inspiration than in the story of "The Melting Pot."

A young Jew, David Quixano, a gifted musician and full of that spiritual power which is a heritage of his race, is living with his family in Kishineff when that ill fated city becomes the theater of fierce and bloody religious persecution of which the Jews are the victims. Waves of bloody violence overwhelm David's home and he is left desolate in the world. He has heard of a new country in the distant west where men are allowed to work out their destinies and where religious bigotry and persecution are unknown. Fate ordains that he should go to the new land. Conditions in the new world are at first strange to him and to keep soul and body together he has to play in concert halls of the east side and contend with hardships and struggles. As he absorbs the American spirit, his vivid fancy conceives the idea of writing a symphony called "The Melting Pot." Into this symphony he crowds all his rare musical talent seeking to symbolize in sound the genesis and the growth of this new world which now stands at the head of human civilization.

Walker Whiteside embodies Israel Zangwill's conception of the young Jewish dreamer with great success. There is all through the play a suggestion of latent power which well accords with the character of David Quixano. Not only is the idea of the play highly poetic, but the form of its expression is splendidly dramatic. David and his co-religionists while in Russia are befriended by Vera, the daughter of the cruel governor and persecutor of the Jews. This difficult part of Scene from "The Melting Pot" (Cort).

Vera was impersonated with uncommon skill by Miss Valentine Grant, who engaged the sympathy of the audience at her very first appearance upon the screen in this play and whose masterly handling of great emotional scenes contributed in no small degree to the success of this play. I think that every American audience will be found extremely responsive to this play. It breathes a spirit of the best Americanism in the traditions of our history. Only a man of Israel Zangwill's overshadowing genius could have done justice to so splendid a subject.

The play is not free from blemishes. The titles obviously need retouching and there is no reason in the world why a motion picture of New York harbor could not be specially taken for this great feature. The substitute which was evidently borrowed, jars unpleasantly upon the senses.

Animated News Enterprise

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial Has Exposition—Exhibits Much Initiative.

THE Hearst-Selig News Pictorial is the only animated newspaper in the country that will be permitted to have a camera man inside the grounds of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. A. E. Wallace, staff photographer, was first to cover the mobilization of the Italian army and the Italian war demonstrations. Ariel Varges, staff photographer, at the front with the Serbian army, has sent across thousands of feet of exclusive film for early release.

Arrangements have been completed by which the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial receives the official war films from the German and the French governments.

The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial not only presented a wonderful picture of the ill-fated Lusitania but was also the only animated newspaper to show a picture of the type of German submarine that sank the Lusitania. This was followed up with pictures of the crowds reading war bulletins, an exclusive picture of Madam de Page who went down with the Lusitania and pictures showing how torpedoes are discharged from submarines.

The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial was the first news reel to show pictures of the United States fleet review in New York harbor.

It is claimed that the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial is first in war, first in peace and first in popularity, and recent "scoops" achieved by that enterprising twice-a-week new film would certainly substantiate these claims.

NEW MINA PLAYERS.

The first MinA picture to come from MinA's new studios in Los Angeles is "Life's Mysteries," which will be released June 3 on the licensed program. It is a comedy in one reel directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

A number of additions have been made to the roster of MinA players, and they make their first appearance under the new banner in "Life's Mysteries." Among them are Louis Fitzroy, formerly with Nestor-Universal, who plays the leads in this picture; Jane Colwell, at one time leading woman with Selig, who is cast for the leading feminine role; and Jefferson Osbourne, a motion picture player of long experience, who has appeared in Nestor-Universal productions, Venus Features, Bosworth and other releases.

"The Pretty Sister of Jose."

Marguerite Clark Scores in Charming Picture Produced by the Famous Players in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE PRETTY SISTER OF JOSE," produced by the Famous Players with Marguerite Clark as Pepita, is a beautiful picture, perhaps one would not go far wrong in saying, the most beautiful picture in which Miss Clark has appeared. It gratifies the eye in every scene; it reaches the sympathies; it satisfies a desire for a logically balanced romantic story and it offers some uncommonly fine acting. In an all but forgotten stage play, Maude Adams was the first to act the fascinating Pepita, the central figure in Frances Hodgson Burnett's portrayal of emotional people to whom love and life are synonymous. Pepita, Jose, the irresistible Sebastiano are met in the sensuous atmosphere of Spain—the Spain of fragrant gardens and bullfights, of love and cruelty. The story does not ignore contrasts; nor more does it appear to violate probabilities.

Scene from "The Pretty Sister of Jose" (Famous Players).

Interest is immediately caught by a finely acted bit of drama showing the tragic death of Pepita's mother who, no longer beautiful and spurned by her husband, plunges a dagger into her breast. Before the tragedy there was no happier girl in all the countryside than Pepita; after it, she is bitter, she will never marry. There are three phases in the characterization given by Miss Clark, first a merry, radiant child playing in the fields with Jose; next a bewitching coquette who snaps her fingers at the handsome Sebastiano and scorns his love; finally a heart-broken young woman who kneels at the bedside of her wounded lover, her pride humbled, the laughter gone from her face.

Whether the first appeal in "The Pretty Sister of Jose" be attributed to the sympathetic personality of Miss Clark, or to the artistic tone and superior quality of the production in its entirely, is of small consequence. Everything is made to harmonize in the creation of a completely artistic picture, dramatic without becoming melodramatic, human, charming and occasionally humorous. The director displayed a nice judgment in his variation of scenes, running from tragedy to light comedy, all having a legitimate place in the story's progress, and natural to the characters. There is humor in Pepita's flouting of Sebastiano, also in Jose's mock bullfight with a goat for the bull, and there is tragedy in the girl's final capitulation at the bedside of her dying sweetheart.

How well Jack Pickford is developing as a mature actor is shown in his playing of Jose. Rupert Julian makes a forceful Sebastiano and among others who contribute appreciably to the success of the picture are Edith Chapman, William Lloyd, Teddy Sampson and Dick Rossen.

"Love, Snow and Ice."

Three-Reel Vitagraph Comedy Introducing Ice Carnival and Winter Sports at Saranac Lake.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

LACKING a story of any consequence, Wally Van's production of "Love, Snow and Ice" becomes a detailed depiction of winter activities at Saranac Lake with a fair amount of interpolated comedy. Wally Van of course plays an important part himself; then there are Albert Roccardi as a gay old judge, Nitra Frazer as his daughter and Donald MacBride in the role of the suitor favored by the father, but not by the girl. For three reels these characters are carried through a series of misadventures explained by the attempted elopement of Wally Van and the judge's daughter. The chase across snow and ice and through the mountains starts early in the first reel and is not concluded until the close of the picture when the resources of Saranac Lake have been exhausted.

The slender thread of the story is broken whenever convenient to picture with fine spectacular effect events such as the winter carnival, skating races, fancy skating, tobogganing, ice-boats jockeying for position before the start of the race, everything, in fact, in any way pertaining to the joy of life in the Adirondacks in the winter. The fugitive lovers descend mountains on snowshoes and on skis; they find a sled drawn by dogs and start merrily for the home of the minister with the judge and the unwelcome suitor in close pursuit; they are all but married several times before the ceremony is performed and the young people receive the parental blessing.

Scene from "Love, Snow and Ice" (Vitagraph).

Most of the scenes are interesting in themselves, the photography is clear and there is natural comedy in several of the situations played in a farcical spirit by the actors in the principal roles. The carnival ball is a very gay affair, colorful in the costumes of those who attend and alive with action. For a picture that makes no pretense of presenting a real story, "Love, Snow and Ice" does very well.

Chaplin Outchaplined.

Everybody is generous and cordial in advertising Charlie Chaplin. So when Murray's, the famous New York cafe, gave a "Chaplin Night" for a novelty, a throng of photoplayers turned out to help boost a fellow player. Everybody was to dress as the famous film funnyman, and prizes were awarded. Strange to say, a vaudevillian carried off the first prize, but to the credit of the Thanhouser representation must go the big scoop—second and third place. Otto Berg, of the New Rochelle organization, captured the second trophy and little Leland Benham took third. Berg surprised the guests with a headlong dive into the magnificent glass fountain, and his antics were the sight of the evening. Little Leland was a miniature Chaplin and his work stamped him a veritable pocket edition of the popular comedian. Both Thanhouserites came away with beautiful silver loving cups.

"When the Call Came"

Two-Reel Ideal Presenting a Story in Which a Professional Burglar Responds to the Call of Humanity.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of this production is one that will appeal to the majority of people because of the human, or protective sentiment for which it stands. It may be a highly idealistic idea that allows of a professional burglar being so touched by the circumstances surrounding an accidental burglary as to offer to take the place of the offender so that the latter may be spared to his deaf and blind mother. At the same time the philosophy of the story is healthful, and an excellent tonic to place before a selfish public.

George Larkin, Mrs. Wright and Will Sheerer play the principal roles in the picture and play them well. The story treats of the ill-luck of the son of a deaf and blind woman. The young man is the only link between her and the outside world. He is the only hope in life that she has.

One day a careless employee at the art shop at which the young man is employed knocks from his hand a bit of china which he has been decorating, causing him thereby to lose his position. From this circumstance arises that which drives him to steal in order to obtain food for his mother and himself. Another burglar entering at the same time is arrested, and knowing something of the life of the other man, decides to suffer in his stead. The moral sense of the other, however, will not permit of such a thing, and he serves his term in prison.

But in the meantime the would-be benefactor still finds opportunity to be of use; for, entering the home of the unfortunate man, he is taken by the blind mother for her son, and thereupon decides not to destroy her illusion. He remains as the son of the afflicted woman, performing the same duties for her as her own son has done, and when the convict is released passes his job on to him and takes the next train west.

The picture has been well directed and is satisfactory in almost every detail.

"Wormwood"

Marie Corelli's Novel Is Made the Basis of a Morbid Picture Directed by Marshall Farnum.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE photoplay version of "Wormwood" is quite as cheerful as a day passed in the alcoholic ward of Bellevue hospital, or in the morgue. Marie Corelli's distorted notions about life, her utter morbidness given a halo of religious sentimentality, are found at their very best in this foolish story that never had any standing even in the lower class literature of England. To dignify such gloomy trash by claiming it presents an argument against drink is childish piffle that would be laughable were it not so dangerously easy to confuse true presentations of actual facts with meaningless rubbish.

Note the contents of this picture: One seduction, one death from grief over the seduction; one murder, after which the body is thrown into a lake; two suicides, one by shooting, the other by a leap from a bridge; another death, presumably from sorrow, the remains being exposed after the undertaker has arranged the flowers; a detailed depiction of the mental and physical agonies of a man afflicted with delirium tremens; the death of this man and last of all a maudlin letter to a priest, asking for absolution, a touch well in keeping with Marie Corelli's style.

This, of course, is a mere summary of the high points in a story that offers other lesser attractions. The first two reels are mostly utilized in showing the varying manner in which Pauline receives the embraces of her two lovers; how she learns to kiss and discovers the difference between love and real love. The epidemic of deaths does not begin until Beauvais has formed the absinthe habit. It is too bad that the fine camera work, particularly evident in the last reel, was not utilized for a better purpose, and the same applies to the artistic performances given by Ethel Kauffman, John Sainpolis and Charles Arthur. Marshall Farnum directed the picture.

Superba Company in Catskills.

Director Charles Hutchison of the Superba Motion Picture Company has taken his troupe of photoplay artists to the Catskill Mountains, where they will make a burlesque comedy on "Rip Van Winkle," which will appear on the United Program. Mr. Hutchison spent a great deal of time getting together the proper costumes and in locating a place in the mountains which would carry out exactly the descriptions of the characters of Washington Irving's famous story. He has taken with him a company of twenty players. W. E. Browning will play the part of Rip Van Winkle, Lena Davis will act the part of his wife, the shrew, Edith Thornton will interpret the role of Rip's beautiful niece, Joe Burke will play the burgomeister, and Mr. Hutchison himself will be the schoolmaster. Other members of the company are Miss Cora Becker, Max Hulig, Will Rosser and twelve boys, who will take the minor parts. The company will return in the near future.

Edwin August Builds Town

The scene of "The Honor Man," a two-part photodrama written by Edwin August and produced by him for the United Program last week, required a setting of a small settlement town, in which most of the action took place. Since there was no small town of the required qualifications obtainable, Mr. August built one at South Beach, Staten Island, having found first that the rolling and sandy hills of the locality were all that could be desired for "local color." The town, consisting of a hotel, bar room and dance hall, log cabin, Chinese laundry and stable, was built for the Pyramid company by "Bud" Scott, an ex-cowpuncher who actually drove the stage coaches in early days in Montana.

It is not a matter of any particular consequence what kind of people we are shown in the screen story, it is not to be expected that we should experience any sympathetic interest in them whatever. Of what moment is it whether they live or die? Give us action, a holdup, a stage robbery at the pistol point, a division of the spoils between Cash and his pal, then some hard riding to escape, some more hard riding to inform the sheriff, and still more hard riding in pursuit of the bandits, what more does an audience want?

pal of Cash is the blackest kind of a villain—Cash is one of the noble sort, of the type that Europe has begotten in the highest circles—he merely says, "I have got the drop on you, so hand over." Gentlemen get medals and titles for doing that in Europe. The pal is base enough to try to steal the lady playing "opposite" and turns informer on Cash for the sake of a reward. A plague on such villains! The only thing to do with such men is to exterminate them, particularly in the interest of honorable gentlemen who merely steal for a living. Such is the subject matter of "Cash Parish's Pal," but nearly all the characters ride well. It is really a pleasure to witness such horsemanship.

"The Alien

A Finished Production in Which George Beban Shows a High Order of Art, Beginning with the Screen and Ending with the Speaking Stage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

A MASTERPIECE. This is one of the plays which have the universe for their theater and mankind for their cast. Wide and varied as is the range of this play there is not, from the first to the last, one false touch or one wrong move. Thomas H. Ince, who directed the play, deserves unstinted praise. This play makes it plain that he belongs in the first flight of directors. After seeing "The Alien" it is difficult for me to imagine any task which this director could not perform with credit to himself and pleasure to his audience. The story of "The Alien" is woven with uncommon skill and power. There is in the development of every drama what may be described as a "rise of interest." The producer who is competent to create such a "rise of interest" and then fully sustain it, is a master of his craft. In this story the "rise of interest" comes early. It grows smoothly and swiftly; every sense of proportion is carefully preserved throughout and there is that final test of real quality: finish and perfection in detail work and what appears to the spectator as the perfect ease and naturalness of every scene and of every situation.

In the cast Mr. Beban dominates and overshadows the rest. One would indeed have to go back to the performances of the greatest artists of the stage to find a standard and comparison of excellence for the work of Mr. Beban. He impersonates a poor Italian laborer, Pietro Massena. Frugal, honest, tender-hearted, full of that child-like simplicity which has always been a charming characteristic of the southern Italian, Pietro is quite content with his lot in the new world, lowly and humble as it must needs be. Fate has dealt him a hard blow in robbing him of his wife who died soon after she gave birth to the little girl named Rosina. In this little girl center all the affections and indeed the whole life of Pietro. The producer has given us wonderful glimpses of this tenderness and the full relation between the father and the child is portrayed with such consummate sympathy and understanding, that the audience was more than once hushed into profound silence only broken by suppressed sighs and sobs.

The time is shortly before Christmas and little Rosina has compiled a list of things she wishes her father to get for her. The list is a long one and it fills Pietro with comic despair. The child, impersonated with extraordinary cleverness by Blanche Schwed, bothers Pietro with questions about Santa Claus and his clumsy efforts to satisfy the curiosity of the child bring mingled tears and laughter. The audience soon begins to feel as if it were a part of the performance rather than a gathering of spectators. The magnetism which a good play invariably exerts upon the audience is in full operation, and the time begins to fly. The climax is wrought with great art and it is, what in every good drama it ought to be, the strongest and the most stirring scene in the play.

The motion picture prepares us by something like nine reels (which, by the way, seemed very short to me), for the climax, while the climax itself transfers the play to the speaking stage. The change from the screen to stage was instantaneous and had been done with such care and success that it caused the audience to break into a great burst of applause. Pietro's little child, Rosina, has been killed by an automobile while playing on the street and the poor father, sublime in his grief, goes to a flower shop to buy a rose to put on the coffin of his child. As he enters the flower shop he is unjustly suspected of being the kidnapper of a child whose father had run down his own Rosina with an automobile. The real blackmailers appointed the flower shop as the place where the ransom for the child was to be paid. A police inspector is present to trap the blackhander and arrest him as soon as he takes the money. Pietro, entirely innocent of any wrongdoing, plaintively makes known his wish to buy a rose for his dead "bambino." He is rudely repulsed by the police inspector who tells him that roses are "ten dollars apiece." With stammered apologies poor Pietro is about to withdraw, when it becomes plain to him from hints dropped by the inspector and the mother of the kidnaped child that he is suspected of being a kidnapper and blackhander. His avowal of innocence is touching in the extreme.

Then follows what is the strongest thing in the entire play: the description by Pietro of his child and the love he bore for her, the tragic death of the child and his simple and lofty resignation. The scene between the police inspector and Pietro when the former tries to drag Pietro to headquarters has in art and realism never been surpassed on any stage at any time. It lasted but a few minutes, but the audience felt that in those few minutes it was privileged to see an exhibition such as rarely is witnessed in any theater. This new style of entertainment, that is, preparing the audience by the motion picture for a final climax which is rendered upon the speaking stage, may and may not become a permanent form of dramatic presentation. However that may be, there can be no doubt that in this particular instance it was an unqualified and most striking success. The presentation, part on screen an daprt on stage, naturally invites a comparison of the two mediums as a means of dramatic expression.

All I can say is, that the screen when in the hands of a master like Thomas H. Ince yields nothing to the stage. In some respects, especially in the swiftness of action, in subtleness of suggestion, in its power to strike the most intimate chords, the screen probably surpasses the stage. On the other hand, the human voice when added to extraordinary histrionic ability like that of George Beban has a charm and an effect upon the audience which is unmistakable and for which the screen can offer no substitute. It is easy to predict a lasting success for this splendid play at the Astor Theater.

The acting of Edward Gillespie (Inspector Lynch), Hayward Ginn (William Griswold), Andrea Lynne (Mrs. Griswold), Thelma Salter (Dorothy Griswold), Jack Davidson (Robbins) is highly creditable. In the change from the silent to the speaking stage it became evident that long training and experience before the camera is not an advantage on returning to the speaking stage.

I am sorry to say that the music was little short of blasphemous, figuratively speaking of course. It was badly chosen, the musical and whistling "effects" were simply atrocious and the audience was annoyed a good deal by the shouted instructions of the leader. Rehearsals on the first night are late.

Ford and Cunard Return from the Desert.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford have returned to Universal City after a week in the desert at Oxnard, Cal. filming the fifth and sixth instalments of "The Broken Coin" serial. (Miss Cunard for three days after her return suffered intensely from sunburn.)

For eighteen hours at a stretch the entire company was without water and during Francis Ford's absence to locate a supply Miss Cunard took entire charge of the company and completed more than 600 feet of negative. Despite the intense heat and the sunburn which caused her untold agony, Miss Cunard was able to pilot her little roadster over fifty miles of desert and chuck holes to Universal City.

On the day of the company's arrival near Oxnard Mr. Ford finished sixteen hundred feet of negative and the following day exceeded this record by twenty feet. Six instalments of the serial have been completed in six weeks, despite the fact that the company was held up by two solid weeks of rain.

The Wild Goose Chase

A Lasky Production of Four Reels Featuring Miss Ina Claire and Theodore Roberts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is nothing extraordinary about this feature. It bears evidences of Lasky quality, to be sure, but as a whole it seems to me to fall below the Lasky standard. Miss Claire is a pretty actress, well fitted for her part and possessed of some ability. Theodore Roberts really has but a minor part, but this accomplished artist somehow dominates every picture in which he appears. In the part of a barnstorming tragedian he is particularly good. The young man who takes the part of the lover (Tom Forman) has much to learn. I really think his appearance in features of the first class is premature. His movements are labored and his whole work is hampered by an obvious admiration of himself. There is in all the range of screendom nothing more intolerable than a self-conscious and self-satisfied adolescent "juvenile."

Scene from "The Wild Goose Chase" (Lasky).

The plot of the story while quite entertaining and full of humorous situations is not strikingly novel and has, if my memory still functions fairly well, been treated on the screen before. The settings are splendid, both exterior and interior; the cast is, with the exception noted, a good one, and some of the characterizations are very clever indeed. When it comes to creating atmosphere and being true to life the Lasky Company is always right near the top. The photography, too, is of the real Lasky standard. There was a most amusing little pup in the play, who won the affections of the audience from the start. He really helps a good deal where help is really needed.

"To-day and To-morrow"

Another of the "Who Pays?" Series That Is Bound to Arouse Thought and Excite Admiration.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

DESTINED to thrill as well as to probe the sleeping conscience, "To-day and To-morrow" will find favor with all classes. It combines the entertaining with the useful, and its moral is so clearly presented that none can mistake its intent.

This particular number of the series has a wealth of genuine atmosphere. The home of the "girl of to-morrow" (Ruth Roland) has a cosiness and a depth of perspective in its sets that completes an illusion of many-roomedness. The small details of action in every day life are there to add realism, and perhaps one of the chief charms of the picture is the spontaneity of Ruth Roland. Her perfect freedom from staginess is refreshing.

The application of the old motto of "never put off 'til tomorrow that which you can do to-day" is unusually forceful as presented in this production, showing how the indulgence of the careless habit can result in painful disaster. For the entertainment of those who love the spectacular the closeups of the fire in the oil fields will be found of great interest. These views of the conflagration which resulted from the influence of the daughter of the superintendent of the oil fields, and her chronic habit of putting off until to-morrow, being brought to bear on the "reliable man," her fiance, have been tactfully arranged in flash-backs, as well as extended exposures. The fight in the mess house brings a thrill with it also. Then there is the defence of the superintendent against the gang of angry men which is also wrought with considerable of the sensational.

It is safe to say that in the drama, "To-day and To-morrow," is to be found the most strikingly useful moral of any of those yet presented in the series. The pictorial development of the story is thoroughly professional, the cast, generally speaking, is good, and the types chosen for the men of the oil fields are worthy of note.

There have been many series in which the thrill and the spectacle have succeeded in making them popular, but it is a fact that none have so successfully combined moralizing with entertainment as the dramas of the "Who Pays?" series of Pathe-Balboa identity.

One MinA Company at Los Angeles Studios.

While the new MinA studios in Los Angeles have been completed to a point where one company has started producing in it, several weeks' time at least will be required before the finishing touches will be applied and before the four producing organizations which it is designed to house will begin their activities.

Work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, but the fact that the studios are unique in construction and the first of the kind ever erected, has naturally made progress somewhat slow.

Besides housing four companies, the MinA studios will be used for making the MinA animal pictures, which will be along lines not attempted heretofore, and in which the Bostock animals, the famous aggregation of performing beasts, will be used.

The one company now at work in the new studios is under the direction of Milton H. Fahrney, and includes among others such well known photoplayers as George Ovey, William Ryno, Jefferson Osborne, Louis Fitzroy, Goldie Colwell and Dolly Larkin. Up to this time they have produced "Life's Mysteries," released June 3 on the General Film Program; "Father Forgot," to be released June 10, and "A Mix Up in Males," which follows on the week later.

Walter Fishter Joins United.

Another "college athlete" has joined the United and is ready to do a stunt or two that will make the motion picture fans sit up and take notice. This time it is Walter Fishter, the especially handsome young actor, who made himself very dear to the hearts of Broadwayites when he played in "Excuse Me," "Brewster's Millions," "The Walls of Jericho," and numerous other popular productions of more than usual success on the boards. His success as an actor for the silent drama, for which he forsook the stage, has been unbounded. His excellent work in the World's Film production of "As Ye Sow" will be remembered especially. Other memorable roles have been played in photodrama in which he has been featured with Lew Dockstader, Alice Brady and Gail Kane.

Mr. Fishter has joined the Lariat Company at Pikes Peak studio at Colorado Springs. He will appear in a series of romantic love and western plays which William V. Mong, scenario editor, is writing especially for him. He will play opposite Reeva Greenwood, the attractive actress of legitimate and screen fame, who has come to the Garden of the God's studio at the same time.

Pathe Buys Picture Rights to Famous Novels.

Pathe has added to its list of popular novels which have been acquired for picturization, the latest being "The Picture of Dorian Gray," by Oscar Wilde; "Nedra," by Geo. Barr McCutcheon, and "Comrade John," by Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster.

All of these books have enjoyed such a wide vogue that the features made from them should attract much attention. Each picture will be presented by a stellar cast, the personnel of which will be announced later.

"Little Miss Brown"

World Film Corporation Adapts Philip Bartholomae's Comedy into a Four-Part Picture, Featuring Vivian Martin.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

STRIPPED of its dialogue and made into a four-part photoplay produced under the direction of James Young, "Little Miss Brown" provides rather slender farcical entertainment, despite the best efforts of Vivian Martin, W. J. Ferguson, Julia Stuart, Ethel Lloyd, Chester Barnett, Craufurd Kent and other members of a quite numerous cast. Although Philip Bartholomae's play is of comparatively recent origin, the basic situation, that of mixed identities and confusion in the allotment of hotel rooms, is by no means new. The comedy characters and the predicaments devised for them will be recognized as old friends.

As in all pictures of the type, much of the humor depends upon fast action and upon horseplay that comes under the head of farce rather than comedy. It should be said to the credit of the director, however, that he made the complexities of the plot clear and that several of the incidental bits of business introduced should be good for laughs. Then there is a spectacular cabaret scene certain to please an audience, especially one in a small city, and when other attractions fail the graceful prettiness of Miss Martin remains.

This time she has the role of an impulsive girl, Betty Brown by name, who seems to be undecided between two suitors. The one who appears most persuasive at the moment suggests an elopement and she promises to meet him at Hartford. Her troubles begin with her arrival at the station—marked Englewood, by the way—and continue throughout the following night, for the hotel clerk sends a man to her apartment, believing him to be her husband. When the mix-up has been straightened out, Betty decides that she prefers the other suitor anyway.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A GOLDEN RAINBOW" (American).

With intense interest maintained in every one of its picturesque scenes, no exaggerated effort to secure undue sensationalism, and with a touching vein of love and pathos, "A Golden Rainbow," produced at the American Studios, is a charming picture drama of the west when gold was king. The story revolves around the owner of an assaying and refining plant and his beautiful daughter. The climax is very prettily brought about; through the introduction of a fairy story a pot of gold is found at the foot of the rainbow by "Prince Charming," which leads Mollie's small brother to discover the hidden loot of his father's dishonest employee at the foot of the multicolored rays caused by the spray from a water-fall. The strong and pleasing contrast between the two employees of the assayer, both suitors for his daughter's hand, also furnishes one of the most effective parts of the story.

As Eric Hughes, chief clerk and amateur naturalist, Harry Von Meter rises to his responsibilities, and gives a clever portrayal of a pleasing character. Vivian Rich, in the lovable personality of Mollie, the assayer's daughter, and Jack Richardson as Harry Rice, the dishonest assistant clerk, have been cast in parts suitable to their histrionic ability and their acting is especially forceful and conspicuous. Other members of this "Flying A" company of talented artists are satisfactory in the lesser parts, while the easily connected manner in which the strong situations occur, coupled with the beautiful out-door settings, make this picture an exceptionally likable production in every respect. The trick methods used to reproduce the rainbow on the screen and the strong high-lights and shadows throughout the entire film, are striking examples of advanced photography.

FIRST OCEAN-TO-OCEAN TRIP.

The Panama Canal has been photographed before by the motion picture man, but not completely. This is the first ocean to ocean trip a cameraman has been able to make on shipboard. Aside from the almost universal interest in the greatest engineering feat of modern times, there is a keen desire on the part of every one to see where the millions of dollars of the people's money went. It does not tax the imagination greatly to figure it out when one sees the great Culebra Cut.

There is only one way to see it better than by looking at this Paramount travel picture; that is, an actual trip on a steamer. The sides of this cut are so high and steep that they are constantly slipping and sliding, and huge dipper dredges or steam shovels are constantly at work keeping this portion of the canal navigable.

It might have been well, perhaps, to start in with the old City of Panama and show the ruins of the city destroyed by Sir Henry Morgan and his crew of pirates in 1671. These ruins, while remarkably picturesque in parts, are after all merely ruins and look exactly like those of the old Phelps estate at Tenafly, New Jersey. There would be nothing unusual in such a picture. Besides this much has been done before and done well and, therefore, it is not in the Paramount scheme of things. One could not hope to cover all there is in a country, even as small as the Canal Zone, in one reel. Hence, we have confined our efforts to the "Big Ditch."

BELMORE TO DIRECT PAGEANT.

Lionel Belmore, the Vitagraph director, has been selected to direct the Pageant of Lexington on June 21, 22 and 23, commemorating a century of peace between the United States and England. The celebration will be held in aid of the Red Cross.

Mr. Belmore will have complete charge of the producing of the spectacle. About seven hundred persons will take part in the many scenes, which will show the founding of the town and the progress it made until the beginning of the American revolution. The pageant will take place on the exact spot where the first armed resistance was made by the Americans to the invasion of the British troops.

Many of the intricate scenes that will be produced result directly from suggestions made by J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company.

All of the scenes of the battle of Lexington will be faithfully carried out, the many incidents being portrayed as fully as possible. All of the historical figures that Americans have learned to associate with the founding of the nation will be impersonated, enacting the momentous happenings that resulted in the declaration of Independence of the United States.

AL. J. JENNINGS IN "BEATING BACK."

"Beating Back," the five-part film dramatization of Will Irwin's famous Saturday Evening Post serial, is now being offered to state rights buyers. "Beating Back" is the life story of Al J. Jennings, formerly an Oklahoma bandit and all-round "bad man," but lately candidate for governor of the very state that once had put a $20,000 price on his head.

Jennings plays throughout the five thousand feet in which the story of "Beating Back" is told. His career—as lawyer in the days when Oklahoma was a territory; his subsequent going to the bad when his brother Ed was shot from ambush; his years as train-robber and outlaw; his escape to South America; his return to Oklahoma and a life of banditry; his capture and confinement for life in the Columbus, O., penitentiary; how Senator Mark Hanna became interested in him and secured from President McKinley a commutation of his sentence to five years; Jennings' pardon and restoration to citizenship by President Roosevelt, and his political career in Oklahoma after he had proved his reformation—all this is vividly portrayed in "Beating Back."

The picture was made by the Thanhouser Company, which provided an all-star cast consisting of Morris Foster, Frank Farrington, Albert Froome, Mignon Anderson, Fan Bourke, Madeline Fairbanks, and many others noted on the screen to support the one-time outlaw in the portrayal of his sensational life-story.

There are feats of horsemanship and rifle-shooting throughout the picture. The robbery of the Rock Island train which resulted in Jennings' capture is shown, as well as the famous fight at the Spike S ranch, where Jennings, his brother and two others successfully fought off more than sixty United States marshals and deputies. The film version of "Beating Back" is as sensational as Jennings' own career, itself remarkable in a state where daily existence used to be a great adventure.

"COURAGE AND THE MAN" (Lubin).

In "Courage and the Man," a Lubin three-reel drama, Shannon Fife, has told a powerful and dramatic story of the Canadian woods. A talented, crippled, young physician takes his wife to a cabin in the woods. Not far away, in another cabin, and hiding from civilization, lives a former sweetheart of the wife, who, unknown to either of them, is the murderer of the physician's brother.

again; suspicion is aroused, and in the stirring scenes which follow the former sweetheart attempts to kill the husband and does succeed in killing a woodsman friend of the husband. Terrorized with fright, the former sweetheart attempts to kill himself, but his life is saved by the surgical skill of the physician. The wife is brought to a sudden realization of her folly, and, when the lame physician returns to his cabin, following the tragedy, he finds her asleep in a chair with one of his canes pressed close to her breast.

"THE WHITE TERROR" (Universal)

"The White Terror," a four-reel drama featuring Hobart Henley, Frances Nelson, William J. Welsh and Allen Holubar will be released under the Imp (Universal) brand on June 18. The drama, produced by Stuart Paton, constitutes a timely and forceful attack upon "bunk" patent medicine manufacturers and cure-alls.

The Pure Food and Drugs Act of 1906 did much to curtail the harm done by quacks who make millions from the credulous public, but "The White Terror" is calculated to bring the lesson home to the general public in more vivid form.

In thousands of country villages throughout the country patent medicine manufacturers had built up for themselves a trade previous to 1906 which should have been stopped by drastic methods. "Revivifiers" were sold in prohibition districts which were little more than spiced booze. Babies were drugged with morphine soothing syrups and unnerved women were dosed with cocaine and drugs.

The recent prosecutions of the cocaine drug trust in New York have exposed the alarming prevalence of the evil. "Snowboys," "sniffers" and "dopes" fell in the streets when their supply of the drug was cut off. Others, driven insane by their deprivation, are believed to have committed the "Jack the Ripper" murders on the East Side in which tiny children were slashed beyond recognition. Hundreds gave themselves up to the police, while the wealthier drug users fled to other states where their craving could be satisfied. "The White Terror" treats of the drug evil in all its forms—and attacks the subject with merciless ferocity.

MARY PICKFORD IN "THE DAWN OF A TO-MORROW."

Mary Pickford adds another striking characterization to her notable repertoire of screen successes in the Famous Players [illegible]'s five-part adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's drama of optimism, "The Dawn of a To-morrow," to be released on the Paramount Program June 7.

In this celebrated play, which gladdened the hearts of so many when created on the stage with Eleanor Robson, and the screen version of which will cheer as many thousands more, Mary Pickford portrays the weird and wonderful character of Glad, the beautiful and ragged girl of the London slums, whose unfaltering faith and heroic courage even starvation and deadly peril are unable to quench. The delicacy of Miss Pickford's portrayal and the forceful symbolism woven about the drama will undoubtedly make an unforgetable impression on the spectator.

How the ignorant little slum-girl, by her beautiful faith in the mysterious power she but vaguely comprehends, is enabled to save her lover's life from the gallows, provides her benefactor with a new hope and meaning of life, and awakens his reprobate nephew to a better manhood, are vividly related in this sublime drama of human suffering and sacrifice, that brought to many despairing souls a new inspiration to bear the trials of to-day in the expectancy of to-morrow's dawn.

The scenes in the mission of the slums, in which Glad first becomes acquainted with God, are delineated in the inimitable manner that is Miss Pickford's own, and her acceptance of the belief in the Supreme is typically tender and sweet in its simple forcefulness.

St. Louis Jeweler Becomes Screen Maker

F. W. Drosten Goes on Board of Directors of Minusa Cine Products Company.

The lure of the motion picture field and its co-industries has attracted another nationally prominent and successful business man to its ranks. Fred W. Drosten, for forty years the leading jeweler of St. Louis, president of the F. W. Drosten Jewelry Co., director of the Franklin Bank, is the most recent of those shrewd investors who see the profit of the movies.

Mr. Drosten has just purchased a large block of stock of the Minusa Cine Products Co., makers of the famous Minusa Gold Fibre Screen and has become a member of the board of directors. The business of the Minusa Company has increased so rapidly that expansion was necessary and its force of employees has twice doubled during the last three months.

The company's new director, Mr. Drosten, achieved a very enviable distinction among diamond merchants and importers during the World's Fair at St. Louis by purchasing the famous World's Fair collection of diamonds. This collection consists of a perfect stone of every known color from a pure white to a dark coffee color, including pink, green and yellow, being twenty-one in all. In purchasing this collection Mr. Drosten outbid the entire world of collectors and importers, and now has the collection on exhibition at his store in St. Louis.

NOVEL PUBLICITY IDEA.

The Old Mill theater, Dallas, Tex., has created a reputation for itself for putting out novel advertising and publicity matter to draw the crowds. The latest publicity idea is a mechanical device in front of the theater, used in connection with the presentation of the Bosworth, Inc., production, "Betty In Search of a Thrill," which has attracted considerable attention. It is in the form of a globe of the world, revolving, with a tiny automobile at the summit. Inside the car is a little doll and below is a card reading, "Betty In Search of a Thrill." The idea for this novelty was conceived by Ben Lewis, the house manager. E. H. Hulsey is general manager of the Old Mill and Herschel Stuart is manager of the publicity department.

"THE UNSPARING SWORD" (Lubin).

In the tenth episode of the Lubin serial, "Road O' Strife," in which Crane Wilbur, and Mary Charleson are featured, Alene's adventures take a sensational and very dramatic turn. Alene is indicted for the murder of the wealthy Gilbert Jerome. Realizing the terrible array of evidence that will be brought against her, Robert Dane sells for a thousand dollars his chemical formula, which is worth a fortune, and with the money he engages a noted criminal lawyer to defend her.

At the trial the state is able to forge a strong chain of circumstantial evidence, in which even Dane's testimony is a link. It is proved that the poison which killed Jerome was contained in a silver cup handed him by Alene. The jury brings in a verdict of guilty and in an agony of horror Dane hears the girl, who he now realizes is more precious to him than life and all things that life may hold, condemned to be hanged by the neck until she is dead.

"HIS FATHER'S RIFLE" (Selig).

"His Father's Rifle," is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, produced by Edw. J. Le Saint, from the scenario written by Joseph F. Poland. Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver, Wm. Howard and others all contribute in making this Selig production unusually realistic. Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animals perform important parts in three reels of film, which present an engrossing plot, beautiful scenic backgrounds and talented acting.

An empty rifle is the medium selected by Fate to cause death, a mistaken idea of vengeance and finally to affect reconciliation and love.

Kirke Warren, who paints jungle beasts in their native state, has as his dearest possession, his father's rifle, with the initials K. W. on the stock. Higgens, Kirke's servant, given a morning of relaxation by his master, steals the rifle, goes on a hunting trip into the jungle, and by mistake shoots and kills James Birch. In terror he flees from the dead body, leaving the rifle. Elsa Birch, when this rifle is given her, vows to avenge her beloved husband's death, and she treasures the weapon as a medium for her vengeance. In the years that pass Kirke Warren and Elsa Birch meet and love each other. Warren is entertained at Elsa's home. He discovers the rifle, recognizes it and Elsa believes that he, through this recognition, is the man who killed her husband. How Kirke Warren saved Elsa Birch from savages and how final understanding came, is graphically portrayed in this Selig Diamond Special, which is released Thursday, June 17.

"Big Four" Publishes House Organ

Will Issue a Weekly Paper for the Instruction of Its Selling Force.

BEGINNING this week, the V-L-S-E will publish a weekly paper devoted to the best interests of its employees. This publication will be known as the Big Four Family, and it is distinctly different from the house organs of other film companies, in that it is not intended for distribution to exhibitors or the public.

Its reading columns will be made up entirely of news on the progress of the V-L-S-E productions in all parts of the nation.

It will also contain selling talks for the guidance of its branch managers and its representatives in the field, that will be of invaluable help in carrying out the plans of the company by instructing the selling forces how best to carry out this intention.

C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager of the company, says, "In order that the entire sales force may work in harmony along definite lines, laid out for the mutual benefit of the exhibitors and the V-L-S-E, the Big Four Family has been brought into existence.

"Through its columns we will be able to address our entire sales force and advise them on all matters pertaining to our productions and affiliations, and keep them supplied with news, personal to the company, that is authentic and first hand.

"Our house organ will also be a salesman's forum in which every man in our organization may give prominence to any ideas and suggestions of value. In this way, the entire organization will profit by the experiences of the individual. I believe that with everybody fully aware of all we are doing, the efficiency of our representatives will be greatly increased, and the best way to keep them advised of all happenings is through the columns of a properly conducted house organ."

The new publication starts off with a force large enough to do credit to any general magazine. Walter W. Irwin is general manager, C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager, C. J. Giegerich, editor, and the ten branch managers are associate editors. In addition to this, every employee of the V-L-S-E is an honorary member of the reportorial staff.

"THE MATE OF THE PRIMEVAL."

Ben Cohn, of the Universal West Coast scenario department, has written an unusually strong two-reel story for the Jack Clark-Gene Gauntier company, which promises to create much favorable comment upon its release. "The Mate of the Primeval" is the title of the story and the company already has started to work on it. Miss Gauntier and Mr. Clark will appear in the leading roles supported by some of the best of the Universal's stock players.

"THE LITTLE DECEIVER" (Essanay).

This is a cheery photoplay with the same delicate charm as found in Dickens' Christmas Carol. It is the story of an old man, who being deceived by his brother and disappointed in love in his youth, grows into a crabbed old bachelor. When the child of the woman he loved is left alone in the world, he as the uncle consents to receive it into his home if a boy. The child is a girl, but decides to go and live with her uncle and so dresses in boy's clothes. The uncle at first hates the "boy" because "he" has girlish manners. But the "boy" gradually wins the crusty old man over, and finally when it is discovered that the "boy" is a girl he forgets his prejudices and tells her his story. The uncle's completely changed from a sour, disappointed man to a sweet-tempered happy one with an entirely different view of the world and its pleasures. Edna Mayo is as charming a little deceiver as ever deceived an old man for his own good. Richard C. Travers is the chum and later the sweetheart of the little deceiver.

TUNKHANNOCK BRIDGE IN FROHMAN SUBJECT.

For "The Builder of Bridges," their latest production, the Frohman Amusement Corporation searched the country to find a piece of colossal bridge engineering construction, which would suggest and reflect massiveness, thought, force and power, the traits of character with which C. Aubrey Smith, the hero builder, had been invested by Alfred Sutro, the skillful playwright. Every bridge that has been built is always heralded by its sponsors as the greatest, longest and strongest ever, but Director Irving not content with hearsay evidence, sought out the engineering journals, and succeeded in locating the biggest viaduct in the world, and most important for his purposes, it was still in the process of construction.

Tunkhannock Bridge, Scranton, Pa.

Located in Scranton, Pa., the Tunkhannock Bridge, stands exactly 300 feet above bed rock, its spans are reinforced concrete, and when completed will cost a little over twelve million dollars.

The picture presents some splendidly realistic scenes, showing the materials being mixed and hauled, the builders at work and the immense steel girders being swung into their places. Then transformed from bridge building, the story, by a cleverly executed comparison, shows a powerful man constructing his life. It is a virile play, and the theme woven around it has heart interest of compelling power. His forces are the love of a woman, the gambling instinct of a boy, the lust for power and the thoughts and associations of a home.

POWER'S MACHINES AT EXPOSITION.

A recent survey of the moving picture field in San Francisco indicates that there are ninety-six theaters at that place where moving pictures are featured, not counting those located at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition or churches where pictures are shown. The projection equipment in these houses is divided as follows. Power's machines (94) ninety-four, and this figure puts it ahead of its competitors. At the Exposition grounds there are fifty-five machines in operation at the present time and of these thirty-three (33) are Power's Cameragraphs. Five other theaters are soon to be opened there and will make a total of about one hundred and fifty theaters in San Francisco where motion pictures are shown.

THE FEUD IN THE PICTURE.

"Old Anse Hatfield," the central figure of this group is a renowned feudist of a generation ago. He fought in the Civil War; and then in the mountains of West Virginia he led the Hatfields in a long and bitter feud against the McCoys.

The better to get reliable data for "The Cub," a World Film photoplay which treats, incidentally of feudistry as it once existed among lawless mountaineers, Maurice Tourneur, who is directing the picture, took his assistant Mr. Morgan with him to the mountains, seventy miles north of Bluefields, West Virginia, and interviewed Old Anse. Here you see Tourneur and Morgan interviewing "Ole Anse" and getting what they wanted to know from him.

Universal Beauties

Winners of the Beauty Contest Meet in New York—Receive Ovation Before Starting on Tour.

THE Universal Beauty Contest has passed. The fifty fairest of the land, according to the tastes of the judges in the respective states, are now on the Universal Special, bound for the Pacific Coast.

For many weeks fifty newspapers in cities near and far have been searching for the lucky girl who would make the trip as the guest of the Universal. Thousands of photographs were viewed by the judges; thousands of columns of newspaper space were alloted to it. In those states where the contest was a matter of popularity the votes ran into the millions. No contest has ever met with such an enthusiastic reception. People understood rightly that it was on the level and that the Universal sought to entertain the girl who really merited it according to the requirements of the contest.

Twenty-one girls, delegates from New York and neighboring towns, Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, West Virginia, North Carolina and Delaware arrived in New York on the morning of Friday June 4th. At headquarters in the President's suite in the Hotel Manhattan, Mrs. Rose Janowitz, dean of the Chaperons met them. Here later came Carl Laemmle and two of his aide-de-camps, Joe Brandt and Nat Rothstein. At 12:30 luncheon was served at which were present members of the local and the trade press.

Automobiles furnished by courtesy of George Stowe of the Chalmers Automobile Company, paraded the girls up and down Broadway, to the music of a brass band.

A visit was made to the Universal offices at 1600 Broadway, where the girls were introduced to the officers of the Big U organization. In the projection room they were shown motion pictures of the opening of Universal City, which is one of the big objective points of this trip.

Another parade then began from the Universal offices to Grand Central Station. Actors and actresses from the Universal studios on Eleventh avenue and at Coytesville joined the office staff in shouting "Happy Journey" at two o'clock when the Universal Special pulled out of the station.

Along the route many train stops will be made to pick up lucky winners, one being due to step aboard at Buffalo, another at Cleveland, and a flock of them at Chicago. There will be sight-seeing-pauses at Chicago, Kansas City, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Las Vegas, Albuquerque, Grand Canyon, Los Angeles, Universal City, San Francisco, Santa Barbara, Monterey, Santa Cruz, San Jose, and on the way back at Salt Lake City, Denver and Chicago.

At Universal City, a board of judges composed of the governors of three Western cities and several Universal City authorities, will choose from among the prize-winners for the girl of girls, she who is best equipped by beauty of form and face and intellectually to be starred in photoplays by the Universal.

The train on which the through trip will be made will consist of 4 Pullmans, a dining car of the most luxurious type, and a double berth, half a section of which will be assigned to each individual. The progress across the continent will be like the triumphal march of an army of irresistible beauty. Literally and figuratively the keys of every city on the itinerary will be given to them. Manufacturers and shop keepers cooperating in homage to the venus-ites will throw profits to the winds and will shower the lucky winners with the fine things beloved by hearts feminine. There will also be wining and dining to an epicurean degree, until the appetites of the girls will be spoiled for plain home fare. .

"PLAYING DEAD" (Vitagraph).

Director Sidney Drew of the Vitagraph Company is busily engaged on the screen production of Richard Harding Davis' story, "Playing Dead," picturized from Mr. Davis' original manuscript by Mrs. Sidney Drew. Special scenes call for rich interiors and Mr. Drew through his family connections succeeded in obtaining permission to record some of the most important action in the home of Ethel Barrymore. The expensive tapestries, priceless ornaments and rich furnishings that make Miss Barrymore's home a veritable Paradise will be seen in all its magnificent splendor, even the dainty boudoir of the popular actress being included in the scenes that show nearly every room in the house.

Another interesting background that will enhance the action in "Playing Dead" are scenes at the Knollwood Country Club, showing the golf links and exterior and interior views of the club house. During the filming of these scenes, Mr. Drew "caught" many of the prominent members of the club, whose presence in the picture will add that atmosphere of wealth so essential to the realism of the story.

"THE RED VIRGIN" (Lubin).

"The Red Virgin," a powerful three-reel drama by Julian Louis Lamothe, has just been completed at the Western Lubin studio at Los Angeles, Cal. The play shows how a wronged woman whose love for mankind has been changed to hatred bends every energy to ruin those who have worked for her downfall. A strong effect in the play is the coronation and abdication of a king with all the attending ceremonies. The cast includes L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, Jay Morley, George Routh, Bob Gray, Helen Eddy, Edyth Sterling and Florine Garland.

EDGAR SELWYN IN "THE ARAB."

Edgar Selwyn, the noted Broadway star, author and manager, will make his first appearance in photodrama under the management of Jesse L. Lasky, in the picturization of his own dramatic success "The Arab," which is to be released through the Paramount Program, June 14th. Mr. Selwyn plays the title role and is supported by an extraordinarily strong company of Lasky players.

"The Arab" may be briefly described as the life story of a young Shiek from the desert and the beautiful daughter of an American missionary.

In addition to Mr. Selwyn who appears as Jamil the Shiek, the cast includes: Gertrude Robinson, Theodore Roberts, Milton Brown, Sydney Deane, Park Jones, Raymond Hatton, Horace B. Carpenter and Billy Elmer.

A REAR PROJECTION SCREEN.

The Day and Night Screens, Inc., have been conducting experiments for some time in an effort to produce a perfect screen for rear projection of daylight pictures. By increasing the dispersion, the difficulty heretofore experienced, of the audience seeing the glare of the arc through the screen, has been eliminated.

While not generally on the market, screens have been installed successfully for the Bioplasticon Company, Inc., at Forest Park, Chicago, and Luna Park, Coney Island, N. Y.

"THE SIX CENT LOAF" (Thanhouser).

In one of the simplest and most fundamentally appealing roles she has had to play this year, Florence La Badie exercises all her undeniable fascination as the little factory girl, Scene from "The Six Cent Loaf" (Thanhouser).

Mary Quinn, in "The Six Cent Loaf," a two-reel Thanhouser release in the Mutual program. She is ably supported in this drama of poverty and courage in the face of misfortune and impending starvation. Leland Benham, seven, and Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser Kidlet, appear as Miss La Badie's brother and sister for whose sakes the difficult struggle is made. Ethel Cooke and Harris Gordon are also in the cast.

FRANK DANIELS ON THE SCREEN.

Frank Daniels, the comic opera star, whose introduction to moving picture audiences will be in the title part of "Crooky Scruggs," the five-part feature which the Vitagraph Company shortly will release, regretted that he had delayed appearing on the screen for so many years.

"When I was in comic opera," said Mr. Daniels recently at the Vitagraph studio, "I had an understudy by the name of Frank Corliss, who used to fill in when my voice failed me or for some other reason I couldn't go on. Everybody told me that Corliss gave a wonderful imitation of me. Well, I've watched him from the front and I remember that I would mumble that old joke of 'one of us is bad' to myself.

"But when I saw my picture run on the screen the other day, I realized just how good he was. I would have sworn that he had played the part and not me. I'm sorry the poor fellow is dead, because I always felt that he had never really been a good understudy, but now I'm sure he was.

"It just goes to show that if we only could 'see ourselves as others see us——' we would all hold different opinions of ourselves."

The production of "Crooky Scruggs" will mark the reuniting of Mr. Daniels and Paul West, who wrote the photoplay. Mr. West made his first bow before the public as the author of a number of lyrics that Mr. Daniels sang in one of his comic operas.

PATHE COLORS AMERICAN DRAMA.

Pathe has made an innovation which will attract much attention and may prove to be a permanent feature of their program. It is a one-reel drama entitled "Man to Man," made by Balboa, which was sent to France to be colored. It has been put down for release the week of June 14. The result of the coloring has been so satisfactory in this instance that it is probable that other Pathe American-made pictures will be similarly treated.

"THE PATHWAY OF THE PAST" (Kay Bee).

Estella Allen, a leading lady comparatively new to the Mutual ranks, Jerome Storm and Jack Nelson do excellent work along the line of character delineation in "The Pathway of the Past," a two-reel drama by Thomas H. Ince and Richard V. Spencer released June 11 in the Mutual program. Thomas Chat-terton is the featured player and he impersonates a manly, straightforward character with fine distinction. The team work among actors Director Ince seems to bring about by the wave of a hand is evident throughout the drama.

"FATHER FORGOT" (MinA).

"Father Forgot," is the title of this one-reel comedy produced by Milton H. Fahrney, to be released by MinA Films on Thursday, June 10, on the program of the General Film Company. It is the second production to come from MinA's new studios in California, where a new producing force is at work.

In this story young George Burns, a jolly good fellow, unmindful of consequences, marries a girl other than the one selected for him by his solicitous pater. When he learns that his father is coming to visit him he is in a quandary for want of an explanation why he saw fit to disobey orders. To escape the parental wrath which he knows is to follow, George switches wives with Jack, who has married the girl chosen by George's father. This arrangement leads to numerous complications, into which are drawn not only the schemers, but their wives and fathers. For a time it seems that the plan will cause a serious outbreak, to prevent which George confesses his disobedience and is forgiven.

The scenario is replete with funny situations, of which Director Fahrney and his players have realized the limit of opportunity. George Ovey plays George and Goldie Colwell appears as his wife. Others in the cast are Louis Fitzroy, Dolly Larkins and William Ryno.

REGULAR BARON IN KALEM FEATURE.

Should this catch the eye of the young lady who danced with that tall, good-looking chap while taking part in Kalem's four-act production, "Maxim's At Midnight," it is likely that she will be filled with chagrin. And with good reason! Just think of dancing with a real nobleman without becoming aware of his identity until long afterwards!

Baron Hans von Ringhofer—that's the name which adorns his crested card. He hails from Bohemia, Austria, and in the three years he has lived in New York has become one of Broadway's best known figures. A regular visitor at Maxim's, he is almost as much of a fixture of that famous dining place as the walls themselves.

When Baron Hans, or Baron Ringhofer (never having been on familiar terms with others than plain "misters," the writer doesn't know which of the two is correct), was informed that Kalem Company was about to produce "Maxim's At Midnight," he forwith declared that the picture would be minus the real Maxim atmosphere unless he appeared in it. It being Kalem's desire to have every detail of the production obsolutely faithful to the original, the baron's request was granted.

"Everything—it is the same as at Maxim's!" Baron Hans exclaimed. "The same girls! the same dances! the same kind of people who visit the place to see what it is like—even the same waiters with the same appetite for tips!"

Later, the baron declared his intention of returning to Austria as soon as the war is over. Although the youngest son, it is extremely probable that the end of the war will see him at the head of his house because all the other sons in his family are at the front. He would be fighting for Austria, too, if there were some way in which he could evade the blockade and land in Holland.

PRISONERS LIKED "BEATING BACK."

The seventeen hundred prisoners in Sing Sing have evidenced their appreciation of "Beating Back" in a letter written by the Mutual Welfare League of the prison, the organization under whose auspices the famous Al Jennings-Will Irwin film was shown last Sunday. The letter is as follows:

"Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing,
"Ossining, May 27, 1915.

"Albert S. LeVino, Esq.,
"New York City,

"Dear Sir: We shipped 'Beating Back' as promised the following day, and I hope it reached you in due time.

"It certainly taught a wonderful moral lesson, and I am sure the 'boys' here will benefit a great deal by your letting us have so wonderful a production. Thanking you for past favors, I am,

"Very truly yours,
"Chairman, Entertainment Committee."

"Beating Back" is the five-part life story of Al J. Jennings, one of the most remarkable characters of our day. Jennings, a one-time prosecuting attorney of Oklahoma, turned bandit, was caught after seven years of outlawry and sent to the Columbus penitentiary for life, was released in five years by President McKinley and pardoned and restored to citizenship by President Roosevelt, and recently was candidate for governor of Oklahoma on a reform ticket.

"KENNEDY SQUARE" (Vitagraph).

Baltimore in 1850 furnishes the background for F. Hopkinson Smith's drama of life, "Kennedy Square," that S. Rankin Drew is producing from his first big scenario as a full-fledged director for the Vitagraph Company. "Kennedy Square" will be a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature that will have its initial showing at the Vitagraph theater, New York City.

"STEPPING WESTWARD" (United).

One of the most picturesque photoplays which has been produced recently for the United Program is "Stepping Westward," a civil war drama in two parts, in which Mabel Van Buren, George Larkin and Fred Hearne play the leading roles, which will be released June 14. The scenes are laid in the South when the call for arms was sounded through the land, and the picturesque garments, the poke bonnets and hoop skirts of the women, and the odd costumes of the men lend an air of quaint charm to the picture, which is one of its most striking characteristics. The story, too, is good—that of a girl and her lover who are separated in youth, who when they have come to old age, as they are "stepping westward," meet again and spend the evening time of life in the happiness which had been denied them earlier. This photodrama adds another feather to the cap of Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the well known United scenario editor.

Big Boom in Mina Films.

First Pictures from New Los Angeles Studios a Revelation.

The first of the new series of MinA Films, made in the Los Angeles studios under the direction of Milton H. Fahrney, came through last week and were shown at a special gathering of exchange men in New York. As a result, these well advertised one reel comedies took a decided jump in popularity. If the manner in which the new subjects were received by the exchangemen may be taken as an indication, the MinA Films should go to the front with a rush. When old timers who gaze at the screen day in and day out are moved to laugh out loud and to wax enthusiastic in their praise, there must indeed be merit in the offering. And that is just what happened when the new MinA subjects were shown. One of the audience, a man who selects the films for one of the biggset chain of theaters in the country remarked that the new MinAs were "most refreshing in novelty and wholesome fun."

Since the advent of the long feature film there is a greater demand than ever for the good one reel comedy—but exhibitors have almost despaired of securing consistently funny comedies, outside of one or two highly popular brands of which there are not nearly enough to go round, to satisfy their needs.

IMPROVEMENTS FOR EMPRESS COMPANY.

With the return of Joseph Levering, director of Empress pictures which are a part of the United Program, from a western trip, the Gaumont Company studios at Flushing have been enlarged, an outdoor stage has been built and the work of making first-class photodramas has started with a boom after a four weeks' vacation. The outdoor stage furnished with every modern improvement has been constructed so large that twelve sets can be placed at the same time. The company, composed on Mr. Levering's departure of Marian Swayne and himself, in the leads, and Flavia Arcaro and Fritz Orlamond, as a supporting cast has been enlarged since Mr. Levering's return to include Mrs. Mary Baker, Bessie Keene, Madge Orlamond, and T. Mose Kaupel. Mr. Levering has on hand a splendid list of exceptionally strong sociological and psychological plays, written expressly for him by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the Empress editor, who has left the pulpit to write plays for the United. "In Leash," a powerful society drama which touches a social problem with delicacy and force will be the first Empress production staged since Mr. Levering's return. In it Marian Swayne will be shown in all her ingenuous charm and emotional power, and Mr. Levering will prove again his ability to play a difficult role with convincing realism and direct the making of the photodrama at the same time.

"Jane Eyre"

Charlotte Bronte's Famous Novel to Be Released by Biograph in Three Reels.

Biograph Company announces "Jane Eyre" as the subject of the second three-reel Biograph, to follow "Under Two Flags," already announced. "Jane Eyre" is known to millions of readers as one of the greatest novels in English—perhaps the greatest novel ever written by a woman. "For intensity, independence and individuality," says the Encyclopedia Britannica, "Jane Eyre will command the attention of the world, whatever the future of English fiction."

When the novel was first published in 1847 it created a furore, and to-day it is one of the books hardly ever to be found idle on the shelves of public libraries. The story contains innumerable passages of striking quality, affording unique opportunities for the Biograph producing forces.

On the schedule announced for the three-reel Biographs, to be released every other Wednesday in the regular service, the release date of "Jane Eyre" will be Aug. 4.

MUCH "PUNCH" IN FIGHTING BOB."

To make sure that "Fighting Bob" would be technically right from a military viewpoint, the Rolfe Company saved this production for their star director, because Mr. Noble is an ex-army officer of the U. S. army. In "Fighting Bob," Mr. Noble has done something exceptionally spectacular and gigantic. Scene after scene of a genuine pitched battle and cavalry charges succeed each other with lightning rapidity. Laid in the rugged mountainous region of Central America, Noble takes advantage of every opportunity to portray the fighting from a "birdseye view," a stunt which is always popular.

In this big production, Mr. Noble uses over eight hundred men and two hundred and fifty horses. The whole thing is chock full of boom, gallop, drive, charge, cannon roar, sizzle and war punch. It comes at a most opportune time, with war news in the papers on every side.

ASSOCIATED STUDIOS WORKING OVERTIME.

From the latest reports received in New York by General Manager Arthur Bard from the several Associated studios on the coast, it is evident that the producing units composing the new program are doing all in their power to assure the success of the venture.

At the Navajo studios at Edendale on the outskirts of Los Angeles it is announced that ten subjects are rapidly nearing completion. W. H. Bissell, who is in charge of the operations, expressed himself as being highly pleased with these releases, which will reach the screen through the medium of the Associated Service. The Navajo releases, which are in two reels, while being without exception Western subjects, are on such widely dissimilar lines that the chorge of sameness cannot be made.

The pictures were directed by Chas. K. French and the cast includes Lucille Younge, who will be remembered for her excellent work with Lubin, while William Parsons and Helen French appear in roles for which they are eminently suited.

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA" (Vitagraph).

A tragic note deeper than any written in the manuscript was struck during the filming of "Hearts Ablaze," the Vitagraph three-part Broadway Star Feature, produced under the direction of Lorimer Johnston, in a fall from a horse by Garry McGarry, one of the Vitagraph players, the day the Lusitania went down with his friend, Elbert Hubbard. Mr. McGarry, in the character of an Italian nobleman, riding to hounds, in a scene at the Brokaw estate, was required to enact a fall from his horse and at the third trial, because of the nervousness of his mount, was thrown, dislocating his hip. He underwent an osteopathic operation that was successful and was preparing to remount to continue the scene, when news of the probable loss of Mr. Hubbard reached him. His own hurt sank into insignificance at the news, as, only a few days before he sailed, Mr. Hubbard selected Mr. McGarry as the one to carry "A Message to Garcia" in pictures, that work from the Master's hand that has been printed in twelve different languages and distributed to the soldiers of the armies of more than half the countries of the Globe. Nothing could perpetuate the memory of the Sage of East Aurora more than this message and the Vitagraph Company is negotiating, through Mr. McGarry, with the Hubbard estate for its production, and it is within the bounds of probability he will be seen in "A Message to Garcia" in the very near future.

ART FILM WORKING ON SECOND SUBJECT.

One of the latest film manufacturers to enter the moving picture business is that of the Art Film Corporation, with factory and studio at 25th and Lehigh avenues, Philadelphia, Pa. Edmund H. Page is the general manager. The first release of the new company is a five-part presentation of Clyde Fitch's noted drama of American society life, "The Stubbornness of Geraldine," with Laura Nelson Hall in the lead, backed by a company of well known players, including Vernon Steel, Marie Empress and others. Gaston Mervale directed the picture. The Art Film Corporation is now working on their second release, "New York," by W. J. Hurlburt. The Art Film Sales Co., at 110 West 40th street, will handle all releases of the Art Film Corporation and all their pictures will be sold on state right basis.

INDIAN TEMPLE REPRODUCED AT FORT LEE, N. J.

The World Film studio, Fort Lee, N. J., houses many unique scenes, but one of the most interesting is bound to be the one that is a reproduction of the famous Buddha temple at Benares, India. This scene is being taken for the Frank Crane production of "The Moonstone," in which Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein are starred.

Five hundred supers made up as hindoos are to take part in this wonderful scene and it is sure to create as much favorable comment as the famous pit scenes that were also taken at the World Film studio at Fort Lee for "The Pit," the Wm. A. Brady photoplay. The mechanical department has brought its resources to the limit on this scene and they know that it is sure to be the nearest approach to the real article ever attempted in pictures.

GREAT NORTHERN HAS BETTY NANSEN PICTURE.

Announcement is being made by the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, of the release in the near future of "A Revolutionary Wedding," a four part master production with the royal actress, Betty Nansen, in the leading role.

This is an elaborate picturization of the drama of the same name, successfully presented by the Shuberts at the New Theater of New York under the title "A Son of the People." This photoplay presents Miss Nansen in a photoplay best suited to her histrionic talent. An all-star cast gives her adequate support to create situations which, being self-evolved, she interprets with all the zeal and ardor of her genius.

The "Revolutionary Wedding" is of such exceptional merit and quality that an unusual tréat is in store for the vast number of Miss Nansen's admirers.

George Beranger, who has been with D. W. Griffith, as actor and producer for a number of years, has one of the principal roles in the forthcoming Mutual Masterpiece adapted from Ibsen's "Pillars of Society."

* * *

Swan & Swartz, managers of the Empress, Kearney, Neb., are among the up-to-the-minute live-wires of Nebraska who are constantly before the public with business-getting ideas. One late one was a tag, with a finger ring wired to it, which was sent through the mails for one cent a piece. Vivian Martin in the World Film release "The Wishing Ring," was the picture advertised, and the ring did it to perfection. The Empress was filled.

Director Tod Browning is producing "The Burned Hand," a two reel Majestic release for the Mutual program, at the Hollywood studios. A young college graduate, in order to win the girl he loves, has to overcome her family's objections, and does so after a series of dramatic occurrences. * * *

Casting an actor of the standing of Thomas Jefferson in one and two reel plays, as D. W. Griffith is doing at the Mutual's Hollywood studios, is meeting with very general approval among exhibitors. Mr. Jefferson's latest appearance is in "The Old Clothes Shop," a two reel release in the Mutual program which is intensely dramatic in spots, but relieved by charming touches of light comedy. In the story the efforts of two crooks to get hold of a society girl's tiara are frustrated by the old clothes man. Bessie Buskirk, W. E. Lawrence, Alice Field, Vester Perry and Charles Gorman appear. The production was made under the direction of Giles Warren.

Arrest Follows Contest

Montana Theater's Voting for Most Popular Member of Community, with Automobile as Prize, Brings About Arrest—Sheriff Looking for C. D. Henderson and Ed. Myhra, Who Promoted It—Prize Returned to Rightful Winner.

By Frank H. Madison, Montana Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TROUBLES, noted last week in this column, growing out of a voting contest, with an automobile as capital prize, conducted by the Family theater, at Helena, have been smoothed over. The smoothing did not take place until after the arrest of the man, H. O. Clark, of Great Falls, who bought prize from the winner, upon a charge of grand larceny. A warrant was also issued for Thomas Kirwin, of Great Falls, but Clark said he was merely a passenger in the machine.

The judges in the contest at the Family, in Helena, awarded the car to Miss Birdie McKay, a late entrant into the race. James Doyle, who had spent about $750 for votes, learned the car had been transferred to Clark or Kirwin and caused warrants to be issued.

Clark explained, according to the Helena Independent, that he had induced Miss McKay to enter the contest, which she did, he agreeing to pay her in case she won the car. She, because of her popularity, secured a number of votes. He estimated, he said, that by spending considerable money, he could secure the automobile by combining votes he was able to get with those Miss McKay might secure.

"On the last day of the contest he fired in a big batch of votes, which, combined with those previously registered in his favor and that of Miss McKay, apparently gave the latter the machine, at least in the opinion of the judges. The car, accordingly, was turned over to Miss McKay, and eventually became the property of Clark.

"But as a matter of precaution, Sheriff Duncan and Deputy Hay, likewise made a count of the votes, and it was found that $1,300 had been expended in the contest. Of this amount Doyle had expended more than $700, or over half, which, according to Hay's arithmetic, entitled him to the machine.

"This fact was put up to Clark, also the suggestion that information had been received in the sheriff's office as to the probable whereabouts of Henderson and Myhra, who promoted the contest.

"Of course Clark didn't want any trouble. He despised notoriety, and rather than get into the courts was willing, he said, to sacrifice what money he had put into the contest and sign a bill of sale in favor of Doyle. This was accordingly done, and, again, 'all's well that ends well.'"

The sack-holder is apparent in the Independent's story:

"Sam Gould, who is manager of the Family, doesn't know where he is at. All he is willing to say is that Henderson et al, a month ago, urged him to stage an auto popularity contest, agreeing to net him in cold, catfur cash something like $1,000. He bit, the agreement being that he was to receive so much cash. He got $215 and admitted hundreds of holders of tickets to the show free of charge. His share of money was paid each night, and there was to be a final piece of change handed to him, which failed to materialize, owing to the disappearance of Henderson et al."

Clark's acquaintance with the promoters is mentioned by the Great Falls Leader:

"Mr. Clark stated here, however, that he had considered them fair and square business men."

"Children Not Admitted"

Milwaukee's Citizens' Commission on Motion Pictures Warns Exhibitors Against Using the Above Sign Merely to Stimulate Business—Suggestive Posters or Photographs—Danger of Getting Those Few Extra Dimes by Such Methods.

By Frank H. Madison, Wisconsin Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FOOLING people into believing a film is risque or questionable by use of the sign "Children not admitted," is condemned by the Citizens' Commission on Motion Pictures in Milwaukee. This body has issued a letter of warning to exhibitors against this method of stimulating business.

"The commission wishes to warn exhibitors against making their advertising appeal to morbid curiosity," says the letter. "A sensational scene, taken as a basis for lobby, poster or newspaper advertising, may create an erroneous impression as to the moral tone of the film, due to its lack of proper relationship.

"Public opinion objects to immorality—and the featuring of the suggestive component of films not only endangers the theater's reputation, but tends to create prejudice against pictures.

"The commission will not approve the public exhibition of photograph or poster based on a scene which has been eliminated from the film, or which taken by itself may be improperly suggestive.

"Only by co-operating in the above respects can the commission maintain the liberal stand it has taken in approving films having elements which a certain part of the public may criticise."

There are individuals in the picture business who blindly and fatuously follow a course that will make rigid prerestraint censorship universally demanded. To tantalize any sleeping reformer is a very dangerous form of outdoor amusement for any exhibitor. The reformer's power makes it no laughing matter. Those who work hard for censorship are not all reformers.

The Milwaukee board passed Griffith's filmization of Ibsen's "Ghosts" without a change.

Along the Open Road

Joys and Perplexities Await the Gypsy Showman Who Takes His Tent with Him to Exhibit Motion Pictures in Villages Among Summer Valleys and Mountains —Little Poetry in Wet Weather.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

IN the traveling, portable picture show there are chances of profit and pleasure combined. With a motor truck outfit, tent, seats and all the equipment needed, and trundling along slowly between the green fields and the shadowy woods, it invites the philosophical or the poetic mind with many imagined delights. One can be almost a gypsy and very far from a tramp and have all the pleasures of either while he is making his living. When spring comes in the yard and warns the traveling showman that it is time to be on the road, when the lilac bush by the back door shakes its blossoms in his face, all he has to do is to crank up, give the children a seat beside him and he is off.

Of course, he comes to a village towards evening, has to get a permit and a site; must get his screen up and his canvas spread, must do some sort of advertising, will need to have his machine set up and electricity ready to make light for him and to have his chairs out and all that. A sudden thunder storm may come up and rip his canvas. Worst of all, he has to make both ends meet. But the life through the summer ought to have its attractions and, no doubt, the sale of film to gypsy shows will soon amount to quite a figure.

One such show is noticed in this morning's bunch of clippings. It reports that Hillier & Smith, of Spring Lake, Mich., have equipped a portable moving picture show for playing small towns in Michigan. The motor truck not only serves as a power plant, but conveys the tent, seats and other equipment. A trailer carrier a fireproof operating booth.

MINISTER CONDEMNS THE PROFIT IN SUNDAY SHOWS

Evanston, Ill., Pastor Preaches Against Commercialized Sabbath.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

PETITIONS against Sunday moving picture shows were presented to churchgoers in Evanston for their signature. This was not an official move, said A. B. Dale, secretary of the Ministers' Association, but ministers were acting individually.

Doctor McElveen of the Congregational church, preaching on this subject, said:

"Let us say to the men and boys of Evanston who wish to play baseball or any other outdoor game on Sunday, 'Go ahead, but don't be too boisterous and don't disturb other people.' NEWS LETTER FROM HAWAII.

Special to Moving Picture World from Hawaii News Service.

THE consolidated Amusement Company made the first move for Sunday night picture shows by asking the supervisors for permission to show a biblical picture. The new law just passed by the territorial legislature provides that permission be granted only by ordinance. Mayor Lane, of Honolulu, is being quoted as opposed to Sunday moving pictures, because the drain on the pockets of the poor for such shows was great enough on weekdays without adding Sundays.

Moving picture films packed in a box about the S. S. Kilaula on her way to Honolulu caught fire and caused a blaze that worried people for a short time, says the Hilo Herald.

The twelve-reel feature "Cabiria" was booked by the Consolidated Amusement Company for its several houses in Hawaii. It is the longest subject brought to the islands.

Assistant Secretary A. P. Taylor, of the Promotion Committee at Honolulu, issued a proclamation in behalf of the Panama-Pacific Exposition films shown at the Popular, in Honolulu.

Congressman Miller, of Minnesota, secured 2,000 ft. of film of 1,000 children of various nationalities in native costume at the Kaiulani school, Honolulu. This should be a very interesting film for American audiences.

Uplift League Formed

Suburb of Pittsburgh, Seat of Washington and Jefferson College, Has Formed Big Uplift Committee—Dissatisfied with Work of State and National Censor Boards—Hopes to Persuade Exhibitors to Cut Out Certain Pictures.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

MOVING pictures are to be more thoroughly censored in Washington, Pa. The exhibitors of this city depend upon the Pittsburgh exchanges to furnish them with their pictures and supplies, and the majority of them make daily visits to Pittsburgh, a trip of about 35 miles. From these visitors the following information has been picked up and verified: Washington uplifters, believing that the national and state boards have failed in their task, will seek to eliminate all objectionable features, and for this purpose the Moving Picture Uplift League, with Professor W. J. Kay of Washington and Jefferson College as president, has been formed. A committee of 54 has been named to visit all the motion picture theaters and will submit a report to the organization. The organization hopes to induce local playhouse managers to cut out of their program most of the social and moral problem films. It is also planned to have special days during each week for the children, when pictures of interest and benefit to the rising generations will be shown instead of permitting them to witness productions that are of doubtful influence. The work of the organization has already been started.

"THE ETERNAL CITY" AT THE ALVIN.

"The Eternal City" opened an indefinite engagement Monday, May 24, in the Alvin theater, Pittsburgh's leading dramatic theater. Exhibitors and exchangemen are very much interested in this undertaking as it is the only large theater showing moving picture at 75 cents admission.

E. O. Child has assumed the management of the Pittsburgh branch of the V-L-S-E, Inc., and George Balsdon, who opened this office here, has left to open a branch in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Child is well known in the eastern film circles, having been connected with the General Film company in New York. Everything in the Pittsburgh office is now running very nicely, Mr. Balsdon having completed the details incident to establishing the branch in record time.

KLEINE OFFICE MOVED.

It has been announced by Miles F. Gibbons, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the George Kleine Attractions, that the local office will be moved from the Lyceum building to 123 Fourth avenue. These new quarters are next door to the new quarters of the V-L-S-E, Inc., in the heart of filmdom and are commodius, comfortable and cheery and is better located to handle a rapidly growing business.

ADDS TO WORLD FILM LOCAL FORCES.

S. B. Kramer, the live wire manager of the World Film company's Pittsburgh branch, has added a publicity advertising department. This will be in addition to the one maintained in New York, under the able direction of "Jake" Wilk, and its main purpose is to acquaint all exhibitors with the strong points of each picture and the methods to pursue in turning these points to their advantage. To take care of increased business, Mr. Kramer has been obliged to make other additions to his efficient corps of assistants, and also look for larger office space. The arrangements for the World's removal to larger quarters will be completed upon Lewis J. Selznick's arrival in the city the early part of the week.

E. C. ROCKWELL TO MANAGE METRO OFFICE.

E. C. Rockwell has been placed in charge of the Pittsburgh branch of the Metropolitan Booking Offices at 405 Fourth avenue. In a conversation with Mr. Rockwell he stated that he was well pleased with this territory, the only kick he has coming being his limited supply of subjects. These, however, will be increased soon by a recent purchase of the Stefansson Arctic Exploration pictures, which will be shown in the larger houses. The Metropolitan will handle the products of the Foreign Film Company of Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, which will manufacture exclusively high-grade American subjects and the O. K. Comedy company, producing exclusively educational subjects, the first release being completed and showing the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

KEEPS FILM CLOSE TO ARGUMENT.

One of the most original ideas that has emanated in a long time is that of the screen curtain which Manager E. O. Childs has in the Pittsburgh office of the V-L-S-E, Inc. Mr. Child may be sitting in his chair, expounding on the merits of a certain picture. To make this argument more conclusive he pushes a button and tells an operator in an adjoining room to project the picture on the curtain in his office, which has, of course, been lowered. The exhibitor can merely wheel around in his chair and see the picture. The conception of the idea is accredited to George Balsdon of the V-L-S-E, who opened the office.

FOUR NEW THEATERS.

In a few days the H. E. Kennedy company will request bids on the construction of the Liberty theater of the Nicola Land company in Penn avenue, near Frankstown avenue, Eastend, Pittsburgh, Pa., which is to be the largest motion picture theater in the city. Film Men Meet and Talk

Washington Screen Club Holds "Short Circuit"—Interesting Talks on Coming National Censorship and How to Meet It; Discrimination in Electric Rates; Handling of Paper and Film; Competition, and Sunday Shows—Those Present.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANOTHER of the famous "short circuits" was last week given by the Screen Club of Washington, D. C., at Castelli's, and as a result exhibitors and exchange men alike are brimming over with thoughts of co-operation and good-fellowship. Like the affairs of last year, this one will go down into film history as an event counted upon to reap a harvest of good for all participants. It was not all fun, however, for there was a tone of seriousness to the several talks, particularly those dealing with the subject of censorship, for it was brought right home to all that censorship is the greatest menace that the motion picture film business has ever faced.

National Censorship Coming.

Naturally speeches upon censorship must include suggestions of co-operation and the need for co-operation was evidenced by the various speakers. It was pointed out that in all probability national censorship is a thing of the immediate future, something that will come with the next session of Congress, and in face of the inevitable it is the duty of every exhibitor, every exchange man, every manufacturer and the owners of state rights to place before their representatives in the Federal Congress their ideas as to what would constitute an ideal law, one that will not work a hardship on those interested in the motion picture business and which will adequately fit what the agitators so often referred to as a "crying need."

That it is admitted that there is a possibility of the enactment of this undesirable law must in no wise be taken as an admission upon the part of the film interests that there is need for censorship, yet national censorship would be welcomed if it could include all that its name would imply; the acceptance of the good judgment of the Federal Board by the states and municipalities where there might previously have been separate boards.

This subject was first brought before the assemblage by Oliver J. Allenbaugh, of the Famous Players' Feature Company, who stated that censorship is something which is of mutual interest to the manufacturer, the exchange man, the exhibitor and the patron of the motion picture theaters, and has come up but very recently. It has only been a few years ago when those now connected with the business were in different lines and the motion picture business became as an El Dorado, its possibilities undreamed of. Likened to the days of '49, it was as an undeveloped gold mine, a barren field, its riches awaiting discovery. There came the rush and with it the lack of recognition of the desires or rights of others, but there has come a recognition the film business has more nearly come into its own and the improvement in conditions has been very marked.

Mr. Allenbaugh declared that it would be impossible to do business under censorship of the self-imposed, self-constituted type, created by those who would desire the enactment of tyrannical laws from which our forefathers sought to escape when imposed upon them in their native England, and there was need for fighting such as these. He urged the acceptance of the ordinary police authority, but fight when it comes to the condition that exists in Pennsylvania, New York and in Chicago, where there is self-constituted authority. It is time for the manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor to stand together. Under censorship there will not be a picture that can be shown without the endorsement of many boards; every self-constituted censor will seek to put his mark upon it. Censorship is a vital thing, but it should be by public opinion. If an exhibitor to-day should happen to have a picture on his screen that does not meet with the approval of the public, people will stay away from that theater. If there is a picture on his screen that a majority of the people come to see, that is the picture they want, and in this example there is sufficient censorship. Censorship is that which has been brought forth by the politician who seeks to dip his hand into the bag of gold, or by others who seek popularity in having their name quoted in the daily press as opposing some picture they may have seen on the screen, and to combat it all should rally around the president of the league when the bill is reintroduced.

Rates for Electricity.

James S. Wickham, of the Dixie theater, spoke of the unreasonable charges assessed on motion picture exhibitors by the local electric lighting company, they being discriminated against in having to pay 10 cents per kilowatt hour as against 5 cents charged to cafes. He stated that he had been in communication with a number of manufacturers of small plants suitable for installation in the theaters and had made a purchase for his house. He found difficulty in gaining permission to install the plant, as local regulations require the securing of signatures from all those located within a radius of 90 feet, and one person had refused to place his name upon the application. A further difficulty was experienced in endeavoring to obtain a license for a man to handle the plant, these same District of Columbia regulations requiring the constant attendance of an electrician skilled in the work.

Handling Paper and Films.

Dr. William P. Herbst, of the Circle theater, laid particular stress on the need for co-operation between exhibitors and exchange men with respect to the handling of paper and films. He decried the manner in which each of these were handled, for with proper care one hundred-day films would be as good as those much younger, and there would not be that need for the earlier and more expensive service. He censured careless exhibitors for the way they tore paper off the boards and for often using it as a blotter to take up surplus oil, later to be stuffed into the film case and returned to the exchange fit for no further service. Co-operation should also be had with the operators in the matter of furnishing desired parts to replace those that are worn out, and there should be a getting together on the part of the exhibitors with respect to service that there should not be that bidding against one another for films which so often results in higher prices. Co-operation on the part of exhibitors will also lead to the getting of better admission prices, he declared, for it was his understanding that the downtown houses were ready to ask an increase when those of the residential sections show a desire to go to 10 cents.

J. A. Koerpel, manager of the General Film Company, in a humorous way declared that the matter of co-operation should not be only "General," but "Mutual," "Universal" and indeed "Paramount" and "United," apologizing for his inability to include other similar adjectives.

Mr. Koerpel endeavored to show the fallacy of the belief of the exhibitor who declares he cannot show a film after it has been exhibited in a competitive theater. In the first place it often cuts out many good films from a program, and in the second place they have the wrong idea with respect to advertising. All of the people in a given neighborhood cannot see a film on its first presentation, and good films will bear repeating, as evidenced by the policy of the downtown houses in repeating upon themselves.

Sunday Shows and Competition.

Robert H. Campbell, Jr., of the Olympic theater, told of the ill effect that the enforcement of Sunday closing regulations would have on the local houses and warned those present of probable future activities along this line.

Herbert M. Osborn, manager for Pathe, Inc., expressed greetings on behalf of that firm and wishes for success in the fight for the betterment of the film business and against censorship.

Norman Luchs declared that if the film business ever meets with success in Washington it will be through the elimination of the word "competitor" and the substitution of the words "fellow exhibitor" when applied to those with whom an exhibitor may come in contact.

George Mann, manager of the Paramount Picture Company's office, said that posters were furnished by that concern at actual cost merely to meet the needs of the exhibitors; that the subject of posters had been discussed in various ways in his office and he had come to the belief that the exchange that gives posters with the films is doing an injustice to the up-to-date exhibitor, the up-to-date exhibitor being the man who gets away from the use of posters. He declared that many of the exhibitors were making their houses look like circus side shows.

William H. Irvine, manager for the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, spoke on the need for good music in the theaters, dwelling on its importance in the healthy conduct of the business. Arthur Robb, of the Garden Theater Company, spoke on the desirability of a permanent club and club house for the exhibitors and those connected with the exchanges.

Ben E. Drum, of the World Film Corporation, extended greetings, making a farewell speech prior to leaving the city for the west.

President Crandall asked for a better showing of co-operation with the League and towards the Screen Club. He pointed out the need for a better attendance at the meeting and the making of a stronger organization to face the difficulties that may arise in the future.

George W. Smiley, with the Pathe Company, acted as toastmaster, and was voted a great success. His introductions were decidedly novel and his remarks during the evening were a source of no little merriment.

Those Present.

At the tables were Harry M. Crandall, Joseph P. Morgan, Maurice Davis, Robert H. Campbell, Dr. William P. Herbst, Ira La Motte, Fred Stein, Nat Stein, Miss Hawkins, Harry C. Given, Victor L. Abbey, Leo Garner, John Payette, William J. Quinn, Mr. Lombard, Herbert M. Osborn, George W. Smiley, Sam Flax, William A. Marceron, Arthur Robb, William H. Irvine, Alex G. Irvine, Oliver J. Allenbaugh, Lawrence M. Day, J. Frank Brown, Mr. Schmidt, Earle A. Reese, Mr. Gross, George Mann, J. Payne, Morris Herman, James Wickham, William Wickham, Clyde Wrenn, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Martin, Mr. Frain, Mrs. Sturgis, Mr. and Mrs. Schneider, Norman Luchs, Norman Weiser, J. L. Young, M. Coleman, R. NEW EXPRESS RATES.

How Increase Will Affect Film Men—Oral Argument on June 9.

No opposition was entered by representatives of the shipping and commercial interests at the hearing granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the subject of express rates, regulations and practices, at which the five large express companies presented their plea for an increase in their rates to be brought about by a readjustment of the present rate structure. The carriers contemplate an increase in their terminal charge, one of the bases of the rate structure, from 20 cents to 25 cents, and a reduction in the weight charge from 25 cents to 20 cents. The maximum amount of the increase will be slightly under 5 cents and will be on a one-pound shipment. The terminal charge is a stationary one, but the weight charge varies to the extent of 1 cent per 20 pounds in the reduction. This means that the 100-pound rate will remain unchanged. Taking a case containing four reels weighing 40 pounds, under a rate of $1 per 100 pounds, the charge would now be 52 cents, under the proposed increase in rates it would cost 55 cents, a difference of 3 cents. On a 5-pound package under the same rate the difference would be 5 cents, as the present charge is 24 cents, and under the increase it will be 29 cents.

The shippers feel that if the express companies can satisfy the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission that there is absolute need for this increase that they should have it. The representatives of the companies stated that there will be an enormous deficit in the revenues for the year, and that they cannot possibly do business under existing rates. While the increase is very small on the individual shipment, yet it will give to the companies an additional revenue on first and second class matter amounting to $5,062,634.18 per year. Approximately 62 per cent. of the first class shipments and 11 per cent. of the second class shipments will be affected by the proposed adjustment. An oral argument in the case will take place on June 9.

WALLING THEATER IN DETROIT TO SHOW FILMS.

The Walling theater, Shelby and Lafayette avenues, which for the past two years has been devoted to stock burlesque and musical comedies, has finally become a moving picture theater. The theater has been leased on a percentage basis to L. J. Young, who will handle it for the summer, although if it proves to be a success with pictures that policy will be continued during the coming fall and winter. The prices are 5 and 10 cents and the policy is continuous pictures from noon daily until 11 o'clock at night. The front has been altered slightly and a box office placed in the center which now faces the street. Mr. Young will specialize in sensational pictures.

WOLVERINE OFFICE IN CHARGE OF C. C. RANDOLPH.

C. C. Randolph is the new manager of the Wolverine Feature Film Co., with offices at No. 17 Campau Building, Detroit. The company is now handling Gotham features, its first release being "The Man Who Beat Dan Dolan," with Willie Ritchie in the leading role. Mr. Randolph was formerly in charge of the receiving and shipping department of the Casino Feature Film Co. Associated with Mr. Randolph is Charles E. McCabe, who was also connected with the Casino Co., and the National theater. He is acting as receiving shipping clerk with the Wolverine Company.

Detroit's New Time

Picture Men Dislike the New Eastern Time—Sunsets Are Late So Far West of Washington, by the Clocks, and People After Supper Are Out Looking at Nature—Early Shows Half Filled.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN the past ten days quite a howl has gone up from many of the owners and managers of motion picture theaters in connection with the new eastern standard time adopted by Detroit. Under the new time clocks have been placed an hour ahead, work starts an hour earlier and ends an hour earlier as compared with formerly. The result is that people have an hour of additional daylight after the supper hour. But this is not a good thing for the theaters, because people do not want to attend them while it is still light. Where formerly the theaters would be filled for the first show by 7.30 or 8 o'clock, it is now an hour later, and the result is that the first show has little business, while the second show gets it all. So instead of the theaters getting two good houses during the evening, they now get only one. The proposition is more serious than it looks as far as the moving picture theaters are concerned, and a strong sentiment is prevailing in favor of the old time. Perhaps the condition will right itself after one winter season.

THE NORWOOD OPENS.

Detroit's newest playhouse, the Norwood, at Woodward and the Grand Boulevard, opened for the first time on Thursday evening, May 27. A large crowd was on hand and gave it the stamp of approval. The house manager is H. W. Irons, a Michigander, who has been associated with John H. Kunsky in Detroit, as well as a number of theaters in Michigan and Pennsylvania. More about the Norwood will be said in our next issue.

ABE SIEGEL TO MANAGE FOX LOCAL OFFICE.

Abe Siegel, formerly traveling representative for the Fox Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the Detroit office to succeed Mayer B. Schlesinger, who has returned to New York. Mr. Siegel will make his permanent home in Detroit, and plans to become a benedict within the next few weeks. Yes, she is a New York girl.

NEW 1,800 SEAT HOUSE.

Plans have practically been completed for a new theater, seating 1,800 people, to be located at Grand River avenue and the Grand boulevard. It is to cost $100,000. Theodore L. Smith, secretary of the Maxine Theater Company, is said to be one of the men behind this new enterprise.

NEW OFFICES OF MAXINE THEATER COMPANY.

The Maxine Theater Company held its first annual meeting on May 25 and elected the following officers: A. Arthur Caille, president; Walter J. Owen, vice-president; Theo. L. Smith, secretary, and Walter L. Smith, treasurer. Ed V. McGrath was reappointed manager of the theater and the entire building. Reports showed that the theater had enjoyed most excellent business since it opened, about seven months ago.

GENERAL FILM MOVES TO BETTER QUARTERS.

The General Film Company, Detroit branch, has moved to much larger and better quarters, No. 100 Griswold street, in what is known as the Old Telegraph block, occupying most of the first floor. A. J. Gillingham, manager of this branch, certainly showed fine judgment in the way he mapped out his new quarters. An expert could not have done better. Every department is located just where it will give the very best results in the way of providing quick service for the trade. The location itself is ideal and convenient to all car lines. It faces Griswold street, Congress street on the front and side, and the alley on the rear, so that there is an unusual amount of light from all three directions, on account of the many large windows. Everything that could be desired in the way of film vaults, shipping rooms, receiving, etc., is found in this new branch. Mr. Gillingham has utilized every inch of space to excellent advantage and throughout the entire floor there is no such thing as "waste." The fact that all departments are on one floor, and that this floor is practically right off the street, is itself a big advantage as well as a great convenience to exhibitors.

ARTONE FILM CO. BUYS PLANT.

The Artone Film Co., Detroit, has purchased the entire plant of the All Red Feature Film Company, at Windsor, Ont. (across the river from Detroit), and will use it for a Canadian office handling Canadian trade only from there. A Detroit studio has been secured at 307 John street which will be used for the summer months by the Artone Company. Negotiations are now pending for a winter studio to be located in California, where the company will have a crew working from October until March. In this connection it might be said that a company of sixteen people is now working at the Detroit studio making moving picture songs of such well known hits as "5:15," "Dublin Bay," "Little Dream Girl," "Combined Melodies," "Old Erin" and many others. Among the recent additions to the Artone organization have been Leon Loeb as cameraman and Will H. Gregory as director. Mr. Loeb was formerly with the Lubin Company, while Mr. Gregory was connected with the Biograph Company. Aside from making these moving picture songs, the Artone will produce one-reel and five-reel films.

R. A. ADAMS NOW IN CHARGE OF KRITERION BRANCH.

R. A. Adams is manager of the Detroit office of the Detroit Kriterion Film Co, which is under the general management of Ralph Peckham. Mr. Adams came here from Toledo, where he was connected with the Universal Film Co. He has had six years of experience in the business, having been affiliated with all of the well known exchanges in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo and Detroit. He reports an excellent business. He says there is a big call for the reissued Keystone Chaplin comedies which his firm is handling.

DETROIT BRIEFS.

The price paid is said to have been in the neighborhood of $3,000 per foot frontage. The lease of the Park Theater Company has several years yet to run.

The Prohibition Feature Film Company has opened an office in the Free Press building, Detroit, and is represented by Arthur Maitland.

LOUISVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Louisville production, "Billy," done by Carpenter & Johnson from Mrs. Ella Hutchison Ellwanger's little book of the same name, was shown at Macauley's theater in Louisville on Friday and Saturday, May 28 and 29. This was the first of Mrs. Ellwanger's screen successes and has been the talk of the town for several weeks.

Bad weather during the latter part of May held things back considerably as far as the airdomes and park picture shows were concerned. On Sunday, May 22, the Louisville & Jeffersonville Ferry company opened its picture theater at Fern Grove, but, like numerous other theaters conducted at the parks, business was very poor. On the previous Sunday night the Woodland airdome was opened, but rain held the crowds down to a minimum.

Rowland Clerk, manager of the Arista theater at Lebanon, Ky., was recently in Louisville, calling on the film men. He had W. H. Hurt, of the accounting firm of Hurt-Million & Company, of Louisville, install a comprehensive system of bookkeeping, whereby the management of the theater is enabled to tell just what it is doing at any time. A monthly trial balance is taken off under the new system.

The Germantown Amusement Company recently filed articles of incorporation with an authorized capital stock of $1,000, divided into 100 shares of $10 each. The company proposes to operate a motion picture show in a neighborhood occupied by persons of German descent and generally termed "Germantown." The debt limit is placed at $10,000. The incorporators, holding three shares each, are: Leslie Thurman, formerly conencted with the Masonic theater; George G. Buckingham and Peter Campbell. It is understood that the concern will operate an airdome in the old Lutz ball park.

Articles of incorporation of the Raymond Anderson Company, proposing to do a general advertising and moving picture film business, with a capital stock of $5,000, were recently filed. The stock is divided into 500 shares of the par value of $10. The incorporators are Raymond Anderson, 260 shares; J. H. Pfeffer, fifty shares, and John R. McConnell, twenty-five shares.

"The Birth of the American Flag" was the headliner of a film show recently given at the Mary Anderson for the special children's performances starting at 10 o'clock in the morning and again at 11.15 a. m. It was only after a hard fight that the management was enabled to erect the theater last season.

The Kentucky Derby pictures, recently shown at the Star, attracted good crowds and did remarkably well. This theater is now getting a good morning attendance and is generally well filled up by 11 o'clock.

CHILDREN'S SHOWS IN ATLANTA.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Atlanta Woman's Club committee, in charge of the childrens' moving picture exhibition at the Grand theater, gave Saturday the biggest treat that has been given the little ones since the inauguration of the plan of entertainment.

The ladies on the committee spent several hours Thursday inspecting pictures furnished by the local film exchanges and finally choose the Paramount five-reel feature, "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," and several interesting industrial and educational reels for Saturday morning. A special committee from the Womans' Clubs were on hand to see that the children were seated and well taken care of. The theater was crowded to its capacity.

BENEFIT TO SEND VETERANS TO RICHMOND REUNION.

Three moving picture theaters, the Strand, Savoy and Montgomery, were allowed to remain open in Atlanta Sunday. Each will put on a performance for the benefit of the Atlanta Confederate Veterans who wish to attend the reunion at Richmond, Va., June 1, 2 and 3. This is possibly the last reunion of the Confederate veterans, many of whom are old and cannot travel perhaps another year. Atlanta veterans made special effort to attend the performances in order that they may go on the trip to Richmond, and see the battlefields around that city, which they fought over in 1864. The entire proceeds of the Sunday performances at the three theaters go to pay expenses of the veterans.

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THROUGH the columns of the Kansas City Star, that are open to the public, there has been much discussion of scenario writing. Many of the articles tell how easy it is to write the plays, and one man complains that his wife has done nothing but try to write moving picture plays since the letters have been published in the paper. Many more of the articles tell of the pleasant side of the undertaking and reserve the last paragraph to discourage all who contemplate trying it.

THEY QUIT KNOCKING—IT IS SAFER.

The newspapers and the moving picture exchange men are now about through with their knocking of the moving picture censors of Kansas. It seems that they have at last realized that the censors are in Kansas to stay and no amount of knocking is going to make the game any easier on them. There is considerable talk that the next legislature will have bills brought before it to offset this profit-eating law. Many of the firms interested are preparing statistics for introduction at the next meeting of the legislature.

IN KANSAS CITY.

The Twelfth Street theater has made all the arrangements for the summer business according to A. Durrin, manager of the theater. An air cooling system has been installed, and other comforts added for the warm season. Charlie Chaplin has been a large drawing card in Kansas City. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" was shown only once in Kansas City at the Willis Wood theater, and it drew large audiences. Manager Durrin says that the Twelfth Street theater will never go back to the one-day four-reel, 5-cent class. The patronage so far through the summer has been a trifle larger than it was during the cold months.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange at Kansas City, says that the business is picking up nearly 10 per cent. better than it has been for the past month. All the booking agents are again on the road and the letters and contracts that they have been sending in are much better than a month ago.

Kansas City's most up-to-date airdome opened May 16. Connected with the Apollo theater, it is located in the most exclusive residence district. The theater was remodeled throughout for the coming season. "The Black Ring," a Kalem three-reel drama; "The Park Honeymooners," a Vitagraph comedy, and the Hearst-Selig Weekly, was the opening program.

Messrs. Fox and Ford, owners of the Empress, Marble and the Marquis theaters, at Wichita, Kan., were recently in the city and visited C. S. Edwards, Jr., at the Pathe Exchange. The gentlemen are much interested in the release of new feature plays and are anxious to get the first run on them for the State of Kansas. They complimented the traveling force of the company that have called on them from time to time very highly.

John Hardin, manager of the Kansas City branch of the George Kleine Motion Picture Company, says that the business since they re-entered the Kansas City field two weeks ago has been improving rapidly and they are now booking good orders all over the state and in Kansas.

IN MISSOURI.

"The Commanding Officer," a four-reel Paramount release, was boosted highly by the press at Springfield, Mo., while it was being shown at the Jefferson theater there.

The Delphus theater, at Carthage, Mo., is now showing Paramount releases exclusively. The theater patrons at Carthage seem to patronize the feature plays more than the others.

The merchants of Willow Springs, Mo., have organized for the purpose of giving free moving picture shows to their farmer friends each Saturday afternoon. The shows have attracted a great many farmers to town and in turn has proved a profitable investment for the merchants.

So good is the program at the Electric theater that the business men of Boliver, Mo., have booked each Saturday afternoon and are giving free moving picture shows for the farmers that visit the town. For the same show they are charging the citizens of the town 20 cents admission. The show consists of only three reels of pictures. The first reel is a current events series. The second is one of an educational series and the third is scenic and humorous.

IN KANSAS.

The Stardome, the summer playhouse operated by the management of the Cozy theater, began showing its program of Mutuals May 17, at Osawatomie.

Manager Youngberg, of the Majestic, Osawatomie, Kan., who is noted for his prompt showing of pictures exploited in the larger cities, began the middle of May the operation of his airdome.

Since the publishing of the book called Pollyanna, "The Glad Game," the theme of the story has become so significant that a Kansas City, Kan., theater has adopted the name. The theater is an airdome at Tenth and Minnesota avenues. It has been entirely remodeled and repainted. The airdome opened for the summer season May 15 and was one of the first in this territory to open.

Merchants of Seneca, Kan., have leased the local moving picture theaters and on Saturday afternoon issue free tickets to all their farmer friends. The show has been crowded at every performance so far and the merchants announce their intention of giving these shows every Saturday afternoon, showing some picture that will interest a tiller of the soil by educating him in his vocation rather than showing a picture for the amusement to be derived from it.

Ceremonious Opening

Nashville's Fourth Avenue Airdome Opens with Automobile Parade—Mayor of City and Other Officials Present—Drew Crowds Towards Open Gate—Is Officially Endorsed by Trades and Labor Council as Union Theater.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Nashville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE opening of the Fourth Avenue airdome, at Nashville, Tenn., was a rather pretentious affair and attracted a great deal of attention. A large automobile parade headed by Mayor Howse and other city officials threw a good deal of interest in the direction of the new place of amusement. Numerous members of the trades and labor unions also took part in the parade as the new theater is the only Union vaudeville house in the city. Two reels of film made up a part of the bill. The project was endorsed officially by the Trades' and Labor Council of Nashville at their last meeting. All employes of the theater, stage hands, moving picture operators, etc., will be union men. James W. Kean is general manager of the theater and Jack O'Neal is house manager. Amateur nights have been arranged to fall on Friday and will attract considerable attention. Smoking will be allowed on the last three rows of seats. The entrance is set back fifty feet from the street, and this space has been turned into a garden, which is very attractive.

W. C. T. U. WANTS CLEANER SHOWS IN NASHVILLE.

A committee of two ladies from the Nashville W. C. T. U. recently held a conference with members of the city board of censorship at the commission room in the city hall. The censors had been called together by special request of the committee to discuss ways and means for a more thorough supervision of the films now being displayed in the moving picture theaters of Nashville. The women declared that sentiment is growing against certain types of pictures being displayed and it is felt that the moving picture houses in some instances are going too far in the sort of pictures which they are showing. The censors declared that the only way in which they could exercise a proper control over the films displayed was through the suggestions and information afforded them by people who were interested in having only the highest type of pictures displayed in Nashville.

PASTORS WANT NO SABBATH PICTURES, EVEN FOR CHARITY.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., the Chattanooga Pastors' Association on May 17 adopted a resolution aimed against Sunday motion picture shows. The resolutions were as follows:

Be it resolved that we, the members of the Pastors' Association of the city of Chattanooga, while recognizing the evidently pure intention of those who have sought to aid some of the very worthy institutions of the city by means of the proceeds from Sunday performances of motion picture plays, ask the cooperation of all civic organizations, women's clubs and philanthropic industrial classes for a one day's rest in seven.

Be it further resolved that we view with apprehension those efforts which would tend to convert the first day of the week into a period of pleasure rather than a day for rest, recreation and worship and that we avoid, so far as possible, the requirement of unnecessary toil that day. (Signed) I. D. Steel, president; D. W. Crawford, secretary.

As for "recreation," there are pictures and pictures, and one can hardly expect the pastors to realize the human value of pictures on Sunday to many whom the pastors can not reach.

New officers were elected at the meeting to serve during the coming year. The new president is the Rev. Leonard Swisher and the Rev. Geo. O. Bachman is secretary-treasurer.

PICTURE MAN HAS AUTO ACCIDENT.

TENNESSEE NOTES.

At Clarksville, Tenn., Elliott & Waddell, contractors, are busy on the erection of the Lillian theater, burned several months ago. At Memphis, Tenn., the Majestic Amusement company is now operating three theaters under the tile of the Majestic theaters. They are known as New Majestic No. 1, Old Majestic No. 1 and Majestic No. 2. The company is also operating Empire theater No. 2, but is not advertising any shows at Empire No. 1 just now. New Majestic No. 1 has been showing such plays as Olga Petrova in the "Heart of a Painted Woman," "The Clemenceau Case," and "Hypocrites." Old Majestic No. 1 has shown "The Lilly of Poverty Flats," "Strathmore," "The Lure of the Mask," and similar pictures. Moving pictures for children at Nashville, Tenn., are proving rather popular at the Princess. On May 21 "The Heart of a Prince" was shown from 10 o'clock a. m. to 12.30 o'clock p. m., and proved very attractive as well as delighting to the children. A special committee of ladies interested in making the movement a success attend the performances and look after the children.

The management of the new Parthenon of Nashville, recognizing the value of high class music in the moving picture house, has made arrangement whereby a $10,000 pipe organ will be installed in the new theater. Mrs. Stella Pohl, a talented musician of the city, has been engaged to handle the organ, which was recently shipped from the manufacturer, M. P. Moller of Hagerstown, Md.

Through a typographical error, it was recently announced that Annette Kellermann, in "Neptune's Daughter," would be shown at the Strand at Nashville at the admission price of ten cents. The theater raised prices to twenty cents for this production. The paper failed to state the change, but it was corrected later. This picture was first advertised to appear at the Orpheum. The latter theater was closed, however, as it was being repaired by the insurance companies following a recent fire. It is expected that the theater will resume operations at an early date.

Exchanges Modify Rule

San Francisco Film Exchange Board Drops Demand for Prepayment by Exhibitors—Set Saturday of Each Week as Paying Day—Credit Ceases Mondays—Result of Strong Protest by Local League.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco recently advised exhibitors in San Francisco territory that on and after May 24 payment would be exacted in advance for all service, whether for the regular program or features, giving as a reason the heavy losses that have been sustained through the regular credit system. While legitimate exhibitors expressed themselves in favor of measures that would tend to eliminate these losses they did not feel that their privileges should be curtailed because of the actions of irresponsible parties and voiced a vigorous protest.

A committee from the newly reorganized Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, with representatives from the Alameda County League and the state organization, met the film exchange men in conference on May 18 and made such a strong showing that a modification of the rule was secured whereby payment for service is to be made on Saturday of each week, instead of in advance, with Monday of the following week the limit for those of proven credit standing. The exhibitors took the stand that their business should be recognized as a legitimate one, and that the curtailment of credit privileges might be misconstrued by banking interests and others with whom they do business. They declared that if there were exhibitors who did not pay their bills, and who were not responsible, the exchange men were the ones who would first find it out and that the remedy was to refuse service to such parties unless payment in advance was exacted.

The prompt action that was taken on this matter was made possible only by the fact that the exhibitors are well organized and the success with which negotiations were conducted is expected to result in an immediate increase in the membership of both the local and state organizations. Had it not been for the prompt work of the two leagues much friction would doubtless have resulted between exchanges and exhibitors. The latter are anxious to assist in anything that will tend to eliminate unfair competition and deplore the acts of those who have made a practice of fleecing film exchanges, but oppose any action that might tend to impair their credit rating.

EXHIBITORS ANSWER ALL PRESS ATTACKS ON FILMS.

Many attacks on moving picture exhibitions have been made in the daily press of Alameda County and exhibitors there are taking care to see that all are properly answered in order that any step toward local censorship may be nipped in the bud. Quite recently a lengthy article appeared in a Berkeley paper by an outside contributor advising that something be done to secure cleaner entertainment and citing numerous instances when he had been compelled to leave houses on account of repulsive and immoral films. This article was answered the following day by H. L. Beach, president of the State League, showing what exhibitors were doing to secure better pictures and advising readers to patronize only the houses that give wholesome entertainment. In speaking of this matter Mr. Beach says: "The city of Berkeley, being the seat of the State University and other institutions of learning, is being closely watched by other cities, and it would be disastrous if censorship secured a foothold here. Many persons of the leisure class reside here, and they have both the time and inclination to prepare articles for the press. All these articles are being promptly answered when they are detrimental to our interests, and this plan should be followed out everywhere. To allow a misleading statement to go unchallenged is a serious mistake."

FOX FILM CORP. IN NEW HOME.

The William Fox Film Corporation, which has occupied quarters at 107 Golden Gate avenue since entering this field several months ago, has taken a lease on the adjoining store at 111 Golden Gate avenue, formerly occupied by the California Kriterion Exchange. The new home is fitted up in splendid fashion and was regarded as one of the best appointed places of its kind in the city. It is much larger than the quarters vacated and the move is being made for this reason. A fully equipped projection room is installed in the spacious basement, while shelving and office partitions are in place on the main floor. OAKLAND EXHIBITORS STRIVE TO HAVE LICENSE REDUCED.

The moving picture exhibitors of Oakland, Cal., are attempting to secure through their organization a reduction of the yearly license tax and have made arrangements for the introduction of an ordinance in the city council to this effect. While Oakland has a population of less than one-fourth of San Francisco's, the tax on moving picture houses is 50 per cent. higher. The high tax was secured several years ago at the instance of exhibitors who viewed with alarm the rapidly increasing competition and who sought to stifle this by a high license fee. Now that the business is on an established basis it is desired to have the fee reduced and based upon the Federal tax.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.
